Then what did we do? We came back here and, instead of repealing that infamous law, we enacted one that was three times as broad and three times as bad as the one we had under the Republicans. Then the Republicans turned around and got religion and voted that what they had done 3 or 4 years before was all wrong and that what the Democrats were voting for then was all wrong. The Republicans for a little while stood for constitutional government.

If the Democrats should lose next year and the reactionary Republicans should win, then the next year the Republicans will vote a law that will be worse than the one the Democrats voted this year, unhorsing the Congress and depriving it of all of its legislative powers.

Let Congress legislate. Legislate on the money question; legislate on the farm question; legislate on the labor question; but, Mr. President, legislate mainly—mainly, I say—upon whether or not we are going to allow one man to have a billion dollars and another man to starve to death. Legislate mainly on whether or not we shall limit the size of fortunes in the United States so that none shall be too rich, thereby imposing poverty upon the masses. That is the main thing about which we must legislate—the redistribution of wealth. How long will the Congress continue to fail to act on it?

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 117) making appropriations for relief purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 619. An act to amend section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act 1920;

S. 857. An act to authorize the Department of Labor to continue to make special statistical studies upon payment of the cost thereof, and for other purposes;

S. 1068. An act to establish a commission for the settlement of the special claims comprehended within the terms of the convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States concluded April 24, 1934; and

S. 1605. An act authorizing the President to present Distinguished Flying Crosses to Air Marshal Italo Balbo and Gen. Aldo Pellegrini, of the Royal Italian Air Force.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], all detained on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

WORK-RELIEF PROGRAM—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I present the conference report on House Joint Resolution 117, and move that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 117) making appropriations for relief purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10, 11, 12, 16, 20, 25, and 28.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 4, 6, 8, 9, 17, 21, 22, and 24, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

": Provided, That except as to such part of the appropriation made herein as the President may deem necessary for continuing relief as authorized under the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, as amended, or for restoring to the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works any sums which after December 28, 1934, were, by order of the President impounded or transferred to the Federal Emergency Relief Administration from appropriations heretofore made available to such Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works (which restoration is hereby authorized), this appropriation shall be available for the following classes of projects, and the amounts to be used for each class shall not, except as hereinafter provided, exceed the respective amounts stated, namely: (a) Highways, roads, streets, and grade-crossing elimination, $800,000,000; (b) rural rehabilitation and relief in stricken agricultural areas, and water conservation, transmountain water diversion and irrigation and reclamation, $500,000,000; (c) rural electrification, $100,000,000; (d) housing, $450,000,000; (e) assistance for educational, professional and clerical persons, $300,000,000; (f) Civilian Conservation Corps, $600,000,000; (g) loans or grants, or both, for projects of States, Territories, possessions, including subdivisions and agencies thereof, municipalities, and the District of Columbia, and self-liquidating projects of public bodies thereof, where, in the determination of the President, not less than 25 percent of the loan or the grant, or the aggregate thereof, is to be expended for work under each particular project, $900,000,000; (h) sanitation, prevention of soil erosion, prevention of stream pollution, sea coast erosion, reforestation, forestation, flood control, rivers and harbors and miscellaneous projects, $350,000,000: Provided further, That not to exceed 20 percent of the amount herein appropriated may be used by the President to increase any one or more of the foregoing limitations if he finds it necessary to do so in order to effectuate the purpose of this joint resolution: Provided further, That no part of the appropriation made by this joint resolution shall be expended for munitions, warships, or military or naval matériel; but this proviso shall not be construed to prevent the use of such appropriation for new buildings, reconstruction of buildings and other improvements in military or naval reservations, posts, forts, camps, cemeteries, or fortified areas, or for projects for nonmilitary or nonnaval purposes in such places."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by the said amendment insert the following:

"Except as hereinafter provided, all sums allocated from the appropriation made herein for the construction of public highways and other related projects (except within or adjacent to national forests, national parks, national parkways, or other Federal reservations) shall be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture in the manner provided by section 204 (b) of the National Industrial Recovery Act for expenditure by the State highway departments under the provisions of the Federal Highway Act of November 9, 1921, as amended and supplemented, and subject to the provisions of section 1 of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 993): Provided, That any amounts allocated from the appropriation made herein for the elimination of existing hazards to life at railroad grade crossings, including the separation or protection of grades at crossings, the reconstruction of existing railroad grade-crossing structures, and the relocation of highways to eliminate grade crossings, shall be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture to the several States (including the Territory of Hawaii and the District of Columbia), one-half on population as shown by the latest decennial census, one-fourth on the mileage of the Federal-aid highway system as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, and one-fourth on the railroad mileage as determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission, to be expended by the State highway departments under the provisions of the Federal Highway Act of November 9, 1921, as amended and supplemented, and subject to the provisions of section 1 of such act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 993); but no part of the funds apportioned to any State or Territory under this joint resolution for public highways and grade crossings need be matched by the State or Territory: And provided further, That the President may also allot funds made available by this joint resolution for the construction, repair, and improvement of public highways in Alaska, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, and money allocated under this joint resolution to relief agencies may be expended by such agencies for the construction and improvement of roads and streets: Provided, however, That the expenditure of funds from the appropriation made herein for the construction of public highways and other related projects shall be subject to such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe for carrying out this paragraph and preference in the employment of labor shall be given (except in executive, administrative, supervisory, and highly skilled positions) to persons receiving relief, where they are qualified, and the President is hereby authorized to predetermine for each State the hours of work and the rates of wages to be paid to skilled, intermediate, and unskilled labor engaged in such construction therein: Provided further, That rivers and harbors projects, reclamation projects (except the drilling of wells, development of springs and subsurface waters), and public-buildings projects undertaken pursuant to the provisions of this joint resolution shall be carried out under the direction of the respective permanent Government departments or agencies now having jurisdiction of similar projects."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the last word in the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "joint resolution"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Any administrator or other officer, or the members of any central board, or other agency, named to have general supervision at the seat of government over the program and work contemplated under the appropriation made in section 1 of this joint resolution and receiving a salary of $5,000 or more per annum from such appropriation, and any State or regional administrator receiving a salary of $5,000 or more per annum from such appropriation (except persons now serving as such under other law), shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided, That the provisions of section 1761 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to any such appointee and the salary of any person so appointed shall not be increased for a period of 6 months after confirmation."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. In carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution the President is authorized to establish and prescribe the duties and functions of necessary agencies within the Government."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 7. The President shall require to be paid such rates of pay for all persons engaged upon any project financed in whole or in part, through loans or otherwise, by funds appropriated by this joint resolution, as will in the discretion of the President accomplish the purposes of this joint resolution, and not affect adversely or otherwise tend to decrease the going rates of wages paid for work of a similar nature.

"The President may fix different rates of wages for various types of work on any project, which rates need not be uniform throughout the United States: Provided, however, That whenever permanent buildings for the use of any department of the Government of the United States, or the District of Columbia, are to be constructed by funds appropriated by this joint resolution, the provisions of the Act of March 3, 1931 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 40, sec. 276a), shall apply but the rates of wages shall be determined in advance of any bidding thereon."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 14. The authority of the President under the provisions of the act entitled 'An act for the relief of unemployment through the performance of useful public work, and for other purposes', approved March 31, 1933, as amended, is hereby continued to and including March 31, 1937."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "15"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "16"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the conference report is agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think we should have a vote on the conference report. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, if there is to be a roll call, I think the conference report should be explained. There has been no explanation of the report. It has just been laid on the desks of Senators. There is no information before the Senate as to what the report contains—no explanation of any kind.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report is subject to debate.

Mr. COUZENS. I should like to have an explanation of the conference report.

Mr. GLASS. I thought the Chair had announced the conference report adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed by the clerks at the desk that the Senator from Virginia moved to consider the conference report. The Chair thought the Senator from Virginia had moved the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. GLASS. I thought I did move its adoption, and the Chair put the question, and the Chair announced that it was adopted; but I am not technical.

Mr. President, the only alteration in the conference report as I have presented it from the conference report which was printed some days ago and has been on the desk of each Senator is in section 3, in the provision which appropriates $900,000,000—

For loans or grants, or both, for projects of States, Territories, possessions, including subdivisions and agencies thereof, municipalities, and the District of Columbia, and self-liquidating projects of public bodies thereof, where—in the determination of the President, not less than 25 percent of the loan or grant, or the aggregate thereof, is to be expended for work under each particular project.

The deliberations of the conferees would furnish an interesting story; but I do not apprehend that the Senate wishes to be delayed with a statement of what occurred. I am not advised as to what statements may have been made in the other branch of Congress, and I assume that no statement has been made which is not accurate; but in the event that I should hereafter discover that any statement has been made which is inaccurate, I shall avail myself of the first opportunity to stand on the floor of the Senate and state to the Senate exactly what occurred in the conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ADAMS voted "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Did the Senator from Colorado answer?

Mr. ADAMS. I did.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I was on my feet addressing the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator from Oklahoma will be recognized for the purpose of making such statement as he desires.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the chairman of the conference committee on behalf of the Senate.

Two weeks ago this afternoon I occupied some time of the Senate in discussing a proposition which I thought had merit. Two weeks ago tomorrow the proposal was further considered, and in a modified form was accepted by the chairman of the committee, with the understanding that the amendment should be referred to the Treasury Department and, if there should be any reason for its rejection, I would then take no further time and make no objection to the elimination of the amendment.

I now inquire of the chairman of the committee why the silver amendment was eliminated.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Oklahoma that I had not, and have not now, any recollection of the stipulation which he now mentions as to the amendment going to the Treasury Department. I accepted the amendment, and tried to indicate in as civil a way as possible that I accepted it merely in order that it might go to conference. I will say to the Senator that the conferees on the part of the other House objected to the inclusion of the amendment in the report, and the Senate receded.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, may I ask further whether any reason was given for the refusal of the conferees on the part of the House to accept the amendment, and, if so, what the reason was, if that be a proper question?

Mr. GLASS. Oh, I imagine it is an entirely proper question. No reason was given; but I assume that the House conferees and the Senate conferees—I know as to the Senate conferees—knew that the joint resolution would meet with a veto in the event the silver amendment should be embraced in the report; and therefore, in order to get through with the relief measure, and continue relief and project-work relief and increase employment, the matter was quickly determined.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on the day the matter was presented, and after the chairman of the committee had signified his willingness to accept the amendment insofar as he could, an inquiry was propounded from across the aisle to this effect: "If the amendment should go into the joint resolution, what would be the attitude of the conferees upon the amendment?" If I remember correctly, the distinguished chairman of the committee made the statement that he was accepting the amendment for the purpose of taking it to conference, with the accent on the "conference."

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Of course, I knew what that meant. I was under no illusion.

Mr. GLASS. I assumed that the Senator would understand it. I wanted to be entirely courteous to him.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. And the Senator was. Perhaps I should have taken the time then to further discuss the amendment, but the Senate was in jitters on that afternoon. A report was current that a "colossus" from the South was taking wings and flying to the Capital, and the Senator from Virginia apparently was happy to accept my amendment, to the end that the bill might be gotten out of the way before the "colossus" arrived.

Mr. GLASS. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to intervene there——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. I want to say that the "colossus" had nothing whatsoever to do with my action, either as to the Senator's proposed amendment, or as to the bill itself. My whole purpose was to expedite the passage of the bill, and I was not bothered about the "colossus."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The press on the following day purported to quote the distinguished Senator, reciting that he was in a happy mood and made the statement, "Well, I got the bill through before Huey got back to the Capital." [Laughter.]

Mr. GLASS. A member of the press suggested that I had done that, and I laughed and said that I had; and I had. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, knowing of the desire of the Senate to complete the consideration of the bill on that particular afternoon, I did not care to take the time further to urge the consideration of the silver amendment. There was no good reason then for rejecting the amendment. There was no good reason in the conference for the committee's rejection of the amendment, and there is no good reason now, so far as I know, for the amendment being out of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I think I ought to say, in justice to the committee, that there was a member from the House, one of the conferees, Mr. Taylor, who has, I assume, the same interest in the subject the Senate has. He was quite as ardent in his advocacy of the amendment as the Senator could have been. I would not have the Senator believe that the matter was not considered at all, or at least talked about by the conferees.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the amendment is very simple. It contained four distinct proposals. The first one was that the Treasury Department should issue certificates based on the silver which it has acquired and which it may hereafter acquire, based on the monetary value of the silver, rather than upon the bullion value of the silver.

Heretofore, since we have been using silver certificates, these certificates have been based upon the monetary value of the silver and not upon the bullion value, so I could see no good reason why the Treasury should not continue to issue silver certificates on silver based on the monetary value, instead of on the bullion value.

The only purpose in view, so far as I can see, is that by issuing certificates at the bullion value they issue certificates at the rate of about 50 cents an ounce. Under the other plan, the certificates would have been issued at the value of $1.29 an ounce.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Before we go any further with this discussion, may I ask the Chair what "colossus" means?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Louisiana does not know, the Chair cannot enlighten him.

Mr. LONG. I might want to take personal offense at the statement made.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I suggest that a page be commissioned to procure a copy of the dictionary and deliver it to the desk of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. President, I have taken some time upon the Senate floor in past years in discussing the money question, but I will not take much time now. I shall take only such time as I think is necessary to justify the time I took on former occasions in the presentation of my views upon the money question.

A few days ago the New York Times carried a full-page story containing a wonderful likeness of the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and I will say that although the picture is a first-class photograph, it does not do the Senator full justice.

In connection with this photograph I find more than one page which purports to contain an interview given by the distinguished Senator from Virginia. The story is under the following headline:

GLASS talks of the trend of the day.

This interview purports to have been given to Mr. Ray Tucker, and appeared in the New York Times magazine section on March 31, 1935. In the interview the distinguished Senator from Virginia is quoted as follows:

We do not need more currency. We have more now than we ever had before.

I should like to ask the distinguished Senator if that is a correct quotation.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that when talking to this gentleman I was not aware that I was giving an interview. He asked to see me in my apartment at my hotel and I talked to him about a great many things and said a great many things which I would not like to have repeated in public. It was one occasion on which I did not do any "cussing", however.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this alleged quotation brings up the very heart of the whole money question.

Mr. GLASS. Of course, I do not agree with the Senator as to that. In other words, the Senator agrees in the theory, from which I totally dissent, that the amount of currency controls business, and I do not think it does.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will read the quotation again.

Mr. GLASS. I will say this to the Senator—I do not know whether I said it to the gentleman who was talking to me or whether it appears in the article or not—that this country had twice as much gold when it went off the gold standard as it had when it sold its bonds.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will read the quotation again:

We have more now than we ever had before.

The Senator was presumed to be speaking about money, and he made the statement to this reporter, Mr. Ray Tucker. If this is a correct quotation, I cannot agree with the statement made by the distinguished Senator that we have more money now than we have ever had before.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator's definition of money and my definition of money radically differ. We certainly have a vast deal more gold than we have ever had before, and it is coming in every day. Based upon what formerly was a gold reserve—but, as the Senator knows, we now have no reserve—the currency facilities of the country are infinitely greater now than they ever were before in the history of the country.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, it is exactly because of the misinformation and the lack of information that I have sought to take the floor from time to time to give you my views in relation to the money question.

A few days ago the distinguished Senator said that gold had been demonetized. If that is the case, gold today is not money. We might have a billion dollars in gold in commodity value, we might have $10,000,000,000 of gold in commodity value, but gold not being money, we would have no money, even though we had $10,000,000,000 of gold as a commodity. It is true that the Treasury Department does not give a statement showing the amount of gold we have today as money.

I call the attention of the Senate to a statement which I have, a Treasury statement on form 1028. This states that the total amount of money of all kinds we have today is $14,480,000,000. But the Treasury statement includes in that sum eight billion and a half in gold. If we take the gold from the statement and take the money in circulation from the statement, we find there is only $488,000,000 of money left in the Treasury which the people even have a chance to have issued into circulation.

There is less money in circulation now than there has been in the past generation. There is less money in the banks than there was in 1930. In 1930 there was sixty billions of money in the banks of the United States. On June 30, 1934, there was scarcely forty-six billions of money in all the banks of the Nation.

There is less bank money, there is less credit money, there is less actual money today than there has been in the past 10 years, save for one or two exceptions.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Would the Senator give the figures as to what the bank checks amounted to last year, if he has them?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I do not have such figures. The bank-check money was much less last year, because the money was not circulating. On the 30th day of last June the statement shows that the banks altogether had on deposit $46,000,000,000, which sum embraced actual cash and bank-deposit money. That was a decrease of something like $14,000,000,000 from what it was in 1930. So in 4 years' time the Nation and the people have lost $14,000,000,000 of their bank-deposit money. We have lost approximately one-quarter of a billion dollars of real money or currency money in the past year.

Had the article I referred to been in some obscure paper, perhaps I would not have paid any attention to it; but having been published in the New York Times, a paper which the people give credit for telling the truth, and then when the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is quoted in that great paper the public is entitled to give it credence as if it were 100 percent correct.

That statement, Mr. President, is not correct, and I am not willing to let this bill, as to which I made some extended remarks on a former occasion, pass without calling attention to the fallacy of such statement.

The second statement in this interview is as follows:

> I am no believer in the quantitative theory of money.

Mr. President, answering this statement, I now place in the RECORD a few brief quotations from some of the great economists of the world. I call attention first to Sir James Graham, who said:

> The value of money is in the inverse ratio of its quantity, the supply of commodities remaining the same.

I next call attention to a quotation from Torrens, who said:

> If the value of all other commodities in relation to gold rises and falls as their quantities diminish or increase, the value of gold in relation to commodities must rise and fall as its quantity diminished or increased.

I quote from Jevon, who said:

> There is plenty of evidence to prove that an unconvertible paper money, if carefully limited in quantity, can retain its full value.

I quote from Ruffner in his Principles of Economics, wherein he said:

> Doubling the amount of money tends to double prices.

The Senator from Virginia does not agree with that statement.

Mr. GLASS. No; I do not.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator, in effect, says that these economists who have led the world during past centuries are in error; that doubling money has no effect upon the price of commodities.

Mr. President, why is it then that every time the President makes a mere intimation that he might give us some more money prices begin to rebound? Then every time when he comes out with a refutation of that statement prices begin to decline again.

Again says Mr. Ruffner:

> The price level in the country will tend to raise in proportion to the increase in the money supply.

The Senator from Virginia does not believe that theory. He can argue with these distinguished economists. Of course, some of the economists I have read from are now dead and gone, but there are some yet alive with whom he can probably engage in controversy.

Taussig, for example, makes this statement:

> Double the quantity of money and, other things being equal, prices will be twice as high as before and the value of money one-half. Halve the quantity of money and, other things being equal, prices will be one-half what they were before and the value of money double.

Mr. N. A. Nicholson, of Oxford, in his Science of Exchange, says:

> Whatever substance may be used as currency, an excessive quantity of it (more than is required by the wants of the community) necessarily causes a diminution of its purchasing power.

I have been trying to emphasize these statements upon the floor of the Senate, and to have Senators listen and believe them, but, of course, the Senator from Virginia does not believe such economic doctrine.

Long ago I despaired of making a convert out of him. David Hume once said:

> It is the proportion between circulating money and the commodities in the market that establishes prices.

Ricardo made this statement:

> The value of money is not dependent upon its substance, but upon its quantity.

If that statement is correct the Government can print any sort of paper. It can print linen, it can print sole leather, it can stamp pig iron, put it into circulation, and it is money, and the value of that money is not dependent upon gold or silver backing, but rather dependent upon the quantity of the units in circulation.

Mr. GLASS. But that frequently has been done in the history of the world and destroyed every country which did it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I desire to put several other quotations in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

> Ricardo: "Prices rise or fall in proportion to the increase or diminution of money."
> In other words, Ricardo said:
> "The value of money in any country is determined by the amount existing; that commodities would rise or fall in price in proportion to the increase or diminution of money I assume as a fact that is incontrovertible."
> John Locke: "The lessening of the quantity of money makes an equal quantity of it exchange for a greater quantity of any other commodity."
> John Stuart Mills: "That an increase of the quantity of money raises prices and a diminution lowers them is the most elementary proposition in the theory of currency."
> Again said Mills:
> "The value of money is inversely as general prices, falling as they rise and rising as they fall."
> Again he said:
> "The value of money, other things being the same, varies inversely as its quantity; every increase of quantity lowering the value and every dimunition raising it in a ratio exactly equivalent."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves—I am afraid he is going—I desire to call attention to the Democratic platform of 1932. The Democratic platform contains the following:

> We advocate a sound currency, to be preserved at all hazards.

I wish to ask the distinguished Senator if he thinks we have either an adequate or a sound currency at the present time?

Mr. GLASS. Oh, I think we have adequate facilities for issuing all the currency that business transactions would demand. We have no currency to hand out to people on street corners; but we have, I am assured by the Federal Reserve authorities, ample facilities, with what purports to be a gold reserve, to issue in excess of $20,000,000,000 of Federal Reserve notes and credits.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this circulation statement shows that we have more than eight and a half billion dollars of gold. On the orthodox basis of 40 percent gold coverage, we have ample gold to be the basis of more than $20,000,000,000 of currency money.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; I said so.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. But the distinguished Senator holds to the opinion that to issue any considerable additional amount of money would make it unsound.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, I think it would make it unsound to give it away; but I think it would be all right to issue it if business—industrial, agricultural, commercial—would require that amount of money for its transaction.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LONG. As I understand, it would not be what we call printed money for the United States now to issue $20,000,000,000, because we would have a 40-percent gold reserve back of it. Is that not about correct, may I ask?

Mr. GLASS. I do not want to get into a perfectly useless and unnecessary controversy here over a conference report. When the Eccles banking bill shall come up for consideration I hope I shall be prepared to present to the Senate my views about some of these matters.

Momentarily, if the Senator desires a direct answer, I think the so-called "gold reserve" is stolen property, if the Senator wants to know. I do not think the Government of the United States had any more right to take my gold, which I had earned by my thrift and by my intelligence, than to take my house and lot or the cattle in my barns. It had not a bit more right to do that.

Mr. LONG. I am not going to disagree with the Senator on that, but none the less they have got it; and they have eight and one-half billion dollars worth of gold, and according to the Supreme Court of the United States it is stolen, but you cannot go and get it.

Mr. GLASS. Well, that is true; yes.

Mr. CLARK. You go to jail if you try to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes; you go to jail if you try to get your property back. But none the less the Government has eight and one-half billion dollars worth of gold.

Mr. GLASS. Well, what is it worth as a reserve? What is a reserve for except to pay people to whom money is owed?

Mr. LONG. But it is worth two and one-half times its value.

Mr. GLASS. It is not worth a cent, because if you get a dollar of it they put you in jail and fine you for having it.

Mr. LONG. But nevertheless 40-percent gold reserve is——

Mr. GLASS. There is no such thing as a reserve any longer.

Mr. LONG. Well, I cannot get deep enough to argue with the Senator.

Mr. GLASS. Well, I do not want to get any deeper than we have already gotten on a mere conference report here.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this joint resolution proposes to appropriate practically $5,000,000,000, and, save the little side-line discussion which has taken place during the past few days, there has been no discussion in this body or elsewhere, so far as I know, as to where such money is coming from. We know who is going to repay the money when and if it is ever repaid.

Mr. GLASS. I think I have already pointed out where it is coming from, and when it comes there is going to be the biggest howl in this country that you have ever heard! It is coming from the pockets of the taxpayers of the United States.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes; that is the presumption, Mr. President. If the trend which we are now following continues this money will not come from the pockets of the taxpayers of the United States. It will first be manufactured by our banking system and——

Mr. GLASS. Of course it may be repudiated.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Well, that is what I mean.

Mr. GLASS. Some things have been already repudiated.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I hold in my hand a newspaper clipping from the New York Times, of Sunday, March 17, and I find this headline—

Eccles finds it cheaper for United States to borrow than bear the cost of issuing greenbacks.

Governor Eccles made the statement that it is cheaper to borrow money than it is to have the Bureau of Engraving and Printing print the currency. Mr. President, the bonds have to be printed. The argument is that the bonds will not wear out, but the money does wear our; therefore it is cheaper to print bonds and issue the bonds upon which to borrow $5,000,000,000 than it is to print the money and put the money in circulation.

Mr. LONG. The Senator does not believe any such thing as that, does he?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Why, of course not. The Government can print a thousand-dollar bond and send it to a bank or order the bank to take it; the bank takes it and gives the Government credit and the bond is deposited in the bank's safe-deposit box. The bond is not worn out by use, but when the Government prints a bill and puts such a bill in circulation, in time, it wears out and has to be replaced. Of course, it costs something to print money; it costs about 75 cents per thousand dollars, on an average, to print the money which the people have today and which is the only kind of money they have, printing-press money, with here and there a little token money in the form of silver.

Mr. President, let me call the attention of the Senate to the fact that for months now we have heard the charge "inflation, uncontrolled inflation." I make the statement here and now that the Government has come to the point by issuing bonds, by the uncontrolled issuance of bonds, results in the inflation of credit, the uncontrolled inflation of credit. Can we stop borrowing money? Of course, we cannot. Can we stop issuing bonds to secure that credit in order to borrow the money? Of course, we cannot. And here we are proposing to appropriate $5,000,000,000, which, with the conditions confronting us, means inflation of credit and printing-press bonds uncontrolled and uncontrollable, the printing of bonds uncontrolled and uncontrollable, and yet when I propose to authorize the Treasury Department to issue certificates on the silver it now holds as it has been doing for generations past, that is called inflation; my amendment is tabled, and when a simple, modified amendment is pressed before the Senate and goes to conference it is thrown out by the conference committee. Uncontrolled credit inflation today! Uncontrolled issuance of bonds today! The printing press, Mr. President, today is running night and day, three shifts every 24 hours, printing bonds, getting ready to place the bonds in the banks—not to sell the bonds but to place them in the banks. The banks give the Government credit on their books for the amount of the bonds deposited. Whose credit is it that the banks are using to give the Government the right to write its checks? It is the public credit; it is the people's credit. Under this system the Government is using its own credit, the people's credit, based upon all the property of America, and has to pay interest upon this credit for its use. Uncontrolled and uncontrollable credit inflation!

I have tried to call the attention of the Senate to a plan whereby we might stop the issuance of bonds, whereby we might control the expansion of credit until we could get more money in circulation, until we could get the price level up to a point where the people could make some profit. There is no chance of the people ever to balance the Budget by taxes unless they can make some profit. It is costing us now $5,000,000,000 a year for the regular expenses of the Government and we are collecting $3,000,000,000. Spending $5,000,000,000 and collecting $3,000,000,000, we have to borrow this year $2,000,000,000 in order to provide for the regular expenses of the Government; and then we have to borrow $5,000,000,000 more, approximately, in order to pay for the unusual expenses in the form of relief, loans, and public works.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Do I understand correctly—I have not looked at the figures lately—that the ordinary running expenses of the Government are $2,000,000,000 in excess of the Government's income?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They are.

Mr. LONG. And above that we have to pay this extra relief appropriation which we are piling up?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. We do.

Mr. LONG. The issuance of more money, which the Senator from Virginia admits not to be printing-press money, but really money, would tend to lower the debt structure of the country, would it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It would.

Mr. LONG. Whereas issuing bonds tends to raise the debt structure?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. LONG. One of our greatest troubles today is the debt structure, is it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. LONG. We are making that structure worse as a result of issuing bonds by piling up $5,000,000,000 more on top of what we now have?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. What I complain of is that neither branch of Congress, so far as I know, has given a single moment's consideration to the problem of making it possible for the people to pay their taxes.

Mr. LONG. Or their debts.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Their public debts are the result of public spending.

Mr. LONG. But taking all the debts, public and private, did not the Senator last year give us the figures—I have been quoting his figures—that we had around $252,000,000,000 of debts, public and private, in America?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, there is some disagreement as to the figure. A book published 2 years ago by the Twentieth Century Fund and edited by Evans Clark analyzes the public-debt structure and the private-debt structure. Mr. Clark in that book computes the total to be $238,000,000,000, but since that time the public debt has increased so that now, if these figures are correct, the private and public debt structure is in excess of $250,000,000,000.

There is a young economist in New York by the name of James P. Warburg—perhaps some Senators have heard of Mr. Warburg—who wrote a book not long ago called "The Money Muddle", in which he cataloged the debts, public and private, to be in the neighborhood of $281,000,000,000. He included the amount of insurance that the insurance companies owe their policyholders, but he failed to include the amount of notes and debts that the policyholders owe the insurance companies. Then Mr. Warburg cataloged the amount of deposits the banks owe the depositors, but he failed to estimate the notes the depositors owe the banks. But, be it so, he accounts for $281,000,000,000. I have been conservative; I have limited my figure all the time to the sum of $250,000,000,000 as the total massed debts, public and private.

Mr. President, on that sum the interest bill each year is more than $10,000,000,000. Here is the way it affects us: We have today a total tax bill annually of $15,000,000,000; we have, second, a total interest bill of $10,000,000,000.

Mr. LONG. That makes $25,000,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That makes $25,000,000,000 which the people must earn and save and pay in order to liquidate their annual taxes and interest. The net annual income of the people is only $42,000,000,000. Deduct $25,000,000,000 for taxes and interest from $42,000,000,000 and how much money is left? There is left $17,000,000,000 with which to pay all the expenses of all the people of the United States. Then Senators complain and wonder why times are hard, why the depression lingers, and why money is scarce.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator let me ask him a further question?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LONG. If the plan contemplated by the conference report be adopted, it will mean that we will increase that annual interest charge and raise the debt structure and lower the supply of money?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Obviously the Senator is correct. Mr. President, the Constitution enjoins upon the Congress the duty to coin money and to regulate its value. If the Congress has exercised that power and has coined the money, it should see to it that that money is placed in circulation. Whatever their condition may be, that condition is the direct result of either the activity of the Congress or the failure of the Congress to act. What we have is chargeable to this one body, the Congress, made up of the Senate and the House of Representatives. If we have too much money in circulation, the Congress cannot escape responsibility for that condition. If we do not have sufficient money in circulation, the Congress is responsible for that deficiency and that delinquency; and I contend that we do not have sufficient money in circulation.

Mr. President, when I made my remarks on a former occasion I exhibited what I choose to term an imitation gold dollar. I have changed somewhat the form of that gold dollar. If Senators will imagine this piece of cardboard [exhibiting] to be solid gold, originally weighing just 25.8 grains nine-tenths fine, I will call it a gold dollar. When we started to modify the weight of this gold dollar we did it for a reason. The reason was that the gold dollar, containing 25.8 grains of gold nine-tenths fine, had a buying power of a high degree, so high that the people could not get such dollars with which to pay their taxes, their interest, and their debts. Two years ago, when we started to modify our financial laws, this gold dollar had the same weight, the same gold content, but the dollar had excessive buying power. It had a buying power at that time not of a hundred cents but of 167 cents. I have explained on many occasions how we arrived at that explanation, and I ask permission at this time to place in the RECORD at this point in my speech a short paragraph explaining how the yardstick is computed for the measurement of value.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

We have several price indexes in this country. The main one, the wholesale commodity price index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, has 784 articles. These articles are weighted, according to their importance in commerce, and their prices are obtained. Then, for your beginning period, you can take any year, and you can call it 100 for that year, and then, with that same weighting, take the price of another time, and you will see whether there has been a general rise or fall in prices. Individual commodities will, of course, fluctuate at a different rate; but if it shows that there has been a price rise or a price fall, you can state it another way by saying that the purchasing power or the value of the dollar has fallen or risen.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. As a result of the activities of 2 years ago, we proceeded to cheapen the dollar somewhat in terms of gold, but we have not as yet cheapened the dollar to the extent where it is back to 100 cents in buying power. Even today the dollar still contains a certain amount of a hump in excess buying power. The dollar today has a buying power of more than 126 cents, so that, after 2 years of trying to get the value down, the people of the United States, in order to get a dollar to pay their taxes or to pay their interest or to pay their debts, must give up of their goods and services 126 cents in value.

The Congress is responsible for having this large hump of excess value in the dollar. The Congress was responsible for reducing that hump down from 167 cents to some 126 cents. But the Congress is responsible today for the hump still upon the dollar; the hump represented by this symbol of 26 cents of excess buying power in the dollar.

That is nothing more nor less than a subsidy; a subsidy in the buying power of the dollar. It is there because the Congress refuses to remove it. It is a subsidy to everyone who has fixed investments. It is a subsidy to the bondholder. It is a subsidy to the salary receiver. It is a subsidy to the mortgage holder. It is a subsidy to each and all of the Members of this Senate and the House of Representatives.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LONG. During the time my friend the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] was Secretary of the Treasury, as I remember it, this country got pretty nearly on a cash basis due to the fact that the purchasing power of the dollar went down to 75 cents or below that figure.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In 1920 the value of the dollar was 64 cents.

Mr. LONG. As a matter of fact, people in my section of the country were pretty well out of debt at that time and on a cash basis. For the first time the farmers did not have to be carried for a year's supplies. Today our debt structure is far more than it ever was then, is it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. LONG. That is all the more reason why we ought to follow that policy now.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have a purpose in mind and my purpose is to get the hump of excess value off the dollar. That hump represents excess buying power. That hump represents excess value. As long as that hump stays on the dollar, Congress and Congress alone is responsible. Congress is keeping a subsidy in the buying power of the American dollar, and so long as that subsidy is in the dollar every man who owes taxes, every man who owes interest, every man who owes debts, must slave and sweat and produce goods and services to get a dollar with that hump on it in order to liquidate one dollar's worth of indebtedness.

A few days ago the dollar got down as cheap as 125.6 cents. It has been going up for 2 or 3 weeks. Instead of getting cheaper the dollar is getting more valuable. A day or two ago it was worth 126.9 cents. Instead of the dollar getting cheaper and prices getting higher, the dollar is getting higher and prices are going down, as we have seen in the last few days.

The papers stated in the last 24 hours that during March the stocks listed on the stock exchange of New York City lost over $3,000,000,000 of their value. Because the dollar is going up, stocks are going down. In the city of the distinguished senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], on the stock exchange of that great city there are listed great numbers of stocks, and the people own those stocks throughout the length and breadth of the Nation and the world. Because the dollar has been going up in value those stocks have gone down during the month of March, and the people who own those stocks throughout the world have lost more than $3,000,000,000 of value because of the thing about which I have been talking.

Mr. President, on a former occasion I served notice that I should discuss the question of silver, cotton, and the South. At this time I want to place in the RECORD a skeleton of what I intend to say at that time.

We can help the domestic situation in America by the issuance of paper money, but paper currency expansion will not do the cotton South the good that silver expansion will do. It is my contention that if we will use silver for the expansion of our currency we can help the South in two ways. We can make money more plentiful and prices higher. We can use silver more widely and raise the price of silver, and by raising the price of silver we will raise the value or buying power of every silver unit of money throughout the world.

The cotton South produces cotton in competition with other countries which are on a silver standard.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator just said something about which I do not want to take issue with him, but I should like him to explain. If we decrease the value in a gold dollar, according to his argument, we increase the value of commodities. Is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Something more is needed than the act of decreasing of the weight of the gold dollar. We decreased the value of the gold dollar in 1934. That was under the order issued on January 31, 1934, whereby the President reduced the weight of the gold dollar from 25.8 grains of gold nine-tenths fine to $15^5/_{21}$ grains of gold nine-tenths fine.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand, and if we decrease the value of the gold dollar according to the Senator's philosophy we increase the value of the commodity.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Not necessarily. To raise domestic prices we must increase the amount of dollar units in circulation——

Mr. TYDINGS. I mean abroad, in international trade.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. On the other hand, if we increase the price of silver, do we not decrease the value of the products raised in silver countries in international exchange?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think the Senator is correct, but I have not gotten my viewpoint before him. I am proceeding upon the theory that the Congress is legislating for the people of the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand. The Senator just said, as I understood him, that if we increase the value of silver, we would increase the buying power of nations which are on a silver standard.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I did not say that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. On that point let me say that India has some 4,500,000,000 ounces of silver. That, as a rule, is in the hands of the masses of India. They have it in the form of coin, they have it in the form of bullion, in the form of rings, bracelets, and ornaments. It is hoarded away. They place their wealth in the silver of that country to the extent that the silver is in the hands of the masses of India. By raising the price of silver, we raise the value of the silver in the possession of the Indians. If we raised the value of cotton in the same way, we would raise the value to the farmers who have cotton in their warehouses.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator's observation about silver in India is accurate. If we were to raise the value of silver in the international silver market, we would enrich those people who have silver in India. But the Senator likewise, I think, will be fair enough to concede—and I am only trying to adduce the facts and not to take issue with the Senator—that if we increase the value of silver in India, according to his argument, we decrease the value of products raised in India in international trade. Therefore, it would compel the Indians to raise twice as much to buy a bushel of American potatoes with the high price of silver as they would have to raise with a low price of silver. To that extent, if the Senator will bear with me, we would offset the gain in raising the price of silver. I only make this observation to keep the record straight, if the Senator agrees with me.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am looking at this problem from the viewpoint of 125,000,000 American citizens.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is my contention that silver has been too low in price throughout the world. It is my contention that gold has been too high in value throughout the world. My efforts are devoted to the one point, to raise silver and to lower gold, so the two metals on a rational ratio will meet.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand what the Senator is endeavoring to accomplish, and I am not arguing it with him, but I think the natural inference from his remark was that in international trade that would increase the price of silver and increase the price of silver commodities at one and the same time.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I did not mean that.

Mr. TYDINGS. I knew the Senator did not.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator from Maryland understands the money question as well as anybody on the floor and he is exactly correct. Here is what happened to the United States. In 1920 the gold dollar had a buying power of 64 cents. Because of heavy debts the people wanted money and had to sell things to get the money. That made a big demand for currency, and that created a demand for gold. The demand coming for gold, gold went up from 64 cents in 1920 to 167 cents in February 1933.

Gold became too valuable. Because everybody wanted gold, gold went up in value and because, apparently, not so many wanted silver, silver went down. Silver went down to 24 cents an ounce along about the first of 1933. Silver was too low.

I am trying to get silver to a higher value, and I am trying to bring the value of gold down. I am trying to do it by having silver used a little more extensively in order that we may decrease the demand for gold. If we can do that, it will lessen the demand for gold, and gold will come down; and if we can use silver more widely, that will increase the demand for silver, and silver will go up.

I do not want to raise the price of silver to an unusual degree; but if the price of silver is advanced so that the silver bullion in a silver dollar is worth a dollar, that means that silver is worth $1.29 an ounce. That means that on the old gold valuation silver is worth only about 80 cents an ounce. During the war and just after the war silver was worth some $1.30 an ounce. The silver in a silver dollar at that time was worth more as bullion than it was as a stamped silver dollar.

I made the statement that by using silver more widely we would increase the price of silver. By increasing the price of silver we would increase the value or buying power of the silver units used in the cotton-producing countries. Mexico, a cotton-producing country, has a silver peso as its unit of currency. If we raise the value of silver through our policy, to help ourselves, it will raise the value of pesos in Mexico; and when the value of the unit of money in any country is raised, it raises the cost of production in that country. If the peso is made more valuable, the result will be that it will cost more in Mexico to produce cotton.

Farther south are Chile, and Peru, and Brazil, and Argentina. Each of those countries is on a silver standard. Across the ocean is India, having the silver rupee as its unit of currency. There is China, having the Chinese silver dollar, and there is Japan, with the yen. By using silver more extensively as money, we should raise the price of silver; and as we raised the price of silver we would make more valuable the monetary units of those countries using silver; and it so happens that every country which produces cotton in competition with America is, in the main, on a silver standard.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I agree with what the Senator from Oklahoma said, and I also agree to a large extent with what the Senator from Maryland said with reference to the price of silver; but I desire to point out one thing which seems to me to be absolutely fundamental with reference to the silver situation, which most people do not seem to understand. It is this:

I think practically everybody concedes at least that there is a maldistribution of the gold of the world. I am of the opinion that not only is there a maldistribution of the gold of the world, but likewise there is a shortage of gold to carry on the commerce of the world.

Many people, particularly the New York banking crowd, the New York economists, and that group, tell us that there is more gold in the world at the present time than there ever has been before; and that is true. Likewise, however, I desire to call attention to the fact that human wants have increased tremendously since the war. As human wants increase, whether they are the wants of the African, or the Hindu, or the Chinese, the potential buyers of the world increase; and as the potential buyers of the world increase, commerce increases to that extent, providing there is a medium of exchange so that those wants can be translated into purchasing power.

The production of gold not only has not kept pace with the increase of population but likewise it has not kept pace with the increase of wants on the part of the people of the world; for as people throughout the world are educated their desires and their wants increase, and the production of gold has not kept pace either with human wants or with the increase of population. Consequently gold became very scarce; and as it became scarce people began to accumulate it and began to hoard it. The nations of the world hoarded gold after the World War. France and the United States got 70 percent of all the gold in the world and they sterilized that gold by putting it into their vaults. France dug a vault under the city of Paris and put its gold there. The United States sterilized gold in its banks and in its bank vaults and it is sterilized today in the United States.

What must happen in the United States and throughout the world, in my humble judgment, is that there must be a redistribution of the gold of the world. Not only must that be brought about but there must be a wider base in order to meet the demands of the population of the world for the products we produce. We shall not have any permanent prosperity in this country or throughout the world until that takes place.

When silver is remonetized, what happens? I am not interested in merely raising the price of silver and keeping it as a commodity. What I want to do, and what I have been fighting for, is to remonetize it and to make it a basic money—money of redemption.

Some people have suggested to me that paper money is primary money. Paper money today in the United States is primary money because it is not redeemable; but, in my judgment, that condition cannot last long. There must be a basic money or a primary money upon which to issue currency and upon which to have credit, and then the paper money should be redeemable in gold or silver.

Because of this maldistribution of gold, and because of this shortage of gold, gold became high. What happened? When the gold content of the American dollar was cut, and the price of gold was raised in this country, the price of gold in the world became higher; and that stimulated the desire of the people of the world to hoard gold. Gold hoarding is going on in Europe and in the world today more than ever before. That hoarding of gold must be stopped, and there is only one way in which it can be done; and that is to make silver basic money—to make it money of redemption. Until that is done, we shall have chaotic conditions; and I submit, Mr. President, that if we in the United States of America would do it, we can do it. The United States is powerful enough to do it. There is not any economist in the world or in the United States today who has given any thought to the subject but who will admit that the United States, independently and alone, can remonetize silver.

If the Senator from Oklahoma will pardon me just a moment longer, when the Senator from Virginia gets through talking to him——

Mr. GLASS. I was wondering when the Senator from Montana is going to get through talking. We are having two speeches in one right now.

Mr. WHEELER. As long as the Senator from Oklahoma is not objecting to it, I do not know that the Senator from Virginia will object.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, yes; I have charge of the conference report. The Senator from Oklahoma has not.

Mr. WHEELER. Would the Senator rather have me wait until the Senator from Oklahoma concludes?

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no; I would rather the Senator from Montana would go on now.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator would rather have me wait, I will take a little longer time.

Mr. GLASS. No; I would rather have the Senator go on now.

Mr. WHEELER. Very well. With the permission of the Senator from Oklahoma, I will conclude my statement.

What I was about to say was that because gold is being hoarded throughout the world, we have high-priced gold. If silver were remonetized, and the primary money of the world were doubled, it would bring down the purchasing power of gold; and that is the most important thing to be done—in my judgment more important than anything else—to bring down the purchasing power of gold so that the debtor class may pay back their indebtedness with money equal in purchasing power to the money they borrowed.

Then, to my mind, the next important thing is that the currencies of the world shall be stabilized upon a basic money composed of both gold and silver.

If that is done, and the tariff barriers that have been erected in the various countries are removed, I think prosperity will come back, and trade and commerce throughout the world will increase immensely, and prosperity will be brought back, not only in this country but throughout the world. As I view the matter, we shall continue to have chaotic conditions, we shall continue to have these high-tariff walls that are stopping the exchange of goods and the flow of commerce, and we shall continue to have depreciated currencies and likewise have these quotas continued throughout the world, until that is done.

I thank the Senator from Virginia for his courtesy in permitting me to interrupt the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I appreciate the statement just made; and in support of the statement just made I desire at this point to call the attention of the Senate to some significant facts.

At the present time all the gold in the world, on the basis of revaluation, amounts to some $20,000,000,000. That is all the gold there is in the world that can be used for money—$20,000,000,000 worth—based upon the revaluation of 15 grains plus to the dollar.

Mr. President, of that $20,000,000,000 of gold, on yesterday at 4 o'clock the United States had $8,568,000,000. A few days ago France had, on that valuation, the sum of $5,470,000,000. Add those two figures, and we find that the United States and France together have a total sum of over $14,000,000,000 of gold. Out of the twenty billion, fourteen-twentieths, or seven-tenths, is held by two nations. Those two nations, the United States and France, have seven-tenths of all the monetary gold in the world.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Seven-tenths of all the gold is now in these two countries.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. LONG. Two little countries, I will say. The two together have only about 175,000,000 people. That is only 10 percent of the population of the world. Suppose we get nine-tenths and the rest of the countries go off the gold basis.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. All but three are off the gold basis now.

Mr. LONG. Suppose they just say, "Gold is not money any longer."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is not now money in the sense that gold is in circulation.

Mr. LONG. Suppose they say, "We will leave you over here with your metal and your iron to use for fish sinkers, or whatever you want to use it for."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. All the countries are off gold today, save France, Switzerland, and the Netherlands.

Mr. GLASS. The United States is on the gold standard.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is another proposition which appears to be ridiculous, the United States on the gold standard abroad and on a commodity standard here in the United States. Abroad the dollar is worth 60 cents in gold under its old valuation. Here at home it is worth $1.26 under its present commodity valuation.

Mr. GLASS. How much gold did the United States Treasury have before it seized the gold which belonged to all of its citizens and its banks?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. On January 31, 1934, the day the President issued his order devaluing the dollar, we had $4,036,000,000 in gold. When the dollar was devalued in terms of gold we had over $7,000,000,000.

Mr. GLASS. I am not talking about the devaluation; I am talking about how much gold the United States Treasury had before the Government seized the gold of its citizens and its banks.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Government seized the gold before we had the order devaluing the dollar.

Mr. GLASS. I know it did.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. But the amount did not change very much.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, yes; it did change.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If the Senator will indicate a date I will give him the information.

Mr. LONG. I can give the date.

Mr. GLASS. I want to know how much it had prior to the seizure of this gold.

Mr. LONG. How much did it have 60 days after March 4, 1933?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. On February 28, 4 days before March 4, 1933, we had gold coin and bullion in the sum of $4,379,000,000.

Mr. LONG. In the United States Treasury?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In our monetary gold stock we had the sum of $4,379,000,000.

Mr. LONG. How much have we there now?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Under the new valuation——

Mr. LONG. I mean under the old valuation. It was $4,379,000,000 on January 1, 1933?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes; we had $4,379,000,000.

Mr. LONG. What is it today?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Under the new valuation——

Mr. LONG. It is eight and a half billion.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is $8,568,000,000.

Mr. LONG. It will be necessary to cut the dollar down to 59 cents, and that would mean that we would take off 40 percent.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. We took 40 percent of gold out of each dollar, as is illustrated by this little device I have here. We cut out this much [indicating] of the gold dollar, and put it over in a pile, representing the profit, and after we clipped this much gold from each dollar and had our pile built up, we took the profit pile of gold and revalued it, and that made $2,812,000,000 as profit through the clipping of that much out of the dollar.

Mr. LONG. As I figure the amount out in my head, under the old valuation there was about $78,000,000. We seized only the difference between $4,378,000,000 and about $5,000,000,000, all based on the old valuation. That is the way I figure it out.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The figures are before Senators, and they can make their own computation. I was trying to say that the United States and France have seven-tenths of all the monetary gold in the world, and that leaves three-tenths to be distributed among the other 50 nations of the earth. I contend that three-tenths of all the gold in the world is not enough gold to become the basis of the currency and the credit of 50 other nations of the world.

If that is true, then these nations must have something else as a basis for their money. What will they have? There is but one other metal they can have, and that is silver.

What is the situation about silver? There are only 10,000,000,000 ounces of silver in the world that can be used for money. Of that sum India has four and a half billion, China two and a half billion, the United States a billion. Of the 10,000,000,000 ounces 3 countries have 8,000,000,000, and 50 other nations divide only 2,000,000,000 ounces of silver among them.

All nations together, excepting the United States and France, have only three-tenths of the gold; and all nations, save India, China, and the United States, together have only two-tenths of all the silver in the world. Is it not evident that we must have a distribution of this monetary metal among the nations of the world? Is it not obvious that the nations must go to using silver for the very good reason that there is not enough gold to become the basis of the money of the world?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it not a fact that, outside of India and China, the United States has more silver than any other country on the face of the earth at the present time?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct; and under the terms of the policy we adopted last year we must get a billion two hundred million ounces more. We cannot get a billion two hundred million ounces more; it does not exist, unless we go to mining it in New Mexico and Arizona and Nevada and Utah and other places where silver may be found.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator's argument it seems to me leads to placing emphasis on the danger of tying currency to any one metal, or perhaps to any metal at all. The Senator will remember that the experience in England was that just before she went off the gold standard she endeavored to purchase gold from the United States and from France. She did purchase millions of dollars worth of gold, and it finally developed, according to quite an authoritative statement I have seen, that 75 percent of all the monetary gold in the world was hoarded and taken out of circulation. Consequently, England had to go off the gold standard; she could not pay in gold. That is the danger if a nation ties its currency to any metal. That metal may be singled out and hoarded and taken out of circulation, and there is no basis for the circulation, if it is tied to that particular metal.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I thank the Senator for his statement. I think it is obvious and admitted throughout the world that Great Britain has better and more intelligent and shrewder financiers than any other nation on earth.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator will allow me, I was about to finish by saying that that leads us to the managed currency idea, which England had to adopt, and which we have adopted.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I was about to make the observation just made by the distinguished Senator from Florida. Great Britain being a nation which must depend on trade for her existence, the British Isles being out in the ocean, and with dependencies scattered throughout the world, she must have a currency system that is all-embracing. Great Britain, heretofore the leader of the gold bloc of the world, has become the leader of the commodity currency policy of the world. Great Britain is not on the gold standard today, and, so far as we can tell from the public press and interviews, Great Britain has no intention of going back on the gold standard at any time in the near future. Great Britain is content to have a commodity dollar, purely a managed dollar, and in the economy of Great Britain, gold plays no more part than wheat; in the economy of Great Britain, gold plays no more part than cotton, plays no more part than silver. Gold is a commodity. Each day the pound is worth so much gold. Silver is a commodity, and each day the pound is worth so much silver. Cotton is a commodity, and each day the pound is worth so much cotton. Wheat is a commodity, and each day the pound is worth so much wheat.

Gold is no more important in the British financial system than is silver, or cotton, or wheat, or any article which has a world-wide use and a world-wide price each day.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. While what the Senator says about Great Britain is true, nevertheless, is not the value of the pound dependent on the market value of gold each day?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Absolutely. Great Britain understands that if they want to take care of their monetary situation and increase their price structure, they must put a few more pounds in circulation. If they want prices to go down, they take a few pounds out of circulation. That is a simple proposition. Everybody agrees to it except the distinguished Senator from Virginia.

Mr. CONNALLY. What I meant was that the value of the pound each day depends on how many pounds of currency it takes to buy a stated quantity of gold.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Exactly so. The Senator and I agree about that.

Mr. CONNALLY. What I meant was that in a sense, when we say Great Britain is off the gold standard, she is off the gold standard except as the value of gold regulates the value of the pound.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If she has a balance of trade she could pay in any commodity the other nation would accept. We would accept gold because it has a universal value from day to day. If we owed Great Britain a balance, we could pay in gold, we could pay in silver, we could pay in wheat, we could pay in cotton, or in any commodity she would accept. One commodity would be just as good as another.

Great Britain has no desire or intention at the present time of going back on the gold standard, and I know of no good reason why she should go back on the gold standard. As I have said before, we made a mistake when we tied the dollar to 15 grains plus of gold on January 31, 1934, and that mistake will remain in existence until the dollar is untied from gold.

I made the statement a while ago that we can help the cotton South in two ways, by putting more money into circulation, making money more plentiful, thereby cheaper, and raising the price of cotton. Everybody would agree to that proposal save perhaps the distinguished Senator from Virginia; and he is not denying it.

Mr. GLASS. No; I am engaged in something more profitable here. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is one way to help the cotton farmer of the South. It is not necessary to pile up the cotton in warehouses; it is not necessary to destroy the cotton of the South in order to raise the price. By making money plentiful, we make money cheaper, and as money becomes cheaper, prices rise. I hope that sometime the Senators from the South will have the same opinion on this money question that I have. We can help the cotton prices by putting money in circulation. That is one way. The second way is through a wider use of silver. By using silver we get more money into circulation, and it does exactly the same thing that paper currency would do, it would make money more plentiful, make money cheaper, and make prices higher.

As we use silver, we make a demand for silver, and in making a demand for silver, we increase the price of silver, and as silver goes up, the value of the monetary units in the competing cotton producing countries likewise increases. By raising the value of silver, we increase the value of the peso in Mexico, we increase the value of the milreis in Brazil, we increase the value of the rupee in India, we increase the value of the dollar in China, and we increase the value of the yen in Japan, and as those monetary units go up, their costs of production go up, and as their costs of production go up, the cotton planters of the South can better compete with the cotton planters of the nations now threatening the destruction of our all-important southern industry.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, at the risk of prolonging the discussion, which I hesitate mightily to do, I asked the Senator a while ago how much gold the United States had in the Treasury before the Government seized the gold belonging to its citizens and the banks of the country, and to my amazement he answered that it had $4,379,530,500. The Senator made a mistake by reading the total amount of money in circulation, and not the amount of gold held in the United States Treasury.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I did not read from the column headed "In circulation." The column showing the money "In circulation" is on the right hand. I read from the left-hand column.

Mr. GLASS. No, Mr. President; the Treasury of the United States, before the Government seized the gold belonging to the people and to the banks, had but $125,679,175 in the Treasury of the United States. This other gold was held for the redemption of Federal Reserve bank notes and for other outstanding paper.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am going to leave the distinguished Senator from Virginia to argue with the Treasury Department. I exhibit to the Senate, form 1028 published by the Government.

Mr. GLASS. That is what I referred to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. And I refer to the left-hand column, under the heading "Kind of money."

Mr. GLASS. The kind of money in circulation.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask the Senator to wait a moment. The headings is "Kind of money, gold coin and bullion, $4,379,000,000." Under the heading on the right it tells where that money is, and I will read it to the Senate, not reading the thousands.

Money held in the Treasury, $3,292,000,000.

Amount held in trust against gold and silver certificates, $1,250,000,000.

Mr. GLASS. That does not belong to the Treasury.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Reserve against United States notes, $156,000,000.

Mr. GLASS. That does not belong to the Treasury.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Held for Federal Reserve banks and checks, $1,759,000,000.

Mr. GLASS. That does not belong to the United States Treasury.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. All other money, $125,000,000.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; and that does not belong to the Treasury, either.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, to whom does it belong?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Virginia to answer that question.

Mr. GLASS. It is difficult to tell to whom it belongs. It has been seized from the citizens and from the banks of this country; $2,800,000,000 of it was seized from the Federal Reserve banks alone.

Mr. LONG. Then the figure showing what was in the Federal Treasury—$2,800,000,000—that was Federal Reserve money?

Mr. GLASS. Oh, all of it but $125,679,000 belonged to somebody else. It did not belong to the United States Treasury at all.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the people of the United States have always thought that they owned the Federal Reserve System and the Federal Reserve banks. The people of the United States have no ownership in the Federal Reserve banks.

Mr. GLASS. They never have, and never were intended to have.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. But the people thought those banks belonged to them.

Mr. GLASS. No; they did not think so, either.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I should like to know, if that is the case, why the distinguished Senator from Virginia attached the name of the United States to the Federal Reserve System. Why was the name "Federal" attached to the banks in the bill creating the System?

Mr. GLASS. Because it was a Federal Reserve System established, as the act states, to respond to the requirements of commerce, industry, and agriculture, with Government supervision; and that is where it got its name of Federal Reserve System.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Under the terms of that bill, a private bill passed for private interests, creating a private corporation, having the word "Federal" attached to the name, the people thought this banking system was their system. Most people still think that the Federal Reserve System is a publicly owned banking system.

It is true that the Federal Reserve banks held this gold. They were private corporations. They held some $3,000,000,000 of this gold, and we gave the President the authority, when we passed the legislation in 1933, to call upon these private banks, as he called upon all citizens, to turn in their gold, and these private banks turned in their gold, but they received in return gold certificates.

Mr. GLASS. You had as much right to tell them to turn in their cattle, too, as to turn in their gold; every bit as much right.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Federal Reserve banks turned in their gold, but the Federal Reserve banks received, in return for their gold, gold certificates. A private corporation which turned in its gold did not get gold certificates.

Mr. GLASS. What is a gold certificate? If you present it to get the gold, they put you in jail and fine you. You call that a gold certificate? I do not. A gold certificate bears the words on its face that the Federal Government promises to pay the gold back upon presentation; and now if the certificate is presented and you get paid back in gold, they will grab you and put you in jail and fine you for it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Permit me to make a reply to that statement.

Mr. GLASS. I am not going to prolong the discussion. It does not have anything in the world to do with this conference report.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. When we are talking about gold certificates, we are talking about antiques; we are talking about historical objects. I have not seen a gold certificate in so long I have forgotten what they look like.

Mr. LONG. This $20 bill which my friend from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] often refers to says on its face, "Redeemable in gold on demand." It is on the bill. It starts off by saying, "Redeemable in gold on demand", and they still print that bill. "Redeemable in gold on demand at the United States Treasury, or in gold or lawful money at any Federal Reserve bank."

Now, manifestly if you present this $20 bill and the Treasurer does what this piece of money says, then he goes to jail and the man getting the $20 goes to jail.

Mr. WHEELER. No, Mr. President, the Senator is wrong about that. It does not say gold only. It says gold or——

Mr. LONG. Or what?

Mr. WHEELER. "Gold or lawful money."

Mr. GLASS. Redeemable in gold.

Mr. WHEELER. No.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, yes, it does. The act of March 1908 made lawful money and silver certificates, too, for that matter, redeemable in gold; but now if a citizen goes and gets some of it they put him right in jail.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am trying to talk to some of the Senators from the South. I am trying to tell those Senators that there is a different way to raise the price of cotton besides not raising cotton. There is a different way to raise the price of cotton besides burning cotton and destroying cotton. We can raise the price of cotton by cheapening the dollar. The dollar can be cheapened by placing more dollars in circulation, and to the extent that we place new dollars in circulation, to that same extent money becomes more plentiful, to the extent that money becomes more plentiful money becomes cheaper, and to the extent that money becomes cheaper prices rise.

What is true of cotton is true of wheat. What is true of wheat is true of livestock. What is true of livestock is true of every commodity in America. Every commodity in America can be raised in price by the simple plan of placing a little more money in circulation.

You do not have to murder pigs to raise the price of pork. You do not have to plow up cotton to raise the price of cotton. You do not have to destroy the acreage of wheat to raise the price of wheat.

Now, by placing more money in circulation we can raise the price of cotton. By using silver we raise the price of silver. As silver goes up in value the monetary unit of all the competing cotton-producing countries will likewise go up in value. The silver peso of Mexico will be more valuable. The silver milreis of Brazil will be more valuable. The silver rupee of India will be more valuable.

Today in these silver-standard, cotton-producing countries the farmers are making money on the present price of cotton. In Mexico the farmers are getting 45 cents a pound for their cotton. They used to get only 15 cents a pound. Of course, the 45 cents is in Mexican money but such money pays all Mexican bills. In other silver-standard countries, such as Brazil, Chile, Peru, India, and China, where cotton is produced, their money has gone down in value, hence prices likewise are higher.

But their cheap money pays their taxes, their interest, and their debts just like our cheaper money here today pays our taxes and our interest and our debts.

We have cheapened the dollar in America only 25 percent. We intend to cheapen the dollar 40 percent. The President took 40 percent of gold out of the dollar. He no doubt thought that that act would cheapen the dollar 40 percent. But such results have not been accomplished. The dollar has been cheapened the full 40 percent abroad. The moment the American dollar gets beyond the border it loses the full 40 percent of its former gold value. Not so in America. We have here the domestic dollar, and the domestic dollar is not comparable in value to the foreign dollar. The domestic dollar is a commodity dollar governed entirely by the number of dollars in circulation. The foreign dollar is a gold dollar equal in value to its fixed gold content. Thus it may be said that the foreign dollar is a 60-cent dollar and the domestic dollar is a 126-cent dollar. It is because of this condition that foreign gold is coming to the United States at the rate of some $100,000,000 per month. Sixty million in gold under the old valuation means one hundred million under the new valuation, so that foreigners may now purchase $100,000,000 worth of American merchandise with $60,000,000 worth of gold as measured by the former gold valuation.

Mr. President, I have been trying to show that our troubles are largely the inevitable results of our monetary policies. Also I am trying to suggest and demonstrate that cotton, cotton planters, and the South may be aided and helped by a wider use of silver.

However, no solution of the present problems will ever be reached until it is realized that since 1929 a transformation scene as complete as any in a theatrical pantomime has taken place.

The past rapid advance in prosperity was due to, first, the great and continuous growth of population, largely from immigration, which greatly increased home consumption of goods, and, second, the dependence of the more forward countries on the United States for a large part of their supplies.

As you know, both these influences are ended, and it is to the loss of this growing home custom and of the foreign custom that our huge unemployment is due, aggravated still more by the displacement of hand power in industry due to machinery.

If, therefore, the position prior to 1929 is to be restored, it can only be by substituting for the lost custom of the forward countries the custom of the backward countries, and you know this can only be done through silver—silver monetized, not simply raised in price.

But the importance of thus providing a great increase in foreign custom is by no means the only consideration which makes the monetization of silver a matter literally of life and death for the people of the United States. This to put an end to the rapidly growing menace of Asiatic and South American competition, which can only be done by greatly raising the costs of production in these countries by the monetization of silver at a high ratio.

As the representative of one of the greatest cotton-growing States, I cannot but be alive to the ruin facing Oklahoma and the South, which means their depopulation in the very near future.

Between August 1 and November 9, 1933, America's cotton exports amounted to 2,808,000 bales, and in the like period of this year they were only 1,574,000 bales, a loss of 1,334,000 bales. If this drift be permitted to continue throughout the season of 1934–35, the South will hang economic crepe on its doors in 1935–36. The high protective tariff policy of the New World creditor, United States; the 12-cent loans on unmarketed cotton; and the acreage control by law are in conjunction destroying the export market for United States produced cotton and vitally harming the economic and business life of Texas and of the entire South.

United States growths	9,600,000
Foreign growths	14,000,000

There is nothing new to me in all this. I have realized for many months this terrible growing menace to America's greatest industry, and the coming doom of at least ten or twelve million people, including dependents, who must join the unemployed as soon as the present temporary assistance is discontinued.

Now, whatever arguments there may be in a general way for or against the monetization of silver, you have in the case of cotton a clear-cut case, because practically the entire foreign production is by countries whose costs are based either entirely or largely on the price of silver.

A few weeks ago the London Financial Times in a Washington dispatch gave the following estimate of cotton production in certain countries as below, in bales:

	1933–34	Increase on 1932–33
Chile	329,000	228,000
Brazil	969,000	521,000
Mexico	226,000	122,000
Egypt	1,819,000	791,000
India	4,159,000	263,000
China	2,726,000	465,000
Total	10,225,000	2,390,000

As René Léon said last February, Congress has the power to end in a day this menace, and I say without hesitation that if there were no other argument at all for silver monetization it would be imperative for the reason alone of saving the cotton industry from ruin.

In the above figures you will note that India and China represent nearly seven-tenths of the total, and their costs are ruled entirely by silver.

In conclusion let me say that the remonetization of silver will be as helpful to the North and East as such policy will be to the South.

The manufacturing East depends upon world trade—being helped by increased exports and injured by increased imports. The depression has not been the sole cause of the distress in the East. Japan has been and is now enjoying a real boom.

Let me call your attention to the following analysis of Japan's present domination of world trade:

The growth of Japanese trade during a world-wide depression is considered a remarkable phase of the period.

Her industrialists have enjoyed something verging on a boom. The nation has little unemployment. Expansion has been pushed vigorously in many directions.

Frequently the question is asked: What lies at the bottom of this development? Why should Japanese industry be capturing markets and expanding when industry in the remainder of the world is contracting?

Two reasons are given. One is the progressive depreciation in the value of the yen, which is the Japanese currency. The other is the remarkably low cost of production of Japanese goods.

The first deliberate depreciation took place late in 1931. Then, as the pound sterling fell, after its topple from the gold standard, the Japanese depreciated their currency further. Finally, when the United States went off the gold standard and reduced the gold value of the dollar, the Japanese again cut the value of the yen, holding it about 40 percent under the old relationship with the dollar.

Mr. President, Japan is not the only country enjoying better times.

From the United States News we see the following statement:

Why worry about foreign markets or foreign competition?

Because normally 60 percent of this country's cotton crop is sold abroad; only 40 percent consumed at home. A half billion dollar market is at stake.

Brazil is enjoying a cotton boom. Egypt is stepping up production. India is doing the same. Latest Russian reports tell of plans to export cotton. For the first time since the Civil War the United States in 1934 produced less than half of the world's cotton.

In order that the RECORD may contain the most reliable information possible to secure, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point a letter received from Mr. Oscar Johnston, manager of the United States Cotton Pool.

There being no objection, the letter and attached data were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., January 9, 1935.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Enclosed is a statement which I have compiled from data furnished me by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics and from sundry publications and statements issued by the New York Cotton Exchange. Some of the figures are, you will understand, estimates. Many of them are based upon reports from various countries where the systems of estimating crop acreage and production are inaccurate or crude. On the whole, I think the figures are fairly accurate. At least they are the figures that are accepted by the trade generally.

If I can give you any further estimates, do not hesitate to call on me.

With regards, I am, yours truly,

OSCAR JOHNSTON,
Manager Cotton Pool.

MEMORANDA WITH RESPECT TO THE WORLD PRODUCTION OF COTTON DURING THE 5-YEAR PERIOD 1930–34, BOTH INCLUSIVE

TABLE 1.—Cotton acreage and production in India

Year	Acres	Bales produced
1930–31	23,812,000	4,585,000
1931–32	23,722,000	3,334,000
1932–33	22,483,000	4,109,000
1933–34	23,739,000	4,508,000
1934–35	(1)	[2] 4,600,000

[1] Am unable to get reliable figures for this acreage but the general idea is that it is lower than the acreage for the preceding year.
[2] This is a preliminary estimate, the crop has not yet been harvested. Present indications are that this estimate is probably a little high.

The figures above given with respect to the number of bales, are in 478-pound bales and represent what is known as the commercial crop, as distinguished from small quantities of cotton in some of the producing countries, which is used by the producer for mattress making, home weaving, spinning, et cetera.

TABLE 2.—Cotton acreage and production in Egypt

Year	Acres	Bales produced
1930–31	2,162,000	1,693,000
1931–32	1,747,000	1,303,000
1932–33	[1] 1,135,000	1,038,000
1933–34	1,873,000	1,725,000
1934–35	1,798,000	1,550,000

[1] In this year there was a drastic acreage cut enforced by law. This law was terminated the following year when the acreage went to an abnormally high figure. This was reduced the next year by natural causes.

TABLE 3.—Foreign production of commercial cotton

Country	Year	Bales produced
Brazil [1]	1930–31	392,000
	1931–32	464,000
	1932–33	373,000
	1933–34	807,000
	1934–35	1,100,000
Russia [1]	1930–31	1,589,000
	1931–32	1,851,000
	1932–33	1,778,000
	1933–34	1,889,000
	1934–35	[2] 1,700,000
China [1]	1930–31	1,603,000
	1931–32	1,106,000
	1932–33	1,871,000
	1933–34	2,051,000
	1934–35	2,200,000
Peru [1]	1930–31	223,000
	1931–32	223,000
	1932–33	260,000
	1933–34	265,000
	1934–35	275,000
Mexico [1]	1930–31	154,000
	1931–32	186,000
	1932–33	95,000
	1933–34	220,000
	1934–35	200,000
Sundry, other countries [1]	1930–31	1,078,000
	1931–32	1,187,000
	1932–33	1,100,000
	1933–34	1,150,000
	1934–35	1,300,000

[1] Acreage planted not obtainable.
[2] This is an estimate and is probably above the crop that will really be harvested.

The total production of the above countries together with the production of Egypt and India (tables 1 and 2) is:

1931–32	9,658,000
1932–33	10,624,000
1933–34	12,615,000
1934–35	12,925,000

Total exports of American cotton were as follows:

1930–31	6,820,000
1931–32	8,754,000
1932–33	8,426,000
1933–34	7,552,000
1934–35 (from Aug. 1, 1934–Jan. 1, 1935, approximately)	2,600,000

American exports to Japan from the crop 1933–34, 1,856,000; and from August 1 to December 31, 1934, 910,000.

The export of American cotton to Germany has been cut by more than half, and will probably show a decline of 66 percent during the current year. Our exports to France during the first 5 months of the current crop year, as compared with the same months for last year, show a decline of 56½ percent, Germany 72 percent, Great Britain 51½ percent, Poland 21½ percent, Belgium 48 percent, China 61 percent.

OSCAR JOHNSTON,
Manager Cotton Pool.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have occupied more time than I intended. I have numerous clippings, letters, tables, and data which I desire to place in the RECORD in connection with my remarks. I ask unanimous consent that such data may be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matters referred to are as follows:

President Roosevelt, on January 15, 1934, in his message to Congress, declared:

"Silver has been used since time immemorial as a metallic basis for currency and also as a currency in itself. It is used as such by probably half the population of the world. It constitutes a most important part of our own monetary structure. Silver is such a crucial factor in much of the international trade of the world that it cannot be neglected."

Lord Greenway (Lord Greenway is president and one of the founders of the Anglo-Persian Oil Co.; he is senior partner in the banking firm of Shaw, Wallace & Co., of India and Ceylon, and R. G. Shaw & Co., of London. He spent 23 years in the east and is a close student of financial and economic problems): "There can be no doubt that the present international monetary system has hopelessly broken down and that to this cause more than anything is to be attributed the economic and financial troubles which have beset the world for some years past. The cause is obvious; namely, that, owing to so vast an amount of the world's stock of gold being sterilized by the action of the principal governments in building up enormous reserves of that metal, there is insufficient gold in international circulation for the carrying on of normal trade.

"That being the cause, what is the remedy? What is called inflation, of one kind or another? Paper inflation in any single country is dangerous, and is impracticable as between nations. Therefore, it would appear that the readiest and safest (because limited by production) method of inflation would be the reintroduction of silver into international currencies at some fixed ratio of values between silver and gold. The United States are evidently ready to adopt this change, and with the two leading financial countries of the world agreed on this point, and the stabilization of exchange between them which would ensue, other countries would soon find it in their own interests to follow suit."

Edward Tuck (distinguished ex-banker and philanthropist; Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor; Citoyen d'Honneur de Paris; a close friend of Cernuschi and author of several monetary treatises): "To carry on commerce between the nations of the world there needs to be an international unit of value, and that unit must be a metallic one. At the present time, no nation on either side of the Atlantic having a currency redeemable in gold, all foreign commerce and exchange dealings are in the greatest confusion. No man knows from day to day what may be the market value of his merchandise or of his investments. At the recent economic conference in London President Roosevelt was severely criticized for refusing an attempt to stabilize the moneys of the United States and England; but he was right. To try to do it would be like an attempt to stabilize two balloons. Metallic moneys can be stabilized by their proportionate weight, but not so the unlimited product of the printing presses. It is only from the mines of gold and silver that there can be furnished automatically a needed yearly additional supply of metallic real money, which is estimated at from 1 to 2 percent of the existing monetary stock."

A. Chester Beatty (eminent mining authority; director of the Consolidated Diamond Mines, Southwest Africa, and various mining corporations; long resident in China): "It is universally recognized that there is today no greater detriment to trade than is caused by the fluctuation in the value of currencies. In the interests of commerce everyone is eagerly looking forward to a period at which stabilization may take place in the leading exchanges of the world; and everyone appreciates the fact that, until this is done, the channels of international trade will be clogged, and that the commerce upon which the civilized world depends will be grievously checked.

"China is one of the great markets of the world. The future prosperity of many of the industries of the west must be greatly affected by conditions in China. The diminution in manufactured exports from Great Britain and the United States to China in recent years has been, among others, one of the causes of the decline in the available amount of employment in these two great countries. Anything which would tend to revive such exports would obviously be very beneficial to their economic position.

"It may truly be said that the innumerable millions in India think in terms of silver. The peoples of India and China, indeed, representing a half of the whole population of the world, are vitally affected by any depreciation in the value of silver. During the period to which I have referred they have seen what we may call their invested savings depreciated to a half, or even a quarter, of the value at which they stood when the investment took place. This circumstance has had an obvious and notable effect upon their purchasing power."

Walter Lippmann (American publicist, formerly associate editor of the New Republic and ex-editor of the New York World): "The silver movement is a movement to cheapen gold all over the world. If the world suddenly discovered new gold mines as it did in the nineties, gold would become cheaper, because there would be more of it. When gold began to be cheap about 1900, prices rose all over the world and brought prosperity. But there are no new gold mines in sight. So, say the silver people, let us use the other precious metal as an equivalent for gold. Make silver legal money, exchangeable for gold, and it will produce the same effect as if the world had discovered new gold. It will cheapen gold, raise world prices, make further paper inflation unnecessary, and restore solvency.

"It is hard to obtain agreement among the nations to restore silver as money. It is something of a gamble for one country to restore silver by itself. But there are few students of the question who would deny that if the practical difficulties can be overcome, if gold can be diluted with silver, prices will rise in the world at large."

J. B. A. Kessler (monetary authority, author of the striking articles, Forged Money, in the London Times, Sept. 5 and 6, 1934): "The fact that silver still is the accepted and trusted measure of value for about one-third of the world's population makes it imperative to maintain it as such and to insure that it takes, hand in hand with gold, its place in the homogeneous money and credit system. On this subject no end of confusion has been created by the two opposing camps. I think that, with the silver legislation passed in the United States, we shall see silver come into its own again, and quite logically so.

"Those who think that we can do without gold and silver for our monetary and credit system do not understand that, in order to allow the production process of the world to continue, we want an honest token to prove our economic right to consume or to give credits; that those tokens have been tampered with on an unprecedented scale; and thirdly, that that has caused the crisis. This is the very worst time to contemplate removing from our monetary and credit system the only tokens that cannot possibly be forged. Confidence in our money must be restored—not further undermined."

Sir Montagu De P. Webb (authority on Indian finance; late member of Indian Legislative Assembly; member of Indian Fiscal Commission): "There is only one way to raise world prices—apart from the deliberate destruction of goods, which, with 30,000,000 people in the world unemployed, is inhumane—and that is to increase the money in the hands of the masses for purchasing and consuming goods and services more rapidly than they can be brought to market. Government could do this to a limited extent by reducing taxation, and by paying its way by issues of State currency of the kind used during the war. The banks can do it to a limited extent by granting larger credits; but the individuals of the masses are mostly not classed as 'credit-worthy.' The empire's mints should be reopened to the free coinage of full legal tender silver money. This last would assuredly raise world prices.

"It is not everywhere realized how popular silver money is today. Thus, silver money—including paper currency based thereon—is at present legal tender without limit in China, with a population of, say, 450,000,000; in India, with a population of 350,000,000; in the United States of America, with 125,000,000; and also in 15 or 16 British colonies, dependencies, and protectorates. Indeed, half the population of the world uses silver money today.

"What is happening at the present time is this: Western anti-silver legislation, while depressing the price of silver measured in gold, has not lessened the value pro tanto as measured in commodities. In other words, wages, fixed charges, and raw products in the east, especially in the Far East, are much as they were in years gone by. So that the east, while seriously handicapped in purchasing British manufactures, is powerfully stimulated to build up its own manufacturing industries, equipped, be it noted, with the most modern machinery which, aided by cheap labor and artificially cheapened silver money, means severe competition by the east in all the markets of the world.

"We are already experiencing a taste of what the Japanese can do. But when the Chinese in their hundreds of millions—keen, efficient, and willing workers—get properly at work—and they are advancing rapidly—we shall experience competition of a much more severe kind.

"My own experience in the east leads me to the belief that any further failure to set in motion an upward movement of world prices by incorporating silver in the world's supply of legal-tender money, thus, inter alia, improving the value of the precious metal, may jeopardize and possibly wreck our civilization in the not remote future. The struggle of the immediate future is going to be east versus west."

Jose Luis Requina, distinguished Mexican monetary authority and author of Crises in the Gold Standard, etc.: "We have only to read the daily newspapers, the declarations of governments, the proceedings of economic conferences, the avalanche of laws intended to safeguard national commerce and industry; the steel padlocks that bar frontiers, and, what is even worse, we may gaze upon the interminable lines of silent and hungry unemployed who daily tramp the street in search of work and whose only prospect is to return to their homes with empty hands and contemplate the heart-breaking spectacle of utter misery.

"Nations are subject to the same laws as individuals. We accuse those nations that introduced gold monometallism as responsible for all the evils that now afflict us. We accuse those who have followed their example like a flock of silly sheep. We accuse those who, while realizing the deadly evils caused by a scarcity and stringency of currency, yet keep open the sores on human welfare."

Sir Henri Deterding (chairman of the Anglo-Dutch Oil Corporation; financier and economist of world-wide repute): "Silver has during the last four centuries not been produced to a greater extent in respect of gold than in the old and true proportion as to its value—namely, about 15 times, which ratio has been maintained up to the time of the general silver demonetization (in 1873).

"At the present time the world's production of silver in relation to the production of gold has decreased from about 15 to 1 to about 12 to 1, but in spite of this the value of silver, instead of increasing in its relationship to the value of gold, has done just the reverse * * *.

"If all countries were to readopt the original 'honest' coin, silver stocks would soon be employed for the reestablishment of this entire coinage on an honest basis, and the old parity between gold and silver of 1 to 16 be restored.

"A great deal of harm is constantly done by the utterances of so-called 'economists' who try to make the public believe that on the old 'book' theoretic principle—namely, 'that imports are paid for by exports'—the value of a coin has nothing to do with trade. These people conveniently forget, of course, that on such principle an insufficiently developed country could never reach development, as new capital (sterling and/or gold) would have for many years to be imported to stimulate future exports. One of the city's leading bankers once told me that 'the Chancellor of the Exchequer of Great Britain by reducing at the time the fineness of the realm's coin from 925 to 500 fine committed the greatest financial crime', and I myself endorse this, as that action is more responsible for the world's crisis than anything else; the fact that it is one out of many does not lessen its seriousness.

"How is it that there are still so many people in high places who have not yet realized that the artificially arranged low price of silver was Japan's greatest chance of increasing its trade at the expense of the silver-depressed countries? If the United States are creating more 'honest' money by increasing the circulation of the sound silver dollar, and if Mexico and the whole of South America follow this sound example (while the United States will still keep a large stock of gold bullion to settle eventual foreign debit-trade balances), will these countries not then have a magnificently sound business and credit position? After all, even on a basis of 64-cent silver, the circulating dollar is covered by 50 percent of precious metal in itself, and there are very few gold countries which have a 50-percent cover for all their liabilities.

"Finance, since the war, has been in the hands of a few short-sighted theorists who are evidently ashamed to admit that they have been in the wrong. Their lack of moral courage is the chief cause of the present perplexities of the world. The gold affliction is based on absence of fairness by maintaining that debts which were contracted in gold some years ago should be repaid by twice the original quantity of goods. Thus gold protects the creditor but must ruin the debtor, involving both finally in a common catastrophe. The excessive tariffs of the last few years are due to the destruction of the value of silver and thus of the purchasing capacity of some 90,000,000 people.

"Far from China being the only country where silver is of vital importance, the accumulated wealth of British India is mainly composed of silver bars and silver ornaments. Surely, then, it is a matter of vital importance to this great part of the British Empire that her savings of centuries should be allowed to regain something like their original value—about double the price of silver today.

"But China suffers in yet another way. She has to buy and import about 1,250,000 tons of rice annually (see Hong Kong and Shanghai Corporation annual report) and to do this she must sell silver. China may therefore be deprived of the means of buying even rice. When the purchasing power of the world is destroyed, the world must suffer, and the world has suffered and is suffering."

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the mayor of Chicago has lately, in the last few minutes, been in the Senate lobby paying his respects to the Vice President and Senators. He informed me that he had heard that the provision in the work-relief joint resolution, which we had heretofore assumed would be used as a basis for borrowing funds to aid country schools, had been stricken in conference. He referred to the provision offered by me in line with that of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] and also that of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. May I ask the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the estimable Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], if it be not true that the provision remains for its purposes just as it was originally advanced and that it has not been stricken out of the joint resolution? I ask is it not true that the opportunity remains for the schools availing themselves of the provision previously adopted by the Senate, and is it not true that in the joint resolution the authority to borrow for education is fully provided for?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, we have inserted in the joint resolution, on page 3, a provision whereby $300,000,000 is appropriated, with the right to the President to add $800,000,000 to it, adding the words "projects for educational, professional, and clerical purposes."

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator, because his statement demonstrates that the provision which will aid the schools still remains in the measure. I shall be glad to assure the mayor of Chicago that it has not been changed.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator from Illinois has raised the point, I invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that the provision placed in the bill by the conferees is entirely different from the provision which was approved by the Senate by a vote of more than 2 to 1. The provision adopted by the Senate was one to aid the public schools and keep them open during the remainder of the current school year. The provision adopted by the conferees deals with "educational persons", whatever that term may mean. I confess I cannot attach any definite meaning to it. If it applies to school teachers and nothing else, it may be the administration of the relief will provide them as individuals, on the same basis as other needy individuals, with food and shelter and clothing. However, that is quite a different objective from the objective which I had in mind and the objective which was approved by the Senate by a large majority.

I do not know whether "educational persons" includes kindergartens, sectarian schools, R. O. T. C., or what it may be interpreted as meaning. Furthermore, I will say to the Senator from Illinois that it puts the burden on the administrative officials of allocating the $300,000,000 between professional, clerical, and educational persons, so that the burden will be upon the administrators of deciding the rivalry between those various classes. I do not desire to argue the matter at this time, but I do desire to point out that the meaning of the section adopted by the conferees is entirely different from the section as adopted by the Senate.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I disagree with my friend from New Mexico that it is entirely different. It was the sense of the Senate conferees that it was not appreciably different except that the Senator from New Mexico proposed to appropriate only $40,000,000 for the relief of education, whereas the embodiment of this change appropriates $300,000,000, with the right of the President to transfer any part of $800,000,000 to that fund.

Mr. CUTTING. The Senator will admit, will he not, that the amendment adopted by the Senate provided $40,000,000 for keeping open the public schools during the remainder of the present school year?

Mr. GLASS. I cannot imagine how public schools could be kept open without paying the teachers. This is for "educational, professional, and clerical persons." Any person employed in keeping open a school will be an "educational person." That was the sense of the Senate conferees, and it was only because that was the sense of the conferees that we yielded on the $40,000,000 item.

Mr. CUTTING. It is quite true that teachers in public schools are "educational persons", but every "educational person" is not necessarily a teacher in the public schools.

Mr. GLASS. That is true.

Mr. CUTTING. The money of which the Senator speaks—and it has not been earmarked in any way—may be spent on any kind of "educational person" anywhere. There is no provision for the public schools except for the payment of the salaries of school teachers. There is no provision for textbooks or for transportation or any of the other items which would have been included under the original Senate amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. There was a basis of dispute, as I gather it, having participated in it myself, that without the word "educational", in a general sense, the term "public schools" might be construed to mean only the schools of incorporated cities serving under school boards, and it was felt that by using the word "educational" in this manner the country districts and smaller schools would be included.

Mr. GLASS. My own considered judgment is that we have made the aid to schools and school teachers very much more liberal than was covered in the other provision.

END OF ECONOMIC DICTATORSHIP?

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, after 2 years of economic dictatorship under the labels of N. R. A. and A. A. A. and under the pretext of "emergency", our economic dictators or alphabetical bureaucrats demand 2 years more of "emergency" power to crack down industry and agricultural production.

It is an illustration of the age-old story that dictators never willingly give up office. It is the history of dictatorship that, first temporary, it seeks to become permanent, and then demands absolute power over those who work and pay the taxes.

Not only the bureau chieftains, but the President himself, in his message to Congress in January 1934, a year ago, and after only 6 months of the N. R. A. and A. A. A., demanded that his emergency powers be made permanent. Indeed, during the months of October, November, and December 1933 and January 1934, he and his Cabinet and bureau heads were taking official steps both to make their temporary powers permanent and to expand those powers so as to include the whole program of socialistic ownership and operation by acts of incorporation in Delaware under charters which read, "This corporation shall have perpetual existence."

The present demand for a further 2-year extension of the N. R. A. and A. A. A., together with a lump-sum appropriation of $4,000,000,000 subject to the allocation of the Executive, constitute the second step in a plan to insure perpetual existence to an economic dictatorship in the United States as in Russia, Italy, and Germany. It is a demand that what we for 150 years have known as "Americanism", under a Constitution made by the people, shall cease in the United States.

Two years of it are to be extended to 4 years by acts of Congress. Then after delegations of legislative power which the Supreme Court has declared unconstitutional we in 1936 will ask the people by election to extend this dictatorial power 4 years longer; and we are asked to appropriate $4,000,000,000 to subsidize the electorate to that end.

The issue that confronts the 96 Members of the Senate and the 435 Members of the House today is, Shall we here vote and give the record of that vote to history to become particeps criminis to this betrayal of our trust, to this perjury of our oaths to support and uphold the Constitution?

Two years ago, in March 1933, when the first emergency had been created by the closing of all banks under the World War Act of 1917, we had a responsible ground for trying these experiments, the A. A. A. and the N. R. A. We accepted all statements of the Executive and his "brain trust" in good faith. These experiments were to be temporary in fact. They were to end in June 1935. They were to meet an emergency then existing in March 1933.

Today we are asked to vote an extra $4,000,000,000 subject to the allocation of the Executive. When? In the fiscal year 1937.

Then we are to follow this up by extending the dictatorial powers of the N. R. A. and the A. A. A. to 1937.

So today we are not providing for an existing emergency, but for a planned emergency that is to be extended to 1937.

As a political weather bureau, we are not satisfied with issuing reports and providing for an existing storm area, but as long-distance forecasters we assume the omniscience to forecast an emergency 2 years ahead. Our bureaucratic lords assume greater omniscience than the mythical gods of Greece, Rome, and Egypt, few or none of whom pretended to forecast over a year ahead.

Mr. President, I doubt if there are many cases in history where omniscient officeholders have ventured to extend their emergency forecasts 2 years ahead. Dictators of old did well to extend their tax extortions 1 year ahead.

Under the constitution of the early Roman Republic, a dictator was provided for in time of war or exigency, but his term was limited to 6 months. Consequently, his financial demands to meet his exigency were limited to 6 months. He did well to get an appropriation subject to his allocation for that 6 months.

When the dictatorship habit grew, during the times of Sulla, Pompey, and the Caesars, and a permanent office of dictator was demanded, the permanent dictator was known as "emperor."

The extension of the term of a dictatorship from 6 months to 4 years was recognized then, as it is in Europe today, as equivalent to the creation of the office of emperor and a permanent bureaucracy created by the emperor.

Extension of the N. R. A. and A. A. A. 2 years longer, or for 4 years beginning in June 1933—which is the proposal now before us—is entirely different from the proposal that confronted us 2 years ago. Then we believed that the proposal meant what it said—a 2-year temporary emergency. Today, the veil of hypocrisy is lifted; for, Mr. President, how many Members here will venture to lay claim to the possession of an omniscience that forecasts emergency 2 years ahead? He who votes for an emergency 2 years ahead, it is fair to presume, predicates his forecast on the assumption: (1) There is a planned emergency on foot; (2) those who make that plan have the power to force an emergency that will reach to 1937, or long enough to get, by reelection, 4 years more of dictatorial power reaching to March 4, 1941. Thus, the issues which confront the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress simmer down to these:

First. Shall we, by unconstitutional delegation of legislative power, extend the N. R. A. and its legalized monopolies and robbery of consumers to 1937?

Second. Shall we, by similar unconstiutional delegation of legislative powers, extend the A. A. A., with its soviet control of agriculture and unlawful levies of processing taxes, to 1937?

Third. Shall we, by violation of the Bill of Rights, extend and expand the bureaucratic powers of the Federal Communications Commission over telegraphic, telephone, radio facilities, and the freedom of the press, and thereby control and becloud public opinion?

Fourth. Shall we, by expansion of public debt and deficits, doles and taxes, further depress the industrial enterprises that pay the taxes and employ American labor?

Fifth. Shall we add $4,000,000,000 of public debt to finance this program of socialistic expansion, and, having extended it to 1937, then subsidize America to make it permanent?

By our votes on the extension of the N. R. A. and A. A. A., the communications bill and the $4,000,000,000 allocation to the Executive, let us not deceive ourselves. We are no longer voting on the temporary emergencies of 1933 or even 1935. We are voting on the proposed new Federal policy—the substitution of Old World perils for the democracy of America.

The eventual policy for which we are voting no man knows—neither the President nor his "brain trust." It may be fascism, as in Rome. It may be nazi-ism, as in Berlin. It may be sovietism, as in Moscow.

Of one thing only we are certain: When we vote for the extension of the N. R. A. and the A. A. A., the extended powers of the Federal Communications Bureau, and extended debts and Treasury deficits, we are not voting for the Americanism of the fathers and the perpetuity of the Constitution of the United States.

TWO-YEAR DISASTER OF THE A. A. A. DICTATORSHIP

To illustrate the national danger of the economic dictatorship which now afflicts us, I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate a brief review of the economic ills of the A. A. A. The testimony to which I first call attention is that of star witnesses, Members of the present Senate, supporters of the present administration.

In particular, I desire to call attention to the speech of the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], himself a cotton producer, and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] on March 28 recently, on the disaster to the American cotton grower, the cotton-textile industry, and the lost employment to wage earners, both in the field and mill, during the past year and nine months of the A. A. A. and N. R. A. as applied to the cotton industry.

I wish then to cite the similar disasters to the grain and livestock production and the farmers and manufacturers of the Middle West and Northwest under the like domination of the A. A. A. and N. R. A. by Federal bureaucrats assuming powers of omniscience and omnipotence to reap processing taxes where they had not sown.

It seems that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] had introduced a wise and wholesome limitation on the use of $100,000,000 to administer the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the Farm Credit Act. He had offered an amendment to the $4,000,000,000 appropriation which, to quote from the Senator's speech—

> Confined him [the President] by way of limitation to the use of that money within 12 months next after the effective date of the act.

The Senator likewise had expressed the general sentiment of Congress, which no one except possibly Wallace or Tugwell would question, that the time may soon come when processing taxes should cease, not only on cotton, but on grain and other necessaries of life consumed in the homes of the workers.

I now quote at length from the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]:

> Mr. Wallace says that if that amendment shall become law, the farmers will "dip their hands into the United States Treasury."
> I do not wish to be understood as making an assault upon the administration, but I do wish to be understood as saying that any member of the Cabinet of the President of the United States who can say that amendment is an invitation to the farmers to "dip their hands into the Treasury of the United States" demonstrates to my mind his unfitness for a place in the Cabinet, when the joint resolution provides one of the most monumental funds in history, through which every class and any class the President desires to admit can dip their hands into the Treasury of the United States. The statement is an irresponsible statement, Mr. President.
> The article continues:
> "Asked what action the administration would take on demands * * * to remove the processing taxes on cotton"—
> Let me digress right now to say that I have never asked that the processing tax on cotton alone be removed. I have said that the time would come when we should be obliged to lift the processing tax on meat, on bread, and on clothing; but the Secretary of Agriculture says that if the present price of cotton continues, the processing tax is much more likely to be raised! He also says that the processing tax does not affect the consumption of cotton and is not responsible for the condition of cotton and all of its allied industries, the textile mills.
> The processing tax may not be the sole cause of the trouble which cotton is now experiencing, and hardly any well-informed man would so assert. It may not be the sole cause of the difficulties of the textile mills, which today are almost prostrate upon their backs; but it is a factor, and an important factor.
> The only fact I wish to cite in opposition to the Secretary's argument is simply this:
> At the present price of 10½ cents a pound for cotton, the raw material out of which all cotton textiles are made—and I use the figure "10½" cents because it is very near the actual price of cotton yesterday, perhaps at this moment—the processing tax of 4.2 cents a pound, or $21 a bale, is a sales tax of exactly 40 percent upon the raw material; and yet that does not affect the consuming power. The wage, when measured in terms of its purchasing power, is not on the increase in the United States; and that does not affect the consumptive demand, the power to consume, of the American public.
> The processing tax bears heaviest upon American labor, but the Secretary of Agriculture does not know it. Seventy percent of cotton textiles are worn by the men and women who do the physical work of this country; and yet the Secretary of Agriculture thinks it is of no consequence that a way may be found to lift the processing tax upon one of the absolute necessities of life, a necessity felt, of course, most heavily by the men and women who work!

The Secretary goes further—and that is the remarkable feature of his statement—and says that if the present price of cotton continues, it is most likely that the tax will have to be raised!

I do not know how to answer that suggestion. Here is a man who is clothed with the power to raise, fix, manipulate taxes upon bread and meat and clothing, threatening to raise one of those taxes!

At this point, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] relevantly remarked:

Mr. GORE. That is a revenue bill, which does not originate in the House.

Gentlemen of the Senate, think of the sovereign revenue power, the highest power of the Nation, the chief power of Congress, being delegated to a department chief to raise or lower, to impose or withdraw—the power which Chief Justice John Marshall defined as the "power to destroy."

Furthermore, if Senators wish to see and realize the effect of delegating dictatorial powers to a bureau chief, note the press statement of Wallace in denouncing the limitation of 12 months suggested by the Senator from Georgia. The Secretary of Agriculture, instead of welcoming a 12-month limitation of his revenue power, tells the press that instead of removing the processing tax upon cotton—which, as the Senator from Georgia contends, "is a sales tax of 40 percent"—he, Wallace thinks—

There is much more likelihood the processing tax will be raised instead of lowered.

In other words, dictatorship grows by what it feeds on. Give it 6 months, and it wants 2 years. Give it 2 years, and it demands 2 years more, and then a Deleware charter for "perpetual existence."

In commenting upon this wielding of the taxing power by a bureau chief, the Senator from Georgia adds:

He is threatening to raise one of those taxes; and yet there are pending in this body, and in the body at the other end of the Capitol, amendments which propose to give to the Agricultural Administration, to the Secretary of Agriculture, the absolute power to strangle processors and force them and coerce them into compliance with his theory of economics and his theory of justice!

If I were ever inclined to extend the power given under the Agricultural Adjustment Act to those in charge of its administration, I should stop now, when, in the face of a prostrate industry—I am speaking of raw cotton—which, under the combined effect of recovery programs, has lost its foreign customers, has only one friend left, and that is the American cotton spinner, and when that spinner is prostrate upon his back, with mills closing in the East and in the South, with an enormous increase in the relief rolls in both sections of the country, with a daily increase in the relief rolls due to the lay-offs of men because the mills are compelled to close down, the official in charge of the administration of the act threatens to use the power which I am now convinced Congress ought never to have vested in the hands of any one man or group of men, the power of taxation on the very necessities of life, to raise yet higher the burdens of the workingmen of this country, who must use 70 percent of this product and pay 70 percent of this tax.

As to the depressing effect of the A. A. A., not only upon the industry but even upon the price of cotton, the Senator from Georgia, himself a cotton producer, has this to say:

I do not wish to make the statement that he (Wallace) wants to drive the price of cotton down. I merely content myself with the statement that the language he has used is the most effective language he could employ for that purpose if he had such purpose as that. It will be so interpreted all over the South, all over the cotton-growing sections of this country, and if Secretary Wallace, or Mr. Tugwell, or anybody else in the Administration believes that the American farmer is a fool, and that he wanted to submit to all of the restrictive measures that have been imposed upon him, they will have a sad awakening in the immediate future.

Before presenting the data which I have at hand showing the disaster to the grain and livestock industry of the West pursuant to Federal tactics, I desire, first, to quote from the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], following the remarks of the Senator from Georgia, just quoted. The Senator from Oklahoma seemed likewise to question the acts of the Government as having the effect of breaking down not only the market but the prices of farm products. I quote as follows:

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this morning the Secretary of Agriculture made a statement which reacted upon the cotton market to the extent of a fall of something like a dollar a bale. The Government itself owns or has loans on several million bales of cotton, so the statement made by Mr. Wallace is alleged to have had the effect of decreasing the value of the Government's holdings of cotton to the extent of several million dollars. * * * The Department of Agriculture has jurisdiction of the farms and the farmers, embracing some six and a half million farms, and something like 30,000,000 residents upon such farms.

Mr. President, it has always occurred to me that the Secretary of Agriculture had under his special jurisdiction the assisting of the farmers of the country in their production, then assisting the farmers in the distribution of their commodities, and, with those two particular duties, the duty of trying to get for the farmers the highest possible prices for their products. Yet it has seemed, during the past 2 years, that every time farm commodity prices started to rise the Secretary of Agriculture, or someone in his Department, has released a statement which has served to check the rise in the prices of commodities produced by the farmers.

I think I am divulging no confidence when I say that many farmers have the opinion that the Department of Agriculture does not want to see prices rise. I know of numerous farmers who have the conviction that the Department of Agriculture believes that 90 cents a bushel for wheat is sufficient, and that 10 cents a pound for cotton is all that the cotton farmer should secure.

Mr. President, the farmers cannot live and exist on 90-cent wheat and 10-cent cotton.

Following an inquiry from the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] further commented on the attitude of the Federal Government toward agriculture, and especially the effect of Federal activities upon farm price levels:

The farmers of Oklahoma believe that they do not have the kind of a friend at the head of the Department of Agriculture they are entitled to have. They believe that Mr. Wallace takes practically every opportunity to keep the prices of their commodities down.

The farmers of Oklahoma have the conviction that the Department of Agriculture now has its heel upon their necks, and that the Department intends to keep its heel upon the necks of the farmers until such Department gets through the Congress legislation which will permit of regimentation and control of farm production and the farm population of the United States. Having this belief, they resent the practice and the policy of the Agricultural Department in releasing such statements as that given out today. Every time wheat begins to go up in price it seems that out comes a wheat statement which adversely affects the wheat market; and every time cotton starts to rise a few points here comes a statement from the Agricultural Department having the effect of not only checking the rise but causing an outright loss.

So far as my State is concerned, the farmers are not at all in accord with the practices, policies, and program of the Agricultural Department in keeping prices at the present low levels.

This brings me, Mr. President, to what I wish to say with regard to the consensus of rural sentiment in Minnesota and the Northwest on the effect of the A. A. A. and the N. R. A. Were a popular vote of Minnesota taken without Federal interference and domination, there is no question that the vote of Minnesota would be 10 to 1 against both the A. A. A. and the N. R. A. That is the sentiment of all political adherents—Republican, Farmer-Labor, and Democrat. I have even heard Democrats say that if primary elections were now held to select delegates to a national convention of the Democratic Party the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] would have a better chance to secure delegates in a Democratic primary than the present incumbent.

Minnesota and the Middle West have not forgotten what Wallace, General Johnson, and various Federal authorities are alleged to have done to break down the price of wheat and all other farm products in the third week of July 1933—before the A. A. A. checks and the Blue Eagle codes were effective—and when wheat soared to 30 cents above the present Government-controlled levels.

It is freely charged, both by farmers and by produce traders, that the Federal Government authorities, especially the Department of Agriculture and its A. A. A. group, deliberately crashed the grain market at Chicago and throughout the Middle West in July 1933 in order to get a pretext for setting up the A. A. A. and N. R. A.

The point made against the Government is that normal agricultural causes, notably the threatened crop failure in parts of the Northwest, including western Canada, were restoring agricultural prices to normal living standards and saving the farmers on their carry-over without Federal interference. Furthermore, that if the Government had stayed off, if it had not imposed its drastic hand at that time, in July 1933, there would have been no excuse for its domination later. There would have been no need for processing taxes, for crop reduction, for wheat checks, for corn-hog checks, or for any other of the Federal experiments and pretexts for subsidizing the rural sections and destroying their independent productive industries.

The grain price history of July 1933, before the A. A. A. and the N. R. A. appeared on the scene, one may read from the market pages of the press, in brief, as follows:

On July 15, 1933, the crop reporters of the Northwest, including Minnesota, the Dakotas, and Western Canada, reported an American wheat yield 300,000,000 bushels below normal. There had been former rumors of it, but by July 15 all grain authorities confirmed this general report.

From the low point in March, around 59 cents, when the Federal closing of banks crashed the business of the country, the price had been gradually climbing to over the $1 mark at the time of the adjournment of Congress on June 16.

Even that, by the way, is higher than the prevailing price of last week, after nearly 2 years of new-deal experiments with the currency, the N. R. A., and the A. A. A.

The peak came during the 5 days ending July 19, 1933. July and September delivery wheat rose to $1.17, December wheat to $1.20, and May delivery rose to $1.25. That was around 30 cents a bushel higher than the present Chicago prices, after nearly 2 years of Federal emergency experiments.

The normal effect of these price uplifts was to bring from the farms and the country warehouses greater wheat receipts during the single month of July than during the entire previous 6 months of 1933. Indeed, Chicago received more wheat in July 1933 than during the entire quarter—October, November, and December following. Freight car loadings and general trade were up to the level of the prosperous days of 1928.

The effect of the upward trend on wheat was extended to all farm commodities—corn, rye, barley, oats, feed, even hogs, cattle—and developed a demand for farm supplies.

All wheat grades and options rose above the $1 level, while May wheat topped $1.25, where it has never been since. It is now around 95 cents.

Corn, rye, and barley rose by like stages. On Saturday, July 17, July corn in Chicago was 64 cents, September delivery was 69 cents, December 72 cents.

Even cotton felt the market urge and rose to 12 cents, or nearly 2 cents a pound above the present level, and $10 a 500-pound bale higher than after 2 years of the A. A. A. racketeers in plowing under the crop, closing the cotton mills, and beggaring the cotton hands.

The market pages of the daily press read on July 16, 1933:

Farmers are selling their grain on every bulge. * * * Elevators and warehouses and rails are loaded with shipments to realize the good prices.

The financial page of the Chicago Tribune on July 17, 1933, carried the headline:

Grain markets recall the boom of the war days.

On July 18 the headline gave the following succession of economic recoveries:

Headline:

Grains soar to new peaks of public buying.

Headline:

Stocks leap up as good news whets trading.

Headline:

Roads report freight traffic continues rise.

Headline:

Stock boom recalled—prices soar as public jumps into market.

Other headlines contained such features as these:

Wheat yesterday crossed $1.25 line.
Equal to any day in 1928 or 1929.
Cotton up $1.25 a bale.
Corn gains up 4 cents to 10 cents.
Bonds set new highs.
Butter and eggs rise.
Hog prices up 10 cents to 20 cents.
Large trade in corn.
Heavy trade in stocks.
New York stock sales, 6,000,000 shares.

Those were the conditions before the Federal Government appeared upon the scene to crack down and crash the whole upward movement. These were the successive steps by which this crash was effected, by the cooperation, seemingly, of Washington and Wall Street.

Apparently, this boom, based on natural causes, was not in the "brain trust" program. They were not yet ready. Their federally concocted nostrums were not yet on the market. Their publicity advertising, their moving-picture films, and their canned hullabaloo, were not quite ready—and the Middle West was stealing their prospective show.

What made the offense worse was that factory employment had been jumped upward 500,000 before the N. R. A. codes were set.

July 19, 1933, was the day apparently when Washington and Wall Street collaborated to smash the Chicago produce, rail, mill, and stock boom, and the consequent employment gains.

On July 19, 1933, four activities were set loose in Washington and Wall Street:

First. Wallace, by direction of the President, went after the traders who had boosted the grain market following the news of crop shortage, and the Department of Justice took the field to prosecute the traders under the alleged provisions of the Grain Futures Act. The result was that the traders who had boosted the market for the farm carry-over were largely driven into bankruptcy and out of business.

Second. So-called "Brigadier General Johnson", Wall Street agent for putting over the draft law in 1917, and the Administrator of the new N. R. A. opened up with his crack-down speeches against the boom in grain and stocks. He, of course, had the able support of his patron, Barney Baruch. Speculation booms must stop.

Third. The President proclaimed a blanket code for all trade and industry—a wet blanket on all trade and industrial expansion. Sales were cut down, new orders ceased, industrial and financial expansion were cut down by the pall of general uncertainty.

Fourth. Supporting the Washington program, Wall Street started a heavy selling movement. In other words, Wall Street followed Government with a "bear raid."

Everyone knows the effect of this concerted drive. There was a general collapse. The morning press of July 20 carried such headlines as these:

Wheat crashes 10 cents to 13 cents.
Stocks crash—heaviest break in 3 years.
Prices break so fast even bears dazed.
Attack by Johnson, Baruch, and Wall Street.
Roosevelt set blanket code for all United States.
Alcohol pool, Kennedy and Kuhn-Loeb, busts.

Then followed the news of the Department of Agriculture and Department of Justice proceedings in breaking up the western grain boom, and the further news on July 21 that the Chicago, Minneapolis, and Kansas City Grain Exchanges were closed down for 2 days.

On July 21 the 50 leading stocks on the New York Stock Exchange, which averaged 96 on July 18, were down to 86, a drop of 10 points. On July 20 United States Steel was down 6 points, textiles the same, and cotton dropped $4 a bale.

Washington, D. C., news read that Wallace acted on the order of Roosevelt, and that Wallace had invoked the Grain Futures Act against the Chicago market. One news report carried the headline:

"Crack in prices" following the Washington order requiring report of all sales to Secretary Wallace.

On July 22 an editorial leader in Chicago carried the caption:

The paralyzing hand of Government.

A financial headline read:

Stocks plunge over 9,000,000 shares trade—anywhere from $2 to $37 a share below "shake-out bottoms"—bonds follow stocks down—butter and eggs drop in heavy trade—cotton drops $6 a bale.

On the same day the front pages of the daily press carried the first photographs of General Johnson and his lady, his fair secretary, whose salary was jumped thereafter from $25 a week as a temporary to $6,000 per annum. And the "blue eagle" and brass bands and the crack-downers rule the land.

We are asked to perpetuate this crack-down era by a 2-year extension of the N. R. A., by an indefinite extension of the A. A. A., and by voting $4,000,000,000 of extra debt and deficits, or an average of $100 per voter for each of the 40,000,000 voters of our electorate.

We are asked to extend this economic dictatorship over till the fiscal year 1937—by which time the authors of it hope to make their rule permanent. They have already filed their charters carrying the provision, "This corporation shall have perpetual existence", after the Wall Street pattern of holding companies incorporated in Delaware.

Who asks for this prolongation of the powers of the N. R. A. and A. A. A.?

Who asks for this $4,000,000,000 in one sum subject to the allocation of the Executive?

Not the people of the United States, who began the preamble of their Constitution with the words, "We the people of the United States."

No; the demand comes from that branch of the Federal Government which cracks down the people by the use of the N. R. A. and A. A. A. as bludgeons and tax-bleeding battle-axes.

The demand comes from the "allocator" who needs the use of the $4,000,000,000 to carry his "emergency of 1936", which takes place during the months of July to November in the fiscal year 1937.

Our answer on the roll call depends upon whether our fealty is to the people who wrote and live under the Constitution we are here sworn to uphold, or our allegiance to a Federal bureaucracy which is leading us to bankruptcy under a mountain of debt and deficits now piled up to billions above the World War peak.

Are we for the America of the Constitution or for the economic dictatorship that is rocking the Old World?

WORK-RELIEF PROGRAM—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 117) making appropriations for relief purposes.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, exactly 6 weeks ago today this joint resolution was recommitted to the Senate Committee on Appropriations. It is my belief that the joint resolution at that time came much nearer representing the wishes of the Senate of the United States than it now does after 6 weeks have expired. For that reason I feel that the consequences of delay are due to those who at that time recommitted the joint resolution.

Nevertheless, the people of the United States are in need of relief; and, regardless of the question to whom we should allocate the blame, I cannot justify any further delay at this time. For that reason I do not intend to discuss at any length the joint resolution as a whole, or the educational amendment which was adopted by the Senate by a majority of 2 to 1, and which has failed to come out of conference.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] just now stated that in his judgment the conference provision including educational persons among those to whom relief could be granted was a better and a more generous provision than the one adopted by the Senate which earmarked $40,000,000 for keeping the public schools open during the current year. That, of course, is a matter of opinion. I think anyone is privileged to argue that it is a better provision; I think anyone is privileged to argue that it is a more generous provision; but it is certainly not the same provision.

In the first place, the phrase "educational persons" seems to be one so vague that it is left entirely to the administrators to decide exactly how they are going to spend this money.

Who is an "educational person"? He may be a teacher in the public schools. He may be in any one of half a dozen other categories of persons who are engaged in one way or another in the business of education.

According to the conference report, educational persons are included with professional and clerical persons in one phrase of the joint resolution, and it is left to the administrators to decide just what proportion of the $300,000,000 is to be distributed among each of those three classes. I do not believe that is good legislative practice.

I concede freely, of course, Mr. President, that under the joint resolution the President of the United States and those administering the relief under him can do practically what they please with every clause in the joint resolution; and, as a matter of practice, the provision allocating $40,000,000 to the public schools was not mandatory except in form. It provided that not to exceed $40,000,000 should be spent for that purpose, and it allowed the President to spend as much less than $40,000,000 as he chose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that under his amendment not to exceed $40,000,000 of the amount appropriated by the joint resolution was to be available to the States on the basis of demonstrated needs to enable them to maintain their public schools for the remainder of the current school year.

Our committee was advised that a very small portion of that money could be used for the remainder of the current school year. The provision that the conferees made is very much more liberal, and allows them to use a very much larger sum than was provided in the Senator's amendment. I am sure the Senator wanted a larger sum used for educational persons; and, therefore, I think the provision reported by the conferees is infinitely better for the school teachers of the country than the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CUTTING. May I ask the Senator from Tennessee who it was that gave the testimony that they could not spend $30,000,000 to keep the schools going for the remainder of the current year?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know. The question was brought up in the committee, and the committee was of the opinion that only a very small portion of the $40,000,000 could have been used during the current year.

Mr. CUTTING. Then let me quote to the Senator what the Commissioner of Education had to say to the House committee through Dr. Dawson, whom he sent to testify in this matter. Dr. Studebaker himself had previously testified that they would need at least $30,000,000. Mr. GWYNNE asked the question:

> Do you agree with Dr. Studebaker as to the amount? Do you think $30,000,000 would be sufficient?

Dr. Dawson replied:

> I am glad you asked me that. That would depend altogether on what we do. The Relief Administration, in granting aid to some States—for example, Oklahoma—this year, although it was not granted until nearly the 1st of March, agreed to make it retroactive to January 31. If by administrative ruling or consent of the President, or by law or otherwise, we were permitted to make the allocation of these funds retroactive to December 15 or January 1, the $30,000,000 would be hardly enough to do a decent job. If we have to take the money where we find it on April 1, I don't see how we could very well use $30,000,000.
> But I would like to direct your attention to this: Take the State of Tennessee, for instance. I spent a week down there making an investigation a short time ago. They had Federal funds assigned to them last year, and they expect to have them this year. They have in an application, although no action has been taken on it. There are people who have been teaching there since the 15th of January without any hope whatever of being paid, unless the Emergency Relief Administration does pay them. I understand that in the last week or two some of them have given up the ghost and quit. They could not get their board any longer in the communities in which they lived.

The Senator from Tennessee probably is just as familiar with that question as is Dr. Dawson.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, representing the State of Tennessee, I am very much more satisfied with the provision which is in the joint resolution than I would have been with the Senator's amendment. I think it is very much more favorable to the school teachers of my State.

Mr. CUTTING. I am sure the Senator from Tennessee thinks so because he voted against my provision when it was before the Senate, but he is in disagreement with the officials of the Bureau of Education on that question.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I wonder if the Senator has seen a report of the Federal Office of Education which was put out yesterday or the day before?

Mr. CUTTING. Yes; I did see it, Mr. President; and I put a good deal of it in the RECORD.

Mr. COPELAND. I am in the fullest accord with the Senator in his desire to help the schools. I think nothing is more important. I will say for the conferees—I had the misfortune to be one of that group—that there was a considerable amount of discussion of this item, and it was felt by the majority of the conferees that by including "educational persons" in the clause providing $300,000,000 for professional and clerical persons, that something, at least, would be provided. But, of course, that would not help pay the janitors or the ordinary operating expenses of the school.

Mr. CUTTING. I quite agree with the Senator from New York that much has been gained compared to the provision in the joint resolution as it was originally proposed, but I do not think the conference report provides what the Senate wanted.

To answer further the statement of the Senator from Tennessee, I wish to read two more paragraphs from Dr. Dawson:

> If we made this proposition retroactive, to take care of the thousands of these teachers who in good faith have kept the schools open, believing, because of the announcement that was made last October, that the schools were going to be kept open, that the Federal Government would finally come across, we could come pretty near spending $30,000,000.
> Furthermore—

Said Dr. Dawson—and I want to emphasize these words—

> if this $30,000,000 is spent, not only for teachers' salaries but for transportation and for janitor hire, the schools will be much more adequately cared for than if only teachers' salaries are paid. In the State of Arkansas there are children in rural schools that have not had schoolbooks for 3 years. If you bought schoolbooks for some of these children and met other school needs, $30,000,000 would fall away short of what is needed. It depends altogether on what we do, if that is a proper answer to your question.

"It depends altogether on what we do." It depends on whether we want to keep the public schools of the country alive for the remainder of the current year or whether we want to let them fail.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CUTTING. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. Has the Senator a doubt that this provision, as it now exists, would not afford relief if the person who administers it is inclined to aid the schools?

Mr. CUTTING. I think it would afford some relief; but I also think it might provide entirely excessive relief to some people whom the Senate of the United States would not concede to have the same right to the aid of the Federal Government as has the public-school system of the country. I think it leaves it entirely to the administrative officer to decide which person shall receive relief and which shall not. To my mind it is a far more satisfactory way to legislate to have the Congress of the United States state in plain language exactly what it wants to have done. That is what we did in the amendment which was adopted by the Senate on March 20 by a vote of 55 to 25. That is what we are not doing under the present compromise.

Mr. President, I know perfectly well that it is unfair to blame conferees for not obtaining in conference everything the Senate has originally asked. I do think, however, that this particular amendment stands on a little different basis from the usual amendment. In the first place, according to my recollection, it was the only amendment which the Senate adopted on a roll call over the opposition of those who were in charge of the joint resolution. I think Senators will recognize that to secure the adoption of an amendment under such circumstances is not easy and that it cannot be done unless the amendment reflects a very substantial sentiment of this body and has unusual merit.

I am sorry the conferees accepted the substitute, though I am sure they did so in good faith. Nevertheless, I think it is fair to point out to the Senate that a majority of the conferees voted against the amendment on the floor of the Senate, just as a majority of the conferees voted against the relief measure as a whole.

In that connection, I desire to say nothing further except to quote from the remarks of the majority floor leader made on the first of April:

> The theory of a conference—

Said the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]—

> according to general parliamentary law, is that when a measure has been put through the legislative assembly the friends of the legislation usually go on the conference.

Further he said:

> I say that it is not good parliamentary practice, after a measure has been fought out and passed, to entrust it to conferees who were against it.

I stand on that proposition. I think it is sound. I do not believe anyone can challenge the statement which the Senator from Arkansas made on that occasion.

This particular amendment would have taken care of 3,500,000 school children who would otherwise lose the opportunity to attend school for the remainder of this term. I do not mean for a moment that all of them would actually lose it under the compromise agreed to by the conferees. I think Mr. Hopkins and the F. E. R. A. administrators have been very wise and very generous with regard to the school teachers of the country, and a great deal of the money which they are authorized to spend under the compromise will be spent in a proper manner. But may I quote for a moment from what Mr. Hopkins himself said before the House Committee on Education:

> I feel that our office has no business handling this problem. The F. E. R. A. is not set up as an agency competent to deal with school problems. The Office of Education is set up and equipped to do this job.

The Office of Education and the Commissioner of Education and his subordinates have testified repeatedly, in accordance with the survey which they made, that the cost of keeping the schools open during the remainder of the present school year would be somewhere in the neighborhood of $36,000,000. It was to supply that need that I proposed the amendment which the Senate adopted by a vote of 55 to 25.

As matters stand, I wish to invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that, while we have voted vast sums for banks, for business, for industry, for railroads, and for other private interests, we have not spent one penny which has been appropriated directly by act of Congress for the public-school system. The taxpayers, the consumers of the States, who are ordinarily able to take care of their own schools, have suffered so terribly by the depression that they simply cannot handle the problem. It has been argued on the floor of the Senate that the public schools are purely a State question, and that it would establish a bad precedent to have the Federal Government placed in such a position that it would be in any way responsible for them. So we propose to deal with this matter by a form of substitute. By inserting the words "educational persons" we try to reconcile the theory of a relief bill with the practice of keeping the schools open indirectly as has been done throughout the past year.

I think the discussion as to the public-school system, and as to whether it is a Federal or a State responsibility, is entirely too theoretical to satisfy the needs of the coming generation of American citizens. I have not before me at the moment Dr. Studebaker's testimony before the House Committee on Education; but he said, in effect, something like this:

> There are two things that can no longer be argued: First, nobody can argue that the Federal Government should take complete control of the public-school system of the United States. Second, nobody should argue that the Federal Government has no responsibility for the public schools of the United States. The only question from now on is just how much responsibility the Federal Government is going to take and just how much shall be left to the States. That is a serious enough problem for every American citizen to consider during the time which is coming.

So I say, Mr. President, that under this compromise we are not settling the question at all. Under ordinary circumstances I think the Senate would be thoroughly justified in sending the joint resolution back to conference and insisting on our amendment. From the temper shown by the members of the House Committee on Education, I have no doubt that if this subject were left to a separate vote of the House of Representatives they would accept the amendment of the Senate. I appreciate, however, the fact that the people of the country, the people of every State in the Union, are demanding the immediate passage of the relief joint resolution. I do not propose to be responsible for any further delay, much as I regret the action of the conferees on this particular question.

As I see it, the so-called "compromise" is not a compromise; it is a complete surrender on the part of the Senate conferees with regard to a matter which was voted on by the Senate and voted on favorably by a majority of 55 to 25.

It is the same old story, of course. We cannot possibly hope to have the views of the Senate successful in conference unless we do something, whether by way of a change in our rules or otherwise, to see to it that the Senate conferees are in sympathy with the position of the Senate. No personal blame attaches to the particular conferees concerned in this question. It is a bad system. It was so characterized by the majority floor leader, and I do not believe there is a single Member of the Senate who would really care to defend it.

I think that unless we are disposed to surrender the rights of the two Houses of Congress to legislate, unless we are disposed to allow a small meeting of conferees to write our legislation for us, we shall have to start in at once and try to revise our present system of getting legislative action. If we do not do so, the results in the case of every major piece of legislation are going to be exactly the same as we now find them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DICKINSON (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. If he were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay." I withhold my vote.

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], who is absent. I transfer my pair with him to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. COPELAND (after having voted in the affirmative). Inadvertently, I voted a moment ago. I had forgotten that I had promised the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] that I would pair with him on this question. Therefore I withdraw my vote, but announce that I should vote for the joint resolution if at liberty to do so, and if the Senator from Louisiana were present and at liberty to vote he would vote against it.

Mr. COPELAND subsequently said: I find that I can transfer my pair with the Senator from Louisiana to the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO]. If the Senator from California were present he would vote "yea", and if the Senator from Louisiana were present he would vote "nay." I vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], caused by illness in his family; the necessary absence of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], and the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO]. The latter Senator's vote has been explained. I am authorized to say that were the others of whom I have spoken present they would vote "yea."

As to the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], I also understand that were she present she would vote "yea."

Mr. BULKLEY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who is necessarily absent. I am advised that if he were present he would vote against the conference report, and has been specially paired against it. That leaves me free to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LOGAN. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent; but I am advised that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] is absent on account of illness. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] is necessarily absent. Both of these Senators, if present, would vote "yea."

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] has a special pair on this question with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD]. If present, the Senator from Minnesota would vote "yea" and the Senator from Wyoming would vote "nay."

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] has been called from the Senate on official business. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is detained on account of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 66, nays 13, as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Vice President be authorized to sign, after the recess or adjournment of the Senate today, the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 117) making appropriations for relief purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I did not care to prolong the discussion on the conference report by interrupting Senators who were speaking on the subject, except in one or two cases, but I feel, in view of what was said by the majority leader, and what was reiterated today by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], that I ought to say that in naming the conferees on the part of the Senate on the joint resolution I followed what I understood to be the universal custom in the Senate. I did not for a moment pause to inquire how the senior members of the Committee on Appropriations voted on the passage of the joint resolution, and as to some of them I did not know, actually, how they voted.

I have the conception that a Senator who understands his duty in these matters, and who has a proper view of the proprieties, could be honest and straightforward in his deliberations on a conference committee when appointed to adjust the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that was all that actuated me in naming the senior members of the Committee on Appropriations, both Democrats and Republicans, to confer with the House conferees.

I think perhaps the members of the conference committee, without any appeal from me, would attest the fact that during the entire proceedings I sought in every reasonable way to justify the action of the Senate on all matters committed to us, except as to one amendment; and the Senate was put upon notice, in a civil but not in an arbitrary way, that I personally expected to recede on that amendment. The author of the amendment understood that then, as he was good enough to indicate today he understood it. As to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], we undertook to justify the Senate's position, but finally receded.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] has suggested that the House would very readily accept his amendment. If that be so, I might inquire why the House did not make the provision in the joint resolution, as it had ample opportunity to do. It heard these various educators present their case. I had not the pleasure of hearing them on the Senate side. If the House was in favor of the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico, why did it object to accepting the amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know a majority of the House Members favored the amendment, and, as I recall, but one objected to the amendment.

Mr. GLASS. One?

Mr. McKELLAR. One, as I remember, and that was Mr. OLIVER, if I may use his name.

Mr. CUTTING. I was not referring to the House conferees. I was referring to the Members of the House of Representatives, who, I think the Senator will admit, never had an opportunity to vote on this amendment.

Mr. GLASS. They never have an opportunity to vote on anything on which a vote is not desired.

So, standing on the floor here for 3 weeks, hardly able physically to endure the task, I defended every amendment that the Appropriations Committee of the Senate put on the joint resolution but one, and I put the committee on notice that I would not defend that amendment and would not vote for it, and if it were not modified, I would not vote for the joint resolution. It was not modified, and I did not vote for the joint resolution, and I have no apology to make to any human being on earth for having voted against it.

The joint resolution being committed to my charge as a conferee, however, and having striven for many days to maintain the position of the Senate and to maintain the position of the conferees with respect to what they regarded a vitally essential amendment, I presented the conference report, and today have voted for it, without the slightest alteration of my opinion as to the unwisdom of appropriating this great amount of money and thus, in my view, endangering the public credit.

If there are any Senators who think any impropriety was involved in my course, if there are any Senators who think I could not be honest and straightforward in the circumstances recited by me, of course, they are at liberty so to think; but I have no apologies to make for any vote I cast in committee, or for any attitude I assumed in conference, or for any vote, however inconsistent it may appear, which I have cast here in the Senate.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I desire very sincerely to compliment the conferees for the way in which they have brought back amendment no. 5, the highway amendment, which I offered to the joint resolution. I am sure that the text of that legislation as finally agreed upon will be generally satisfactory to the State highway authorities throughout the Nation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Were there changes made in the amendment in conference?

Mr. HAYDEN. Changes were made in the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. What were the changes? Will the Senator state them?

Mr. HAYDEN. The amendment as adopted by the Senate provided that certain sums authorized to be appropriated by the act of June 18, 1934, should be made available out of the $4,000,000,000. That appropriation was eliminated from the joint resolution. The substance of my amendment, however, and the most important part of it, that all funds for highways and related projects shall be apportioned among the States in the usual manner and expended by the State highway departments, is retained in the amendment. That, being the essential provision, is retained, and all who are interested in road construction are entirely happy about it. The eliminated appropriations, I may say to the Senator, will all be carried in the Interior and Agriculture appropriation bills for the next fiscal year. So that every dollar now authorized by law for highway purposes will be made available.

In order that the Senate may be informed as to the apportionment of funds appropriated by the joint resolution, both for highways and grade-crossing elimination, I ask to have a tabulation printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which shows what each State will receive out of each $100,000,000 allotted to such purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Sample apportionments of $100,000,000

State	Basis of apportionment
	Highways [1]	Grade crossings [2]
Alabama	$2,129,000	$2,073,000

[2] ⅓ population; ¼ mile Federal-aid highway system; ¼ mile railroad.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word in reference to the conference report.

Since I have been in the Senate I have served on a great many conferences. With respect to the conference which has just closed I desire to say that I have never known any man to act more sincerely, more conscientiously, more honestly, and more vigorously than did the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. If he had been one of the most earnest advocates of the joint resolution, if he had prepared every line and word in it, he could not have been more devoted to what the Senate directed him to do in making him a conferee.

I voted for the joint resolution, as everyone knows, and have supported it all the way through, as everyone also knows; and I take the greatest pleasure in testifying to the absolute fairness and correctness of the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee in every essential particular connected with it.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, in view of what was just said by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], I desire to assure him and other Senators that I have never had the remotest conception of implying in any way that his views on the joint resolution as a whole would influence him in the position he would as a conferee take about it.

I think I stated in the remarks I made a few moments ago that I was completely certain that the Senator from Virginia and other members of the conference committee had done as well as they thought possible with the situation as it arose. I am casting no blame either on the present conferees or any other conferees appointed by the Senate. I was calling attention to what I think, echoing the words of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], is a bad principle.

The Senator from Virginia has said quite correctly that it has become the custom of the Senate for the chairman of the committee in charge of a bill to suggest the members of his committee in the order of seniority on both sides. It is the custom I am assailing and not the personnel of the conferees nor the action taken by the conferees. The custom is one which is not authorized by the manual of the Senate relating to conferences. I invite the attention of the Senate to the wording of a part of section 17 of that manual, as follows:

> Statement of principles governing the selection of conferees on the part of the House, namely:
> (NOTE.—These principles and provisions are also applicable to the Senate and in harmony with its practice.)
> The House members of conference committees, called the managers on the part of the House, are appointed by the Speaker.
> (NOTE.—The Senate members of conference committees, called the managers on the part of the Senate, are appointed by the Presiding Officer, by unanimous consent, under the custom of the Senate. Rule XXIV, clause 1, provides that all committees of the Senate shall be appointed by ballot unless otherwise ordered.)

That is almost a verbatim statement of rule XXIV of the Senate. After speaking of Senate committees it provides:

> All other committees shall be appointed by ballot, unless otherwise ordered, and a plurality of votes shall appoint.

While the custom has grown up of allowing conferees to be appointed by the Senator in charge of a bill, it has no justification in the statement of the rule governing conferences which is provided for in the conference manual.

I shall read one more paragraph from the conference manual. Referring to the conferees, it provides:

> They are usually three in number, but on important measures the number is sometimes increased. In the selection of the managers the two large political parties are usually represented, and, also, care is taken that there shall be a representation of the two opinions which almost always exists on subjects of importance. Of course, the majority party and the prevailing opinion have the majority of the managers.

These words I should like to emphasize:

> Of course, the majority party and the prevailing opinion have the majority of the managers.
> It is also almost the invariable practice to select managers from the members of the committee which considered the bill. * * * But sometimes, in order to give representation to a strong or prevailing sentiment in the House, the Speaker goes outside the ranks of the committee.

It therefore becomes apparent that only two methods are suggested as to the selection of conferees. One is in accordance with the rules of the Senate that they shall be appointed by ballot, unless otherwise ordered. The other is that they shall be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate.

The other day when a conference committee was appointed on another matter of legislation the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] declined to serve on the ground that he was opposed to the action of the Senate. The Vice President then in the chair made the following statement:

> The Senator from Michigan and other Senators realize that ordinarily the Chair does not appoint conferees. The conferees are suggested by the Senator in charge of the bill, and the Chair formally appoints the Senators whose names are sent up by the Senator in charge of the bill. Otherwise the Chair might exercise his discretion with reference to those who are in sympathy with the bill and those who are opposed to it.

My only reason for referring to the matter at all, and I want to reiterate this for the benefit of the Senator from Virginia and other members of the conference committee, is not to cast blame for anything they have done but in an effort to call the attention of the Senate that the sooner we return to the principles originally laid down for conferences, the better it will be for the cause of legislation.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOOD, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 5) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein; to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and for other purposes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, what is the pending amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The pending amendment is the amendment of Mr. BAILEY, as follows:

> In section 711 (a), on page 45, line 7, it is proposed to insert a semicolon after the word "found" and to add the following:
> "Provided, however, That not more than one seizure action shall be instituted in cases of alleged misbranding, except upon order to show cause, and then upon a showing by the Secretary that such article is misbranded in manner or degree as to render such article imminently dangerous to health, or that such alleged misbranding has been the basis of a prior judgment in favor of the United States in a criminal prosecution or libel for condemnation proceeding respecting such article under this act: And provided further, That said single seizure action shall, on motion, be removed for trial to a jurisdiction of reasonable proximity to the residence of the claimant of such article."
> In section 401 (a) (1), on page 13, it is proposed to strike out all of lines 19 and 20.
> In section 402, on page 16, it is proposed to insert a new subsection between lines 2 and 3, to be designated as (b), and to read as follows:
> "If it is dangerous to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising thereof."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent was granted to consider the three amendments as one.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I do not see the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] in the Chamber.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that the Senator from North Carolina was very unexpectedly called to his home in North Carolina this afternoon by reason of a very serious heart attack suffered by a member of his family and therefore will be out of the city until Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am exceedingly sorry the Senator from North Carolina was called away because of illness in his family. If he were here, if he cared to speak further on the pending amendment, undoubtedly what he would say would accord with his statement of April 3. He said then at the end of his remarks that he had made his point. If Senators who wish to know what the Senator from North Carolina would say if he were present—though, of course, I am not authorized to speak for him—will turn to page 4914 of the RECORD of April 3, they will find incorporated in his speech the criticism the Senator had of the provision which he seeks to amend.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. It has been stated to me that a large number of amendments will be proposed to the pending bill; I do not know how many; but it seems apparent that consideration of the bill cannot be concluded this afternoon unless the Senate should choose to remain in session for an indefinite time. It has been my thought that the Senate should recess or adjourn over the week-end when it completed its labors today, though I had hoped that the pending bill might be disposed of.

I invite an expression of opinion from the Senator from New York as to whether he thinks it is possible to dispose of the measure this afternoon.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to say—and then I shall reply directly to what the Senator from Arkansas has suggested—that certainly no one here is more anxious to get home than am I. I have been in the Senate about as steadily this week, I believe, as any Member of the Senate.

According to the current gossip there is an effort being made to recommit the bill. I wish to have Senators, especially the new Senators, know what that means.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to say to the Senator that it is not a matter of current gossip that a motion to recommit the bill is to be made. I stated to the Senator in the open Senate last night that it was my purpose today, if I should be afforded an opportunity to do so, to move to recommit the bill with instructions to report back a bill within 1 week. I have not had the opportunity today of doing that because other amendments have been pending; but at the first parliamentary opportunity that is my purpose. The Senator, therefore, does not need to rely on current gossip for that statement.

Mr. COPELAND. I am very glad to have the positive declaration of the Senator that he intends to ask that the bill be recommitted. I desire to make a statement for the benefit of new Senators here who perhaps have not become familiar with the rules. I think the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and I never will become familiar with the rules, but I know enough about the rules to know that when a bill is recommitted to the committee it means that every amendment which has been made to the bill—in this case every amendment made through this week of effort—is wiped out. The bill goes back to the committees in the same form in which it came to the Senate from the committee.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, that would only make the twenty-first draft of the bill instead of the twentieth with the various amendments. The Senator from New York for some time has been in the habit of drafting new bills and asking to have them reported from the committee on the very morning on which they were first presented.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, when I have a matter in which I wish to delay, to have it go on as long as a Federal Trade Commission "cease and desist" order would require where there are the possibilities of delay, I shall employ the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I have great respect for the medical ability of the Senator from New York, but not so much respect for the legal opinions which he so frequently expresses.

Mr. COPELAND. I have great respect for the legal ability of the Senator from Missouri, but I have little respect for his medical opinions or his views about foods and drugs. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. A parliamentary inquiry: Is there not now an amendment pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. A second parliamentary inquiry: If a motion were made to refer the amendment to the committee, would not that carry the bill along with the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would not.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have been advised otherwise by very high authority.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, Senators will see what the situation is. If the alert, astute, legalistic Senator from Missouri shall have his way, and the bill shall be recommitted, he will have accomplished his full purpose. All the amendments which we have striven to perfect and adopt will be destroyed if the bill shall be recommitted.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. And, of course, I assume, Mr. President, that that is what the Senator from Missouri desires, or he would not say that he is going to make the motion. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. I believe I desire to wait and claim the floor in my own right at the conclusion of the Senator's remarks.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I said yesterday, absolving Senators, that every slimy serpent of a vile manufacturer of patent medicine is right now working his wiggling way around this Capitol. I have heard heretofore about the effort dear old Dr. Wiley made to secure the passage of the original law 28 years ago. Historically I was familiar with it, but now from experience I am familiar with it. I know the devious ways of those who are seeking to defeat the effort of the Congress to give protection to the health and lives of our people.

Mr. President, if the Senator desires to recommit this bill, and in that way to destroy everything we have done and desire to do, I am willing to have him make the effort. Every amendment already adopted will be wiped out if we shall recommit the bill.

Now I will yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. I do not wish the Senator to yield to me. I wish the floor in my own right.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well; I yield the floor to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK obtained the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. A parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, there are several amendments pending, and amendments are still in order, are they not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment pending, offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. CONNALLY. I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is approaching 6 o'clock. I am morally certain that there is no fair prospect of disposing of this bill today.

Mr. CLARK. I can assure the Senator that there is not.

Mr. ROBINSON. I agree with the Senator from New York that a motion to recommit the bill, if intended to be made, should have been made in the beginning. Senators who intended to make such a motion might very well have considered the advisability of spending so much time on amendments and then moving to recommit, with the result, if the motion should prevail, that all the work done by the Senate in the past several days would be lost.

Mr. CLARK. Let me say to the Senator from Arkansas that, of course, there has been some extraneous discussion by Senators who did not address themselves to the bill at all; but, so far as discussion of the bill itself is concerned, I venture to say that while the bill has been under consideration in the Senate, three times as much time has been taken up by the Senator from New York himself as by all other Senators combined. In other words, it seemed to me to be one of the most unusual cases I have ever seen—what amounted to a filibuster conducted by the Senator in charge of the bill, so far as the time of the Senate was concerned.

Mr. President, I have no desire whatever to delay the Senate on this matter. I do say that the debate, the amendments which have been taken up, and the provisions which have been examined, conclusively demonstrate that the bill should be recommitted for the purpose of having the Commerce Committee do what they ought to have done in the first place, or in the second place, or in the third place, and what the Senator from New York, the chairman of the committee, never would permit them to do; namely, take up the bill paragraph by paragraph and perfect it. My proposal, when I have an opportunity to offer it, will not be for any delay in connection with the measure but to recommit the bill with instructions that it be perfected by the committee and reported back within 1 week.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator did not permit me to conclude what I rose to say.

Mr. CLARK. I beg the Senator's pardon. I had no idea of cutting him off.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that, and I am not complaining; but I wish to make clear to the Senator from Missouri and to the Senator from New York that if the bill is not to be proceeded with to a conclusion today—and I do not think that can be done—I see nothing to be gained by continuing the present session of the Senate. A number of Senators have already left to keep engagements, and others soon will leave. What I am seeking to do is to have the question determined now whether or not it is expected that we shall go on. If we are to wait until all the amendments shall have been disposed of, and then have a motion to recommit, all the amendments and the motion to recommit will be subject to debate, and, no doubt, will be debated; so I suggest the advisability of recessing now, if that is satisfactory to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the parliamentary situation is an unfortunate one. We have been here all the week. I have talked far more than I should, and I apologize to the Senator from Missouri for having offended him by using so much time.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator has not offended me. He may take as much time as he pleases.

Mr. COPELAND. I have talked because I have an interest in the welfare of the mothers and babies and the other citizens of the country. I want to have a law which will protect them. All the amendments now pending which I have read, however—and I know the Senator from Missouri has no such thought in his mind; I absolve him, of course—seek to weaken the bill beyond the standards already fixed by the present law.

Somebody might have thought I was bluffing yesterday when I said that if the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina and the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri should be adopted I would have no further interest in the bill. I would not have. I repeat that.

If the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina were agreed to, and all the things were accomplished which he wishes to bring about by his amendment, he would breakdown the present law; the law would be made much weaker. The patent-medicine makers who exploit the public by the sale of valueless or outrageously improper drugs would, from my standpoint, be better off with that amendment in the bill than without it. They might well be gleeful.

I was not bluffing last night when I said what I repeat now: If that amendment should be adopted, and if the Clark amendment to send the law to the Federal Trade Commission should be adopted, I would have no further interest in the pending measure.

The Clark amendment proposes to send the advertising enforcement to the Federal Trade Commission. As an actual fact—and I have the material to show it when the time comes—it might be 13 years before an offender would get a cease-and-desist order.

The Senator from Missouri talked yesterday about jokers in the pending bill. The most sublime of jokers, the blue ribbon of all jokers ever attempted to be inserted in a legislative act, is to be found in the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. It lies in his proposal to transfer this matter of advertising control over false and misleading advertising to the Federal Trade Commission, to be dealt with there "in the same manner and by the same methods as provided for the prevention of the use of unfair methods of competition." Shades of all we have counted great! That is, indeed, the blue ribbon of all jokers!

If the amendment of the Senator from Missouri were to prevail, the American people would be exploited from now to kingdom come; if the law persisted, during the next 10 years millions of persons would die because of the failure of the law to protect the country. It would be an outrageous thing to permit the enactment of such an amendment.

I say again, Mr. President, that if the two amendments offered—one by the Senator from North Carolina and the other by the Senator from Missouri—should be adopted, I should want the bill recommitted and utterly destroyed. I would far rather have the American people go on under the present law than to have imposed upon it the weak, anemic, feeble procedure which would be followed under the law as it would be if amended in accordance with these two amendments.

The only reason in the world why I have detained the Senate even this long has been to call attention to the fact that this is Friday night; tonight, and tomorrow, and all day Sunday, and until noon on Monday, there will be sheaves of telegrams sent out all over this country to the makers of these vile medicinal products, and to a lot of newspapermen who are deceived into the thought that they are imposed upon by the bill. The only way the latter are imposed upon by the bill is that, if we enact the measure, such vile stuff as that I have exhibited privately because of its nature, could no longer be printed. To that extent, and to that extent only, can the pocketbooks of publishers be adversely affected by the enactment of the pending bill.

So far as clean newspapers are concerned, so far as those are concerned who desire not to exploit the public, so far as honest manufacturers of foods and drugs and cosmetics are concerned, there is not one thing in the bill they need fear.

Beginning now, at 6 o'clock, all night tonight and all day tomorrow and the next day, the wires will be hot. By the time we meet at noon on Monday those who desire the amendments offered by the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Missouri will be encouraged and reenforced by reason of the fact that on every senatorial desk will be a file of telegrams saying, "Do not vote for this bill. Vote to recommit it. Vote for the Bailey amendment. Vote for the Clark amendment."

Mr. President, that is what is going to happen. Senators will see that come to pass. Like the Senator from Louisiana, I am going to say next Monday, "I told you so."

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator, of course, is familiar with the fact that the Department of Agriculture itself has spent something like a quarter of a million dollars of public funds for propaganda in support of this bill.

Mr. COPELAND. A quarter of a million dollars? I defy the Senator from Missouri to show that they expended a quarter of a million dollars in propaganda for the bill.

Mr. CLARK. Of course, it has been very adroitly covered up.

Mr. COPELAND. Undoubtedly!

Mr. CLARK. The Senator knows that it has been covered up by calling them inspection trips, men going around and addressing women's clubs, and that sort of thing.

Mr. COPELAND. It has been so adroitly covered up that no one has discovered it but the astute, alert, and able lawyer from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. That is very far from being true.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will whoever has the floor yield to me to move that we proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. COPELAND. I have the floor, and I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, when the Senator from New York has spoken for about an hour mainly abusing me, I should like to have an opportunity to speak a few moments for myself.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then probably the Senator from New York would like to have an opportunity to speak more.

Mr. CLARK. That is all right.

Mr. ROBINSON. I had thought I would move for an executive session, if we were to take a recess, but if the Senator would like to proceed, I am willing that he shall do so.

Mr. CLARK. I am not anxious to go on, but I do object to the Senator from New York taking the floor and holding it, undertaking to attack me, and then have the Senate adjourn without an opportunity to reply.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand the Senator from New York is not willing to yield to be abused. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK. When the Senator yields——

Mr. COPELAND. I have no objection. I will yield to the Senator from Missouri to abuse me or to do whatever he pleases.

Mr. CLARK. I do not want to abuse the Senator. As a matter of fact, I agree with every other Member of this body that it would be most calamitous if the Senator should stand out from under and let the universe go to smash.

Mr. President, if the Senator from New York would withdraw his interest in the pending bill he could possibly refer to draft no. 1 of his bill, which, he has stated frankly to the committee, appalled him when he read it. He stated he did not know who was the author of it, and he stated yesterday to the Senate that he was shocked when he read the bill of which he was the putative author.

He might go back to draft no. 2, he might go back to draft no. 3, he might go back to draft no. 4, he might go back to draft no. 19, he might go back to draft no. 20, all of which were changed in many essential particulars, without having the country suffer any great misfortune at the loss of his interest in support of draft no. 21, or draft no. 22.

The whole purpose of the motion to reconsider, as I have stated repeatedly, is to have the Committee on Commerce do what it ought to have done in the first place, consider this legislation, and fight out certain broad questions of policy which are involved. The broad questions of policy which are involved are, first, the question whether or not the present law should be strengthened and the loopholes closed; then whether the law should be extended to the field of cosmetics by proper amendment to the present law, and whether we should preserve the mass of decisions over a period of 30 years, and preserve the laws passed in 46 different States for the purpose of having the States cooperate with the Federal Government, or whether all that should be wiped out at the whim and caprice of the Bureau of Food and Drugs of the Department of Agriculture and the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that if the bill is to be recommitted, the motion should be made now.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, as I understand, the motion is not in order now.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator can move to recommit the amendment.

Mr. CLARK. I make the motion, if that is in order. I say I do not desire to have it acted on tonight, because I desire as full an attendance of the Senate as may be obtained.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. There are enough Members present so a vote can be had tonight. Why not make the motion now?

Mr. CLARK. Many Senators are not here, Mr. President, or have left with the understanding that nothing so absurd and ridiculous would be attempted as to take up the bill for consideration at this hour of the evening after a very hard week in the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. Perhaps we can begin to work in the committee tomorrow morning if the bill is recommitted. The Senator says he is anxious to do that. Why not make the motion now?

Mr. CLARK. I do not choose to make the motion now, Mr. President. I choose to make the motion when we can have adequate and full consideration of it.

The other more general policy which should be decided by the Commerce Committee in regular session and in customary manner is the question of whether or not the authority now vested in the Federal Trade Commission over advertising, which has been exercised over a period of many years without any criticism by anyone, in the highest possible manner of efficiency, should be withdrawn from them and transferred to the whim of a bureaucrat in the Agricultural Department, or whether that authority should be extended from its present narrow limits of unfair competition to include the subjects provided for in this bill.

In addition to that, Mr. President, it is very necessary, in my judgment, that the language of the bill should be considered in detail. The Senator from New York, confessedly not a lawyer, possibly is not aware of some of the crimes in language committed in this bill. We have discovered several of them here in the Senate. We have found, for instance, that electrical apparatus for conditioning rooms would, under the terms of the bill, if permitted to stand, be declared a drug. We have found that goods which are misbranded would be declared adulterated, and dealt with as such. We have discovered that in cases where the courts of the United States declare one of the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture invalid upon any ground, the Secretary would be authorized and permitted under this bill to turn around and, without hearing, without notice, and without review, put into effect the very same regulation the next day as a temporary regulation for a period of 6 months.

Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate for more than a moment more; but I do wish to say that my friend from New York finds it very much easier to talk about patent-medicine manufacturers, about some advertising page which he claims to have seen somewhere, about generalities and obscurities, than to defend the specific terms of his bill in any particular in which it is attacked.

No matter what joker may be found in the bill—and I assume that is the reason why the Senator so stoutly resisted any effort to give the bill real consideration in the committee—any objection to the language of the bill is met by the Senator from New York by producing a photostat copy of some unknown newspaper which he claims represents very bad advertising practice, and which probably would be as much outlawed before the Federal Trade Commission, if the authority were transferred to it, as by a bureaucrat in the Department of Agriculture. The Senator refers to patent-medicine propaganda, and absolutely refuses to discuss even for a moment the actual terms he has written into the bill.

The purpose of my motion to recommit, when I shall make it, will be to afford an opportunity to get the Senator from New York and his friends from the Food and Drug Administration into a committee room in order to sit down and go over the bill paragraph by paragraph.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the nominations of postmasters on the calendar are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. ROBINSON. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in legislative session, took a recess until Monday, April 8, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, APRIL 5, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Holy Spirit, we praise Thee, for Thou dost exalt experience and character to the altitudes of blessedness and peace. Preserve us from being spiritually marred in just the ebb and flow of work. Heavenly Father, may we be one with Thee, in every conflict with the world, in every bitter wrestling with passion and appetite and with every strange struggle with the forces of darkness. O allure us by the vision of the Master's earthly grandeur; unseal the fountain of prayer and inspiration and lift us to the tablelands where we may serve and shape our destiny. Obeying our finer sense, reenforce our courage so that we maintain a conscience void of offense toward God and man. We pray that we may be anchored to the eternal verities and herein realize the ideal right. Here may every duty be wrought in the spirit of consecration to the basic institutions of our Republic. In Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 619. An act to amend section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920; and

S. 1068. An act to establish a commission for the settlement of the special claims comprehended within the terms of the convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States concluded April 24, 1934.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR RELIEF (H. J. RES. 117)

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 117) making appropriations for relief purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas calls up the conference report on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 117), and asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 117) "making appropriations for relief purposes" having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10, 11, 12, 16, 20, 25, and 28.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 4, 6, 8, 9, 17, 21, 22, and 24, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by the said amendment insert the following:

"Except as hereinafter provided, all sums allocated from the appropriation made herein for the construction of public highways and other related projects (except within or adjacent to national forests, national parks, national parkways, or other Federal reservations) shall be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture in the manner provided by section 204 (b) of the National Industrial Recovery Act for expenditure by the State highway departments under the provisions of the Federal Highway Act of November 9, 1921, as amended and supplemented, and subject to the provisions of section 1 of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 993): Provided, That any amounts allocated from the appropriation made herein for the elimination of existing hazards to life at railroad grade crossings, including the separation or protection of grades at crossings, the reconstruction of existing railroad grade-crossing structures, and the relocation of highways to eliminate grade crossings, shall be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture to the several States (including the Territory of Hawaii and the District of Columbia), one-half on population as shown by the latest decennial census, one-fourth on the mileage of the Federal-aid highway system as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, and one-fourth on the railroad mileage as determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission, to be expended by the State highway departments under the provisions of the Federal Highway Act of November 9, 1921, as amended and supplemented, and subject to the provisions of section 1 of such act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 993); but no part of the funds apportioned to any State or Territory under this joint resolution for public highways and grade crossings need be matched by the State or Territory: And provided further, That the President may also allot funds made available by this joint resolution for the construction, repair, and improvement of public highways in Alaska, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, and money allocated under this joint resolution to relief agencies may be expended by such agencies for the construction and improvement of roads and streets: Provided, however, That the expenditure of funds from the appropriation made herein for the construction of public highways and other related projects shall be subject to such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe for carrying out this paragraph and preference in the employment of labor shall be given (except in executive, administrative, supervisory, and highly skilled positions) to persons receiving relief, where they are qualified, and the President is hereby authorized to predetermine for each State the hours of work and the rates of wages to be paid to skilled, intermediate, and unskilled labor engaged in such construction therein: Provided further, That rivers and harbors projects, reclamation projects (except the drilling of wells, development of springs and subsurface waters), and public buildings projects undertaken pursuant to the provisions of this joint resolution shall be carried out under the direction of the respective permanent Government departments or agencies now having jurisdiction of similar projects."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the last word in the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "joint resolution"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Any Administrator or other officer, or the members of any central board, or other agency, named to have general supervision at the seat of government over the program and work contemplated under the appropriation made in section 1 of this joint resolution and receiving a salary of $5,000 or more per annum from such appropriation, and any State or regional administrator receiving a salary of $5,000 or more per annum from such appropriation (except persons now serving as such under other law), shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided, That the provisions of section 1761 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to any such appointee and the salary of any person so appointed shall not be increased for a period of 6 months after confirmation."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. In carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution the President is authorized to establish and prescribe the duties and functions of necessary agencies within the Government."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"SEC. 7. The President shall require to be paid such rates of pay for all persons engaged upon any project financed in whole or in part, through loans or otherwise, by funds appropriated by this joint resolution, as will in the discretion of the President accomplish the purposes of this joint resolution, and not affect adversely or otherwise tend to decrease the going rates of wages paid for work of a similar nature.

"The President may fix different rates of wages for various types of work on any project, which rates need not be uniform throughout the United States: Provided, however, That whenever permanent buildings for the use of any department of the Government of the United States or the District of Columbia, are to be constructed by funds appropriated by this joint resolution, the provisions of the Act of March 3, 1931 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 40, sec. 276a), shall apply but the rates of wages shall be determined in advance of any bidding thereon."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"SEC. 14. The authority of the President under the provisions of the Act entitled 'An Act for the relief of unemployment through the performance of useful public work, and for other purposes', approved March 31, 1933, as amended, is hereby continued to and including March 31, 1937."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "15"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "16"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 117) making appropriations for relief purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendment no. 1: In lieu of the four general purposes of the House bill stricken out by the Senate and in lieu of the provision in the Senate bill "to provide relief and work relief" there is inserted the following: "To provide relief, work relief, and to increase employment by providing for useful projects."

On amendment no. 2: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the provision in the House bill that the expenditure of the appropriation shall be made under the direction of the President "in such manner and for such purposes and/or such projects, Federal or non-Federal, as shall be adapted to the accomplishment of any one or more of the objectives specified in clause (1), (2), (3), or (4)."

On amendment no. 3: Provides for the allocations as set forth in the Senate amendment, modified as follows:

Makes clear that the restoration of certain amounts to the Public Works Administration is authorized.

Provides for "assistance for educational, professional, and clerical persons", with an allocation of $300,000,000, instead of "projects for professional and clerical persons", in the same amount.

Provides for "loans or grants, or both, for projects of States, Territories, possessions, including subdivisions and agencies thereof, municipalities, and the District of Columbia, and self-liquidating projects of public bodies thereof, where, in the determination of the President, not less than 25 percent of the loan or the grant, or the aggregate thereof, is to be expended for work under each particular project" in the sum of $900,000,000, in lieu of "loans or grants for public projects of States and Territories and the District of Columbia or political subdivisions or agencies thereof", in the same amount.

Makes provision for prevention of stream pollution.

In the final proviso prohibiting expenditures for munitions, warships, or military or naval matériel, makes clear that the appropriation may be used for new buildings, reconstruction of buildings and other improvements in military or naval reservations, etc.

On amendment no. 4: Strikes out of the House bill, as proposed by the Senate, the authority that "specific powers hereinafter vested in the President shall not be construed as limiting the general powers and discretion vested in him by this section."

On amendment no. 5: Retains in substance the Senate amendment, but strikes out of that part relating to highways and grade crossings all provision for the expenditure of sums authorized for the fiscal year 1936 under the Highway Act of June 18, 1934, and provides that the expenditure of funds in the joint resolution for highways and other related projects "shall be subject to such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe for carrying out this paragraph"; and in the final proviso relating to the carrying on of rivers and harbors projects, reclamation projects, and public buildings projects, inserts the Senate provision modified so as to make clear its intent.

On amendment no. 6; Inserts the amendment proposed by the Senate authorizing the use of funds made available by the joint resolution for the purpose of making loans to finance the purchase of farm lands and equipment by farmers, farm tenants, croppers, or farm laborers.

On amendment no. 7: Inserts the amendment proposed by the Senate authorizing the use of funds made available by the joint resolution, in the discretion of the President, for the administration of the Agricultural Adjustment Act during the period of 12 months after the enactment of the joint resolution.

On amendments nos. 8 and 9: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, that the appropriations made shall be available for use only in the United States and its Territories and possessions and excludes the Philippine Islands, which were included in the House bill.

On amendments nos. 10 and 11: Provides, as proposed by the House bill, that the services and supplies to be acquired under the joint resolution shall not be subject to competitive bidding and advertising when the aggregate amount involved is less than $300.

On amendment no. 12: Provides, as proposed by the House bill, that the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, shall not apply in the fixing of salaries under section 3.

On amendment no. 13: Inserts as a substitute for the Senate amendment providing for confirmation of certain persons to be appointed or designated by the President, the following:

Any administrator or other officer, or the members of any central board, or other agency, named to have general supervision at the seat of government over the program and work contemplated under the appropriation made in section 1 of this joint resolution and receiving a salary of $5,000 or more per annum from such appropriation, and any State or regional administrator receiving a salary of $5,000 or more per annum from such appropriation (except persons now serving as such under other law), shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided, That the provisions of section 1761 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to any such appointee and the salary of any person so appointed shall not be increased for a period of 6 months after confirmation.

On amendment no. 14: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, section 4 of the House bill relating to the establishment of new agencies, the utilization and prescribing of the duties and functions of Government agencies, the consolidation, redistribution, abolition, etc., of emergency agencies, and the delegation of powers conferred on the President, and inserts as a substitute a section which provides that in carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution the President is authorized to establish and prescribe the duties and functions of necessary agencies within the Government.

On amendment no. 15: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, section 5 of the House bill providing for the guaranty of loans to, or payments of, needy individuals, and the making of grants and/or loans and/or contracts, and the acquisition of real property, and inserts in lieu thereof the Senate amendment providing for the acquisition, etc., of real property, which is identical with the matter in the House section relative to real property with the exception of authority to "maintain" real property, which is omitted.

On amendments nos. 16 and 17: Corrects the section number, and provides a maximum penalty of $1,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $5,000, as proposed by the House, for any violation of any rule or regulation prescribed by the President.

On amendment no. 18: Inserts the new section proposed by the Senate providing that the President shall require to be paid such rates of pay for all persons engaged upon any project financed, in whole or in part, through loans or otherwise, by funds appropriated by the joint resolution as will, in his discretion, accomplish its purposes and not affect adversely or otherwise tend to decrease the going rates of wages paid for work of a similar nature; and also authorizes the President to fix different rates of wages for various types of work, which rates need not be uniform throughout the United States. The proviso of the second paragraph of the amendment, relating to wages upon construction of permanent buildings for use of any department of the Government, is modified so as to make applicable to such construction, in lieu of the requirement in the Senate amendment of "any law of the United States or any code", the provisions of the act of March 3, 1931 (the Davis-Bacon Act), with the further condition that the rates of wages shall be determined in advance of any bidding thereon.

On amendment no. 19: Inserts as proposed by the Senate a new section which provides that wherever practicable full advantage shall be taken of the facilities of private enterprise in carrying out the provisions of the joint resolution.

On amendment no. 20: Strikes out the section inserted by the Senate requiring sanitary plumbing work in connection with building construction under the resolution to be let separately by contract to the lowest qualified bidder.

On amendment no. 21: Inserts a new section proposed by the Senate providing for a fine of not more than $2,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both, for any fraud or attempted fraud in connection with the operations under the joint resolution.

On amendment no. 22: Inserts a new section, as proposed by the Senate, continuing in full force and effect until June 30, 1936, or such earlier date as the President by proclamation may fix, the provisions of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, as amended.

On amendment no. 23: Inserts a new section, as proposed by the Senate, which prohibits the expenditure of any of the funds appropriated by the joint resolution for administrative expenses of any department, bureau, etc., if such administrative expenses are ordinarily financed from annual appropriations, unless additional work is imposed upon such department, bureau, etc., by reason of the joint resolution.

On amendment no. 24: Inserts a new section proposed by the Senate continuing until June 30, 1937, the Public Works Administration and authorizes the Administration to perform such of its functions under title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act and under this joint resolution as may be authorized by the President. The section also continues available until June 30, 1937, all sums appropriated to carry out the purposes of the National Industrial Recovery Act. The section also authorizes the President to sell securities acquired under that act and this joint resolution and to use the proceeds for making further loans under that act and this joint resolution.

On amendment no. 25: Strikes out the amendment inserted by the Senate making available not to exceed $40,000,000 to the States, on the basis of demonstrated need, to enable them to maintain their public schools for the remainder of the current school year. In connection with this action, attention is called to the provision in the modification of Senate amendment no. 3, in the allocation of $300,000,000, wherein provision is made for "assistance for educational, professional, and clerical persons."

On amendment no. 26: Retains the section inserted by the Senate providing for the application to the expenditure of funds directly by the United States and funds granted or distributed for expenditure otherwise of the Federal law providing for the acquisition of articles, materials, and supplies mined, produced, or manufactured in the United States ("Buy American" Act).

On amendment no. 27: Inserts a substitute for the section proposed by the Senate extending until March 31, 1937, the authority of the President under the act pursuant to which is maintained the Civilian Conservation Corps, the purpose of which substitute is to make clear the intent of the Senate amendment.

On amendment no. 28: Strikes out the amendment inserted by the Senate providing for expansion of the currency through the issuance of silver certificates and the acceptance of silver in settlement and adjustment of any balance due the United States.

On amendments nos. 29 and 30: Corrects section numbers.

WILLIAM W. ARNOLD,
W. B. OLIVER,
ROBERT L. BACON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, no doubt every Member of the House understands the joint resolution in the form it passed the House and understands it as agreed to in the first conference report submitted to the House. I know of no better way to discuss the pending conference report with you than to discuss the high points, those that were in real controversy, and the agreements that we reached respecting them.

In the first place, this joint resolution was introduced in the House on January 21 and passed on January 24. It went to the Senate and passed March 23. It took 2 months to accomplish their supposed earmarking of appropriations, their supposed break-down of appropriations to be expended for certain classes of projects, their supposed limitation on the authority of the President to spend this money to bring about employment for three and a half million persons now on the dole.

They accomplished neither object on which they spent 60 days.

I want to call your attention to the alleged break-down or earmarking of the appropriation in this resolution. The Senate struck out the general purposes of the resolution as provided by the House and inserted the general purpose "to provide relief and work relief." The House bill provided that this money could be spent in order to relieve unemployment, alleviate distress, and improve living and working conditions. The Senate put in the broad words "for relief", unconnected and unrelated with unemployment in any respect.

Relief is as broad as the ocean. I looked up the definition of it in the dictionary. Ordinarily you would not suppose a Congressman would have to look up the definition of such a simple word, but I wanted to be sure. It means "the act of relieving; state of being relieved; succor; comfort; that which gives aid." You could go to the relief of a millionaire under that definition, if you wanted to; yet that is the limitation of this great earmarking act of the Senate.

What else? They broke it down. They earmarked it. Let us see what the earmarking says. It reads:

> This appropriation shall be available for the following classes of projects.

It does not say it "shall be available 'only' for the following classes of projects." They did not exclude any other classes of projects, but merely said that those specified came within the purview of this resolution. That is all. Is there any man within the sound of my voice, is there any intelligent man anywhere, whether he be judge, lawyer, or layman, who can justly claim they placed any limitation on the classes of projects which the President can adopt under this resolution? What does section 1 provide? It says that this appropriation shall be used in the discretion and under the direction of the President. Under the joint resolution as amended by the Senate, and under it as agreed upon in this conference report, the President can adopt any class of projects, whether specifically mentioned in the joint resolution or not, that will provide relief, work relief, or increase employment; any project. That is what the great earmarking of the Senate accomplishes after 2 months' discussion.

On that point I do not ask you to take my opinion. I consulted the Comptroller General in writing on that subject, and I hold in my hand his reply, which I will make a part of the RECORD. He holds that the President can adopt any otherwise lawful Federal project meeting the test of relief, work relief, or increasing employment. I will insert the Comptroller General's letter at this point:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
April 2, 1935.

Hon. JAMES P. BUCHANAN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I have your letter dated March 29, 1935, as follows:

"With reference to House Joint Resolution 117, as amended and passed by the Senate, and having in mind the purposes of the proposed appropriation under Senate amendment (1)—to 'provide relief and work relief'—please advise me whether the provisions of Senate amendment (3) enumerating classes of projects and fixing the amount of each class would have mandatory effect and require prosecution of the enumerated classes of projects to the extent so fixed, or whether the amount fixed for each stated class of projects would merely be a limitation on the uses of the appropriation for projects within such class. And if the latter, whether the President in the uses of the appropriation would be at liberty to adopt one or more otherwise lawful projects meeting the test of providing relief or work relief.

"Please answer same questions as directed to House Joint Resolution 117 as agreed to in conference. For this purpose I am enclosing to you the conference report."

The Senate amendment (3), referred to in your letter, making the funds provided for in the joint resolution available for the eight classes of projects listed therein, specifically provides that "the amounts to be used for each class shall not, except as hereinafter provided, exceed the respective amount stated, namely:". In view of this language and the appropriating language employed, not only in Senate amendment (1), but as said amendment was amended in conference, I have to advise that the respective amounts are limitations rather than specific appropriations for the classes of projects named, and neither these limitations nor any other provision in the joint resolution as passed by the Senate and agreed to in conference would preclude the President, in his discretion, from adopting one or more otherwise lawful Federal projects meeting the test imposed by the appropriating language; that is, under Senate amendment (1), of providing relief or work relief, and under said amendment as amended in conference, of providing relief, work relief, or increased employment by providing for useful projects.

Sincerely yours,

J. R. MCCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

There was one limitation the Senate put on. It said that there should not be expended on any class of the projects mentioned by the Senate a greater amount than the sum therein stated. Now, let us see what that is. We might just as well pass a law here that no citizen of the United States shall ever own a fortune in excess of a quintillion dollars in value, when we know there is not a quintillion dollars' worth of property in value in the whole world. We might just as well pass such a limitation as to pass a limitation on the amount that could be spent on any one of these projects.

Under the Senate amendment they made an allocation of not to exceed $800,000,000 for public roads. Then they said the President might have discretion to use 20 percent of the entire appropriation to add to any one of those allocations. That would make it possible for the President to allocate not only $800,000,000, but $976,000,000 more for public roads, making a total of $1,776,000,000 which he could allot for public roads. That is the limitation, when you know that he could not possibly expend that amount of money in the term fixed in this resolution on public roads. A limitation without limit.

Rural rehabilitation and agricultural relief in stricken areas, water conservation, transmountain water diversion, irrigation, reclamation, and so forth, $500,000,000. The Senate specifies a 20-percent leeway. This added would allocate to this class $1,476,000,000. A fine limitation, is it not? Yet throughout the United States the statement is emphasized that the Senate placed limitations upon the discretion of the President in carrying out the purposes of this bill, directing the manner, and fixing the amount which shall be spent for certain projects. Tommyrot! Moonshine! The President has practically the same discretion under the resolution as agreed upon as he had under the House provisions. I could go on down the list of the eight so-called "allocations" made by the Senate, but I shall content myself merely by putting them in the RECORD. I shall mention the totals, however.

He could exercise his choice within the total appropriation of $4,880,000,000 of some of the following maximum amounts: Rural electrification, $1,076,000,000; he could allow for housing, $1,426,000,000; for professional and clerical persons, $1,276,000,000; for the Civilian Conservation Corps, $1,576,000,000; for loans and grants to States and public bodies, $1,876,000,000; for sanitation, soil erosion, and so forth, $1,326,000,000—no breaking down, no limitations, so far as the practical application of the money and the practical agencies at his disposal for the expenditure of the money are concerned. The only practical limitation is that the expenditure is to be within the total of $4,880,000,000, and this limitation is in the resolution as it passed the House. As I have said, I wrote the Comptroller General about it, and he advised me that the President could adopt any otherwise lawful Federal projects he desired under the Senate bill; and he can adopt them under this conference report.

Oh, I hate to see going out to the country criticism of the House for passing a measure giving the President authority to spend this money to accomplish the great purposes contemplated by it; I hate to see the country told that the Senate is earmarking the bill, breaking it down, and curbing the discretion of our President in accomplishing the purposes of the act when the contrary is true.

Mr. Speaker, in just a minute I shall be through discussing the report. If any Member desires to ask any question on any amendment now, I shall be pleased to answer.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. In drawing the amendment to Senate amendment no. 3, as set forth in this conference report on House Joint Resolution 117—House Report No. 609—was it the intent of the committee of conference that the language therein used should include funds for the construction, reconstruction, improvement, and rehabilitation of permanent stations, depots, and frontier air defense bases for the Army Air Corps?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman's question brings up a portion of Senate amendment no. 3 which never ought to have been put in the bill. The Senate amendment was aimed at warships, ammunition, and military and naval matériel. They found themselves in a dilemma and wanted to make exceptions, so they put limited exceptions to these restrictions on expenditure of the funds. Your conference committee, realizing the importance of the improvement, the renovation, the construction and reconstruction upon our naval and military reservations, made that expenditure just as broad as possible under the rules of the House. It is contemplated that out of this appropriation they can make all necessary repairs, improvements, and new construction on our military and naval reservations; and air bases, of course, fall within the classification of military or naval reservations. So if this conference report is adopted this money, in my judgment, will be available for construction and reconstruction, and such purposes.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. In other words, I understand the gentleman's answer, in simple language, is "yes."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; of course.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. Section (g) of Senate amendment 3 reads as follows:

(g) Loans or grants, or both, for projects of States, Territories, possessions, including subdivisions and agencies thereof, municipalities, and the District of Columbia, and self-liquidating projects of public bodies thereof, where, in the determination of the President, not less than 25 percent of the loan or the grant, or the aggregate thereof, is to be expended for work under each particular project, $900,000,000.

Does that mean in the opinion of the President, or is it mandatory upon the President to give that loan to the State only if 25 percent is to be expended for labor?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That provision, I will say to my friend and colleague, has a history.

Mr. CONNERY. A long history.

Mr. BUCHANAN. A long history. No provision before the conference committee caused so much contention or took so much time. The Senate conferees first demanded that 50 percent of direct labor should be required. We reluctantly agreed in the first conference report that at least 33⅓ percent of the loan or grant, or the total of both, should be for direct work.

There was objection to this requirement on the grounds that the percentage of direct work was too high—that many worth-while projects would be shut out under it. There is much indirect work on these projects. Some competent authorities put the ratio of indirect to direct at employment for 2½ men on indirect work for 1 men on direct work. A difference of opinion might also arise between the administrative officer and the Comptroller General as to whether the project certified by the administrative officer as having at least one-third direct work would, in the opinion of the Comptroller, have such a percentage.

When we went back into conference we had a long struggle with the Senate conferees on this point. In the conference report now before the House we succeeded in getting them into a position where they finally accepted 25 percent, to be determined by the President, so that the former requirement that one-third of the loan or grant must be expended for direct work has been taken out, and in its stead the conference report now recommends that loans and grants should be authorized " where, in the determination of the President, not less than 25 percent of the loan or the grant, or the aggregate thereof, is to be expended for work under each particular project."

The expression " work under each particular project " includes not only work done at the site of the project but work which may properly be called " indirect " work, for example, the work which is created by the manufacture and production of materials and in the transportation of such materials to the site of the project. The determination as to the amount of such direct and indirect work which will be employed upon the particular project is now definitely left with the President of the United States. It is he, and not the Comptroller General, who will determine the eligibility of a project within the standards laid down by Congress.

Finally, the percentage of the loan or grant or the aggregate thereof which the President must find will be expended for direct and indirect work has been reduced from one-third to one-fourth, so as to include a wider range of non-Federal public-works projects.

Mr. CONNERY. But it is not mandatory upon him to insist that 25 percent go to labor in each project.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is mandatory upon him to determine that there will be at least 25 percent of work under the project.

Mr. CONNERY. One more question: Amendment 18 contains the following language:

> That whenever permanent buildings for the use of any department of the Government of the United States or the District of Columbia are to be constructed by funds appropriated by this joint resolution, the provisions of the act of March 3, 1931 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 40, sec. 276a), shall apply, but the rates of wages shall be determined in advance of any bidding thereon.

Do the provisions of the act of March 3 make the Davis-Bacon bill apply?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes. That is the prevailing wage rate for public governmental buildings.

Mr. CONNERY. It is; and the rates of wages are determined in advance.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The rates of wages are ascertained in advance for the purpose of bidding. I assume after construction work starts any fluctuation up or down will be taken care of under present law, with the Secretary of Labor acting as arbiter.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. EATON. The following language appears at the end of amendment 3:

> This proviso shall not be construed to prevent the use of such appropriations for new buildings, reconstruction of buildings, and other improvements in military or naval reservations, posts, forts, camps, cemeteries, or fortified areas, or for projects for nonmilitary or nonnaval purposes in such places.

Does that mean there is any guarantee in this bill that there will be no money for rehabilitation work in the arsenals of the country which is so badly needed?

Mr. BUCHANAN. There is not any guarantee in this bill. I may state to the gentleman that there is a great amount of direct labor that may be used in connection with the repair, renovation, and reconstruction in our Army and Navy reservations, which is needed as much as almost any other thing. I think the necessary money can and will be spent to put them in good shape.

Mr. DEEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. DEEN. Will the gentleman explain to the House amendment 3, subsection (e), which says: "Assistance for educational, professional, and clerical persons," and tell us who those persons are, first, and secondly, whether or not the President is authorized to assist the more than 5,000,000 school children in 42,000 public schools who are out of school on account of lack of funds?

Mr. BUCHANAN. There was a Senate amendment in the bill authorizing the allotment of not to exceed $40,000,000 to the public schools for the balance of this year, which as you all know will expire in June. Your committee thought it proper to transfer that item to the $300,000,000 and insert the word " educational " in that item, so that as the bill now stands the President can allot for the relief of the personnel in educational work any sum out of that $300,000,000. The $40,000,000 limitation would have been a mere bagatelle and would be applicable only to the balance of this fiscal year. This resolution runs for over 2 years, and they are now spending over $30,000,000 a year.

Mr. DEEN. Then the gentleman's answer is that the President has authority, or will have authority if this conference report is adopted, to allocate to the teachers or to the schools of the several States needing $20,000,000 or more the necessary funds?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No. To the teachers, yes. To the schools and institutions; no.

Mr. DEEN. To the teachers?

Mr. BUCHANAN. May I say to the gentleman that I think the Federal Government should not set a precedent with reference to the question of financing the school systems of our sovereign States. [Applause.] Whenever we do that we will give the Federal Government the power ultimately to prescribe the curriculum in our State schools and in later years you will have a system under which the children recognize only the Federal Government as a great central power, which will rule with an iron hand throughout the country, and I am not in favor of that proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The language of the bill now is far better for the teachers and the schools than was the language in the Senate amendment?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly it is; and it is based on personal relief.

Mr. KRAMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KRAMER. Could the President, under the authority granted him here, appropriate money for the erection of a Federal building?

Mr. BUCHANAN. He could do it, but I am confident he will not, because I am going to offer in the House at a later date a bill authorizing specific appropriations for Federal buildings. The President does not want to involve the Federal building program, which is a regular activity of the Government, with these emergency propositions. He wants those matters kept separate, and he wants the work connected with Federal buildings to be conducted under the regular prevailing-wage rate.

Mr. KRAMER. There is another bill that will come in here in which that might be provided for?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I take it from the gentleman's speech so far that he is going to vote against the adoption of this conference report; but for fear he will not, may I ask him this question: Under this provision can the President allocate or change that 20 percent? In other words, can he take that 20 percent off one of these items, or must he take it off pro rata?

Mr. BUCHANAN. He may take it off any one item and allot it to any other item.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Perhaps the gentleman does not get the point, and I would like a definite answer. For instance, there is $800,000,000 appropriated in here for roads. If the President should decide to shift the 20 percent, could he take the full 20 percent out of that $800,000,000?

Mr. BUCHANAN. He could take the full 20 percent out of that item, or 5 percent out of that item, 5 percent out of another item, and 5 percent out of another item, and so on.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. But could he take it all out of the one item?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; or he does not have to allot a single cent to it or any other Senate allocation.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. The Senate majority leader, Mr. ROBINSON, presented an amendment which I assume had the approval of the administration—certainly it did not have the opposition of the administration—relative to sanitary plumbing work in connection with building construction which might be taken care of under this appropriation. In this connection, may I call the gentleman's attention to one outstanding fact. About 15 Members of this legislative body were stricken low with amoebic dysentery in Chicago several years ago as the result of a cross connection between the sewage disposal and drinking water. The Federal Government has flagrantly violated the sanitary laws all over this country. It was intended to make that really much needed correction. I understand that the House conferees demanded that this be stricken from the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We saw no reason to single out this particular activity for special consideration.

Mr. DINGELL. I should like to know why such a very important matter as this, which had not the opposition of the administration, was taken out of the bill?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Well, the gentleman is assuming a great deal about the administration. As far as that is concerned, the Senate conferees were not very insistent.

Mr. DINGELL. The gentleman jumped at a conclusion himself when he said I assumed certain things. I presume when the Senate majority leader advances a thing it must have the approval of the administration.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman assumed an opposition, that is all. The Senate conferees did not insist on that amendment. I cannot engage in argument, Mr. Speaker, because I have not the time. This amendment recognizes the system of work being let under contract to the lowest bidder, and, of course, at the prevailing wage rate for one particular line of work. That contravenes the whole spirit and purpose of this bill. If we recognize the contract system for plumbers, we must recognize it for painters, builders, electricians, and for every class of work in the United States. When you recognize the contract system throughout this bill you destroy the very genius and purpose of the bill. Therefore, we could not agree to that amendment, however much we may sympathize with it. I have an abiding faith that the master plumbers will be taken care of by the President under this bill as all others will be taken care of.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. There was considerable confusion in the Chamber and I may have misunderstood the gentleman. Did he say that in addition to this bill, which carries $4,880,000,000, there would be coming in later on another appropriation bill for public buildings?

Mr. BUCHANAN. For public Federal buildings; yes. The gentleman understood me correctly.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. How much will that bill carry?

Mr. BUCHANAN. About $40,000,000 or $45,000,000.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does not the committee recognize there is a limitation on the power of the American people to meet these huge sums that are being appropriated?

Mr. BUCHANAN. We are discussing this bill now and not the public-buildings bill.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I think this is a matter that is important in connection with the consideration of this bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the gentleman had read the Budget which was submitted when the Congress first met he would know that this item was included in the President's Budget message.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I think it is very important that the Members of this House should know whether this $4,880,000,000 represents all the money for public works or only a part of the program.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. On page 2, of the conference report, I notice $500,000,000 allocated for irrigation and reclamation, and other purposes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. SHORT. I wonder if this is to continue and perpetuate our present silly, idiotic, and contradictory policy of allowing the Secretary of Agriculture to take millions of acres of productive land out of cultivation and then allow the Secretary of the Interior to spend millions of more dollars to open up new land that has never been in cultivation.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman ought to know that I am not going to be involved in a discussion of the merits or demerits of any other law now upon the statute books. We are discussing this conference report and this conference report alone and I am not going into any other legislation.

Mr. SHORT. The gentleman knows that in his own district much of the tillable land has been taken out of cultivation while we have opened up millions of acres of land in the West that has never been in cultivation before.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. In amendment no. 5, dealing with the question of public roads, the provision is that the money shall be expended by the State highway departments. There is also a provision enabling the President to make rules and regulations, and may I ask the gentleman if he thinks under this provision the President can require the State highway departments to expend this money where the unemployment exists and prevent them from spending it in rural sections where there is no unemployment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. My observation is that your public roads and your feeder roads—and this bill provides for feeder roads—run through the country as well as they city and the probabilities are there is more work on public roads and feeder roads in the country than in the cities, because the cities have already fixed their highways.

Mr. RAMSPECK. What about the matter of building bridges and eliminating grade crossings?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The same thing applies. Of course, the present rules and regulations go to the expenditure of this money alone. This provision enables the President to follow it up to see that people who are on the relief rolls are employed; and I want to impress upon my colleagues the fact that this is a relief measure, to put people to work who are now idle, and is not especially a road measure to boost any one project or any one class of projects. It is a relief measure.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I may say to the gentleman that is exactly my interest in the matter; but in my State, under the $3,300,000,000 public-works bill, the State highway department refused to spend the money allocated to my district, and I want to know if the President, under this bill, can make them spend it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. In my judgment, he can.

Mr. SHORT. I wish the gentleman would tell us who is to administer this measure.

Mr. KENNEDY of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY of New York. On page 2 of the report, subdivision (e), there is provided $300,000,000 for assistance for educational, professional, and clerical persons. Will the gentleman tell us exactly how this sum of money is to be spent or give us some idea of the plan to be followed?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It will be spent as the necessity for relief is demonstrated to the President or to his board.

Mr. KENNEDY of New York. In my city they are spending relief money teaching people how to make belts out of old rope. They are also spending money teaching people how to dance the polka, and other equally useless things. When this was brought to the attention of Mr. Hopkins, his reply, as reported by the New York Times of today, was that his critics are "too damned dumb to appreciate the finer things of life." I am wondering whether or not we are going to continue to waste this $300,000,000 in the same fashion. I am in favor of the expenditure of funds to provide work for our people or where the conditions require the spending of money for direct aid, but not for such apparent waste.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will say to my colleague I think none of this money will be wasted. I think all of it will be intelligently spent, and in spending it, the President and those under him who are to administer it will be guided by past experience, which is very valuable.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. In the middle of amendment no. 13, it is stated:

> Any State or regional administrator receiving a salary of $5,000 or more per annum from such appropriation (except persons now serving as such under other law) shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Does any person holding such a position at the present time have to have the endorsement or confirmation of the Senate?

Mr. BUCHANAN. He does not. Any State administrator now holding such position does not have to be confirmed by the Senate. Anyone who has to be confirmed by the Senate must be paid out of this appropriation and receive $5,000 or more a year.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I would like to know if the chairman thinks that under the provision granting $300,000,000 for educational, professional, and clerical personnel it will be possible for the administration to keep the schools open for the remainder of this term.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly it will if this bill goes into effect in time.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The amendment providing $600,000,000 for the Civilian Conservation Corps in its important work will provide for about double the enrollees now in camp?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is the estimate; yes.

Mr. BOLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will yield.

Mr. BOLTON. In amendment no. 3 there is $350,000,000 appropriated for sanitation, soil erosion, reforestation, flood control, rivers and harbors, and miscellaneous projects. Will the gentleman tell us why the limitation that the project had to be approved by the Chief of Engineers has been eliminated?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Because we expect to have a supervisory central control of this expenditure, and you cannot have that if you have one official to do this and another official to do that. We are going to have it efficiently and effectively administered.

Mr. BOLTON. Is not it admitted that the Corps of Engineers is best equipped to give that advice?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The President will have the benefit of the experience and expert knowledge of the Engineer Corps, and then he will decide the proper course.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. This being the greatest expenditure of all time and all history of the Nation, will the gentleman tell us where we are going to get the money to carry out these provisions?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; I will not tell the gentleman. [Laughter.] Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has 27 minutes remaining.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, when this bill passed the House it carried the delegation of authority from the House of Representatives to the President of the United States to spend practically $5,000,000,000 just as he pleased. Today it comes back here just that way, with just one limitation. It cannot be spent for warships or munitions; that is the only limitation in the whole bill.

It is just exactly that way, and these allocations in the language written in the bill do not mean a single thing. It was a bad bill then, it is a bad bill now. It is so bad that I would not even sign the conference report. [Applause.]

Money can be spent under it for relief. There is no work provided in this bill that amounts to anything that will take people off the relief rolls.

Let me show you. They claim that they intend to use $800,000,000 for highway grade-crossing eliminations. Nothing of that kind could get under way before January 1, and in the northern section of the country not before April next.

So no people can be taken off the relief rolls that way.

The next item under which they propose to allocate money is $500,000,000 for rural rehabilitation and reclamation. Everyone knows that of the fund allocated for reclamation in the bill we passed 2 years ago three-quarters is left and will not be spent in a long time.

For rural electrification not over 25,000 people can be put to work under that.

For housing, nothing can be spent for a year, and most of it cannot start for 15 months, and not over 150,000 people can be put to work by July 1, 1936.

For relief for education and clerical persons: That money can be used to pay school teachers. It probably can be distributed over the 2 years that are in prospect, and keep 150,000 school teachers at work.

Nine hundred million dollars for loans and grants to States and public bodies: Practically nothing can be expended for upwards of about a year. That has been the practice all the way through.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I shall if I have time when I finish my statement.

Practically nothing can be expended for upward of a year because that is the practice with the funds appropriated 2 years ago, and they did the best they could then, and they cannot do any better now.

For miscellaneous projects, $350,000,000: I do not believe there is an item in that list that will provide immediate employment.

The real common sense of this bill is that they won't provide much work, but the object of the bill is to allocate these projects a year from next summer, when it can have an effect on the election. I have here in my hand a copy of the Window Seat, published by W. D. Jamieson, the spokesman of the Democratic National Committee. He says on March 6:

> Another thing. Do not forget that this tremendous expenditure will practically ensure President Roosevelt's reelection next year.

That is the object of this bill—raw, raw as it can be. It has been a difficult thing to make the people of this country realize what is being done to them. We are not only turning over all the power that this Congress has to the President of the United States, and throwing aside our constitutional duties, but we are giving to the President an almost unbelievable sum of money which he tells us he is going to create a board to administer, and that board is to be composed of four or five of those men who have proven their incompetence to administer anything in the past—Mr. Hopkins, Mr. Ickes, Mr. Tugwell, and there they are. We are going to be sure of an incompetent administration of this money.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Because there has been no efficiency, no integrity, in connection with keeping faith with the House. When we appropriated money for relief only, they used it for the promotion of pet projects, which this Congress would not approve by a majority vote if any one of those projects were put up to it. They have used it for reclamation, to destroy the farmer, and for all sorts of projects which the Rivers and Harbors Committee of this House has turned down year after year, and they have used it to put the Government in business and throw those in private employment on relief.

But, Mr. Speaker, this bill has been handled with consummate political skill by the administration. I compliment the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations upon the skill with which he has piloted the bill through the House. Such a compliment would not be necessary if it were a bill within the constitutional requirements of the Congress, but to pilot such a bill through requires real ability. I compliment him upon the ability with which he has carried out the sealed orders that were handed to the President of the United States by Mr. Ickes a week ago, and which were transmitted by the President of the United States from his seafaring fishing expedition to the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. The bill has been kept just as bad as it was when it left the House. It is a little worse than it was when the conference report was presented here a week ago. I do not think anyone who has regard for the preservation of American liberty or for the preservation of our form of Government can justify himself in voting for this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. In mentioning projects which could not be put under way until about 2 years, the gentleman missed the $600,000,000 for enlargement, expansion, and continuation of the Civilian Conservation Corps. I think it is significant that he does that, because I hope he is in agreement that here we have accomplished something that is really worthwhile. Mr. Fechner and his associates who are in charge of this work are ready now to place some 250,000 additional young men in the forests of our Nation on projects which will increase the wealth of our people and at the same time aid in the physical, moral, and spiritual development of the youth of our land, about 1,000,000 of them having already been benefited in this way. The opposition press has conceded that the expenditure of funds for the continuation of the C. C. C. is warranted because of the splendid results already achieved.

Mr. TABER. That is one of the worst things this country has to put up with. It has demoralized and destroyed the morale of millions of boys, and the money provided will add only 100,000 to the Conservation Corps.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. SHORT. Merely to say that I am very happy that the ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations did not allow himself to become polluted by signing the conference report of such a putrid measure. The Democratic Senators from the two States that are the mothers of Presidents, Ohio and Virginia, Senators GLASS and BYRD and BULKLEY and DONAHEY, also had the patriotism and the courage of their convictions to vote against this rotten, foul measure. This joint resolution is an illegitimate child deposited on our doorstep. No one admits its parenthood, but certainly it was born of trickery and deception. It is a wolf in sheep's clothing. It pretends to help but it will harm. In the name of relief it will perpetrate the most obnoxious and tyrannical bureaucracy the world has ever known. It robs us of our liberty and destroys parliamentary government. It violates the Constitution and makes us spineless puppets.

We have yet unexpended one billion and a half dollars of the $3,300,000,000 appropriation of the Public Works bill passed by the last Congress. Notwithstanding this fact, we are now asked to vote the President the stupendous and staggering sum of $4,880,000,000. Why? There is an election next year. Already we are on the brink of bankruptcy. Our credit is impaired. Our budgets are unbalanced. Our confidence is shaken and we are headed for more radical inflation.

Senator ADAMS, of Colorado, wanted to cut this huge appropriation in two; Senator BYRD, of Virginia, wanted to reduce it to $1,880,000,000. These distinguished gentlemen, fearless and able statesmen, realize the grave danger of this vile and vicious bill, but the appropriations they suggest are not enough to satisfy the inordinate greed of the tax-eating bureaucratic "brain trusters" or sufficient to complete their sovietization of America. I realize the futility of the efforts of opponents to this bill, for gentlemen across the aisle have received orders from the Nourmahal, but I predict those who vote for this nauseating measure will choke on their own vomit.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to my colleague from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the fact that this bill has been before another body for about 8 weeks, I am in entire accord with the statement that I understood was made by the chairman of the committee, that the bill has not been improved in any respect. As far as I can see, these amendments really have no real restrictions or reservations in them. They might be characterized as face-saving amendments, if one wanted some excuse and not a reason for voting for this bill. As a matter of fact, the two really main objectionable provisions in this bill which I opposed here in the House are still in full force in the present bill.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Not now. I opposed the excessive extraordinary grant of power to the President of the United States that is carried in this measure. The power granted the Executive in this bill is greater and more far-reaching than was ever granted to any Executive in peace or war time under any democratic form of government in the history of this world. So far as I know, we have never been told by the proponents of this bill any real reason why it was necessary, and I do not believe there is any reason for it. In my judgment, no man ought ever to ask for such a grant of power as is conferred upon the President in this bill. Furthermore, if he did ask it, under a democratic form of government it never should be granted. [Applause.]

I am opposed to the excessive amount of appropriation that is carried in this bill, which has not been changed since it left this House. That is more money than can possibly be judiciously spent during the time. And, furthermore, I am opposed to giving such a huge sum to a man like Mr. Hopkins, who is reported in the morning papers as saying the people who criticize his wasteful expenditure of taxpayers' money are simply "damned dumb." A man who displays that attitude toward the public should not be clothed with so far-reaching authority as is granted under this bill, and such a huge sum of money should not be placed in his hands for expenditure.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I cannot yield. If the gentleman will get me some more time, I will yield.

As a matter of fact, we are starting another public-works project. If you will remember, the President himself stated a short time ago in connection with the billion or billion and a half that has not been spent under the present P. W. A. authorization, "To be honest, it is mighty hard to find worth-while public-works projects." Notwithstanding that statement by the President himself, we are launching another proposition of four billion additional money, and that in face of the fact that every government in the civilized world which has ever tried this proposition of public works as a relief for unemployment has found it was a complete failure. Yet you insist on continuing this program in face of those facts.

I just want to call your attention to the excessive debt that we are creating, with no provision whatever of ever paying it. I cannot characterize the present situation any better, or give any better reason for not doing it, than to read a statement made by the President himself 2 years ago. This statement was made in Pittsburgh in October 1932:

I want to discuss this problem with you tonight fully. To do so sincerely I must tell the facts as they are and conceal nothing from you. It is not a pretty picture, but if we know it and face it we have nothing to fear.

This country is the richest and most resourceful nation in the world. It can and will meet successfully every problem which it faces, but it can do so only through intelligent leadership working unselfishly for the good of all people. That it has not had such leadership in the financial affairs will become obvious from the facts I shall relate to you tonight.

We all know that our own family credit depends in large part on the stability of the credit of the United States.

And here at least is one field in which all business—big business and little business and family business and the individual's business—is at the mercy of our big Government down in Washington.

Now, it is undoubtedly true that the mind of the average individual, man and woman, has been unable to keep pace in the past 10 or 12 years with the intricacies of Federal financing. In the first place, what used to be analogous to an old-fashioned account book that all the family could understand has become in Washington a maze of intricate double-entry bookkeeping which only a few highly trained technical expert accountants could possibly understand.

What I should like to do is to reduce, insofar as possible, the problem of our national finances to the terms of a family budget.

Now, the credit of the family depends chiefly on whether that family is living within its income. And this is so of the Nation. If the Nation is living within its income, its credit is good.

If in some cases it lives beyond its income for a year or two, it can usually borrow temporarily on reasonable terms.

But if, like a spendthrift, it throws discretion to the winds, is willing to make no sacrifice at all in spending, extends its taxing to the limit of the people's power to pay, and continues to pile up deficits, it is on the road to bankruptcy.

For over 2 years our Federal Government has experienced unprecedented deficits in spite of increased taxes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] has expired.

Mr. SNELL. May I have 2 minutes more?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes, Mr. Speaker, but no more.

Mr. SNELL. That will be sufficient. I thank the gentleman. If that statement was true at the time the President made it, then we are doing wrong in passing this bill today, and you are not following the advice of your own President when you do it. At the time the President made that statement he did it in criticism of about a $3,000,000,000 deficit in the previous 2 years. Since that statement was made, under the present President we have created a further deficit of ten or twelve billion dollars. Notwithstanding that, he is now asking us for five billion more. If he believed what he said in 1932, he is not consistent in asking for this huge sum of money now. Do you people really appreciate the huge public debt we are piling up every hour?—

PUBLIC DEFICIT GROWS $65,000 PER MINUTE

So far this fiscal year, the Treasury has spent $563,000,000 per month or $130,000,000 per week. Of these expenses, only 22 percent went into direct relief; 30 percent into public works and new-deal projects; and 48 percent for ordinary running expenses. To pay its average monthly bill of over half a billion, the Treasury receives about $213,000,000.

So, in spite of the highest taxes in our history, the Nation is going into the hole at the rate of $281,000,000 per month, or $66,000,000 per week. Even while you have been reading this article (2 minutes) the Government deficit has increased $130,000. Never before in the history of the world has any nation so deliberately unbalanced its budget as the United States is doing at the present time.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. SNELL. No; I cannot yield.

Each time the President has asked for these new emergency appropriations he has said it was for the purpose of priming the economic pump, and that he would not come back for any more; but the result is that he has come back each time for more, and each appropriation has been larger than the previous one, until, in my judgment, I am forced to conclude that the economic pump he is priming is in a dry hole; and, furthermore, there is not money enough in this country to be spent in this way to make it a producing well. This legislation at this time is uncalled for, unnecessary, and un-American. It is so autocratic, drastic, and far-reaching that it will not help the employment situation, but rather destroy every effort of private industry to expand and take on more employees. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that those who have spoken on this conference report may have permission to revise and extend their own remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that those who have spoken on the conference report may have permission to revise and extend their remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the time has been limited. Why does not the gentleman extend that to all the Members of the House? The gentleman took up more than half the time himself. Why does he not extend the privilege to every Member who wants to extend his remarks on the conference report?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Because I thought it ought to be those who made the remarks. That is all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MICHENER. I object, unless it is extended to everybody.

Mr. RICH. If remarks are to be extended by everybody, I am going to object, because it would take the House of Representatives months to describe why they should vote for this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to my colleague on the committee [Mr. OLIVER], and at the close of his speech I shall move the previous question.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, a discussion of the merits of the original bill is not at this time, in my judgment, pertinent, because we had ample time to discuss that when the bill was before the House.

The President had made it clear in the message he delivered to the House in person soon after this session began that this appropriation would be asked for as an emergency relief measure and to provide employment. When a carefully prepared bill to carry out the high and humane purposes of the President was presented to the House it was passed by a vote of 329 to 78.

I hope that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is correct when he states that the long deliberations of the Senate in its consideration and passage of the bill and the language now in the bill, placed there by the Senate, in legal effect, does not change, alter, or minimize the full and broad powers conferred on the President by the House in reference to this appropriation. If the gentleman from New York is correct in this interpretation, it is, indeed, fortunate, because unquestionably the bill as it passed the House did confer on the President full and adequate authority to carry out the splendid purposes outlined in his message in using the funds appropriated. If by chance it should later appear that there is now in the bill any kind of embarrassing legislation on the exercise of that broad power which the House by an overwhelming vote gave the President, the responsibility is not on the House.

I hope that the statement of the gentleman from New York, which is borne out in a sense by the written statement of the Comptroller, Mr. McCarl, is correct. It would be regrettable if a bill favored by a large majority of the House and Senate, to meet an urgent emergency to provide employment and relieve distress, should be so construed as to hamper the President in the exercise of the broad powers we sought to confer on him for such purposes. May I say in reply to the inquiry relative to including education as an emergency item, I believe the President has exercised wisely his right to aid the public schools on the basis of need, as he has done for the past 2 years, and is still doing. The Cuting amendment might have been misconstrued in that it limited the amount that could be expended for public schools and also the time which such aid could be extended by the President to the 1935 school year, which will close in a few months. So the House conferees, believing that the country has approved what the President has done in keeping open many schools in many States, have placed at his disposal $300,000,000 for this purpose, to continue during the life of this measure, thus broadening and extending the scope of what he has been doing heretofore.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] referred to Mr. Hopkins as incompetent. There has never been a Republican executive officer who put 4,000,000 men to work in 30 days at the prevailing rate of wage, as did Mr. Hopkins.

Mr. KNUTSON. With whose money?

Mr. OLIVER. I will say this for Mr. Hopkins, that although he may have made some mistakes—and who would not?—he has honestly and conscientiously tried to provide relief and work for millions in distress. If he made mistakes, they were honest mistakes in an earnest effort to relieve human suffering and want. He may, in response to pathetic appeals, have been too generous at times. Let us remember, my friends, when the call of distress comes it is difficult to turn it down and oftentimes we may make mistakes in answering the call of human suffering and distress. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, in order to keep the RECORD straight, and not to be misunderstood, let me say that never in my 23 years of service here have I objected to any Member extending his own remarks. The unanimous-consent request I submitted a while ago that those who spoke on this bill might have the privilege of revising and extending their remarks, was just the usual and ordinary request. If gentlemen on the other side want to ask that the privilege of extension be granted to every Member I will not object; but my request was merely that those who spoke on the resolution might have the privilege.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 317, nays 70, not voting 45, as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Patman (for) with Mr. Ditter (against).
Mr. O'Brien (for) with Mr. Montague (against).
Mr. Dickstein (for) with Mr. Cavicchia (against).
Mr. Gregory (for) with Mr. Thomas (against).
Mr. Celler (for) with Mr. Hartley (against).
Mr. Taylor of Tennessee (for) with Mr. Lord (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. Vinson of Georgia with Mr. Allen.
Mr. Bankhead with Mr. Tobey.
Mr. Lanham with Mr. Polk.
Mr. Fulmer with Mrs. Greenway.
Mr. Taylor of South Carolina with Mr. Griswold.
Mr. Darden with Mr. Lamneck.
Mr. Kleberg with Mr. Imhoff.
Mr. Gambrill with Mr. Sadowski.
Mr. Harter with Mr. Shannon.
Mr. Somers of New York with Mr. Farley.
Mr. Brennan with Mr. Casey.
Mr. Jacobsen with Mr. Peyser.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. BYRNS, and he answered "yea."

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. IMHOFF, was called away on a matter of grave importance. He asked me to announce that had he been present he would have voted "yea."

Mr. KENNEY. My colleague the gentlewoman from New Jersey, Mrs. NORTON, is unavoidably detained from the Chamber. Were she present, she would vote "yea."

Mr. MORITZ. My colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BROOKS, is unavoidably absent. Were he present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. DALY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. DORSEY, is unavoidably absent. Were he present, he would have voted "yea."

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MEEKS, is unavoidably detained from the Chamber. Were he present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentlewoman from Indiana, Mrs. JENCKES, is unavoidably absent. Were she here, she would vote "yea."

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. CAVICCHIA, is unavoidably absent. If he were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BERLIN, is unavoidably absent. Were he present, he would vote "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House be given 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks upon this bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman modify his request so that Members who have spoken on the bill may have the added privilege of revising their remarks as well as extending them?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I shall be pleased to modify my request as the gentleman suggests.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 117—PUBLIC WORKS RELIEF BILL CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to vote "aye" in favor of adopting the conference report on this most important bill to appropriate $4,880,000,000 for public-work relief, for the very same reasons which impelled me to vote for adoption of the rule and passage of the bill when the same originally came before the House 2 months ago. It is my opinion that the sooner these funds are rendered available and the huge program gets under way the better it will be for the people of the United States. I hope that a start may be made soon, and that actual work on the various projects will be commenced and employment provided thereon as speedily as is consistent with sound business policy and a wise, judicious expenditure of the public money.

ADMINISTRATORS OF THE FUND

Mr. Speaker, it is gratifying to the country to know that President Roosevelt himself will supervise the program, but it is equally gratifying that he will have the able assistance of officials who have already proven their ability and integrity. I refer to Secretary Harold L. Ickes, who has made a record for efficiency and fearlessness in the discharge of his duties which have gained for him the confidence and esteem of the country and the hearty approval of the great majority of the Members of Congress. He has built up an organization which is competent and capable of contributing much to the success of the new work-relief program.

I also refer to Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, who has filled a most difficult and trying position with credit to himself and vast benefit to many millions of our fellow citizens, and whose splendid organization will be of inestimable service and value in the future as it has been in the past.

Admiral Christian J. Peoples, Director Procurement Division, United States Treasury Department, has demonstrated in his present station a capability and devotion to the public interest which should by all means be utilized in the prosecuting of public-works projects.

In Robert Fechner, Director Emergency Conservation Corps, we are assured of the continued success upon an enlarged scale of what most citizens consider to be one of the most outstanding achievements of this administration.

RIVER AND HARBOR PROJECTS

Mr. Speaker, to those of us who are familiar with the nature of river and harbor projects, and understand and realize the specialized and technical requirements thereof, it is highly pleasing to know that the same will be carried out under the direction of the Corps of United States Army Engineers, headed by Maj. Gen. Edward M. Markham and Brig. Gen. George B. Pillsbury, who are by training and experience qualified to do so to a greater degree than anybody else could possibly be.

Mr. Speaker, with these men in charge we know that these funds will be wisely administered and that a maximum of employment and public improvements of permanent value will be obtained thereby.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the adoption of the conference report. It means the surrender of the Congress to the Executive and the lasting humiliation of this body. In the last Congress you gave $3,000,000,000 to the Executive, with the result that at least $2,000,000,000 of it was wasted. Through the instrumentality of "Honest Harold" Ickes, Fort Peck Reservoir and the Grand Coulee were put in work. These two monstrosities will cost the Federal Treasury $500,000,000 before they are completed. This Congress unlawfully and in violation of the Constitution again proposes to abdicate and turn over to the Executive more billions of the people's money. You of the majority have the votes to do this, and the minority is powerless to prevent it.

Through the press we are informed that Professor Tugwell will have the disposal of $900,000,000 of this fund to be used for the relief of agriculture. Mr. Tugwell is a charming theorist with a Russian tinge but knows no more about farming than Mrs. Astor's billy goat. How do you from the West, whose people are so hard pressed, like this set-up? In any event, you are going into the situation with your eyes wide open.

I wish to emphasize with all the earnestness that I possess that these billions are not the President's and title to these funds does not go to the Democratic Party. It is not a fund to be used to continue his party in power. These moneys are a sacred trust. This vast sum and the national credit on which it is based was created by the past and present generation of toilers out of their blood and sweat.

Theoretically at least, it is dedicated to the cause of humanity. For the Executive to turn these billions over to the spoilsmen or to personal or political favorites would be the crime of the ages.

Rumors are rife and will not down that General Farley will resign and direct the expenditure of these moneys for partisan purposes. If that is to be the procedure America is indeed lost. The situation calls for the best brains, the largest experience, and the highest idealism possible. The preservation of this Republic is more important than the election of either a Republican or Democratic President, but if politics are to dictate the disposal of this fund and chaos ensues, the blood is properly on the head of this Congress, which in an hour fraught with evil destiny ignores and basely surrenders to the Executive its manifest constitutional power.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Roads in the House, composed of LINDSAY C. WARREN, WILLIAM M. WHITTINGTON, WRIGHT PATMAN, THOMAS O'MALLEY, MONRAD C. WALLGREN, J. WILL ROBINSON, A. H. CARMICHAEL, JENNINGS RANDOLPH, ROBERT T. SECREST, SCOTT W. LUCAS, HUGH PETERSON, JR., JOHN L. MCCLELLAN, NAT PATTON, ORVILLE ZIMMERMAN, BERNARD J. GEHRMANN, C. MURRAY TURPIN, JESSE P. WOLCOTT, JAMES W. MOTT, JOHN W. GWYNNE, BERT LORD, and myself, as chairman, together with Senator CARL HAYDEN, of Arizona, have worked faithfully to secure proper road legislation and a goodly portion of road funds from the famous $4,880,000,000 work-relief bill.

The House committee had hearings on H. R. 4301, which I introduced about the time the work-relief bill was rushed through the House without amendments. During the delay of the work-relief bill in the Senate, Senator HAYDEN took the House road bill and succeeded during the breakdown in attaching it as an amendment, with little modification, to the work-relief bill. It is therefore called the Hayden-Cartwright amendment. This amendment provides the method of expenditure of highway funds which shall be made under section 5, Emergency Relief Appropriation Act (H. J. Res. 117), and follows the Hayden-Cartwright Act of 1934.

This provision means that funds appropriated under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act for primary and secondary roads and within municipalities will be apportioned among the States in the customary way and all new highway construction will be supervised by the State highway departments and carried on in the manner now provided by law. These funds are to be expended by the State highway departments under the Federal Highway Act of 1921. No portion of the funds so appropriated need be matched by the States. The Hayden-Cartwright amendment also provides for the highways of Alaska, Puerto Rico, the Canal Zone, and the Virgin Islands. Since Federal aid is not regularly apportioned to these Territories it is necessary to specifically authorize highway construction therein.

The amendment also provides for the method of expenditure of funds for the elimination of existing hazards at railroad grade crossings, including the separation or protection of grades at crossings, the reconstruction of structures, and relocation of highways to eliminate grade crossings. Recognizing that the established rule of apportionment based on population, area, and mileage of roads does not fit the grade-crossing situation, the amendment adopts a new method. The factor of area is eliminated and railway mileage substituted therefor. The factor of population is increased to one-half. Careful comparison with the work capable of being accomplished shows that this change in the basis of apportionment will fairly and equitably distribute the Federal funds to be used in grade-crossing elimination. The amendment specifies that the fund for elimination of hazards shall be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture—one-half on population, one-fourth on mileage of Federal-aid highway systems, and one-fourth on railroad mileage system.

The amendment gives preference in the employment of labor to persons receiving relief, except those in executive, administrative, or highly skilled positions, and also authorizes the President to predetermine for each State the hours of work and the rates of wages to be paid labor.

In order to relieve the situation of any controversy and in order to have the program fit in with the relief program, the President is authorized to adjust the scales of wages which have been predetermined by the State highway departments. This proviso gives authority to the President and provides for preference to those on relief. The hours and wages fixed by the President will apply to all State highway work paid for with Federal funds and thus avoid different rates of pay for the same kind of work done within the same State.

Below is the apportionment by States of the $800,000,000 set aside for highways and grade-crossing elimination in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act. This is based on an appropriation of $500,000,000 for roads, streets, and highways, and $300,000,000 for grade-crossing elimination. Of the $500,000,000 appropriation, $100,000,000 of the fund will be used for the appropriation under authorization of the Hayden-Cartwright Act of 1934.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I have been asked by a great many Members whether or not the House expects to adjourn over tomorrow. In reply I will say that I hope to submit that request, provided we finish the war-profits bill. If we do not finish the pending bill, I feel that we should come back tomorrow and finish it. If we finish the bill today, I will ask that the House adjourn over tomorrow.

TO PREVENT PROFITEERING IN WAR

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes on the subject of the McSwain bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for the purpose of submitting a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

WHERE ARE WE GOING?—THE CONSTANT QUESTION

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a radio speech delivered by me on March 29.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address delivered by me over the network of the National Broadcasting Co., Thursday, March 29:

WHERE ARE WE GOING?

Whenever I leave Washington and go to my home in western New York, or visit some other community, I encounter many people who put this question to me, "Where are we going?" When they use the pronoun "we" they mean the Government and the Nation. They are deeply concerned as they attempt to estimate present-day tendencies, and to cast their thoughts toward the future. They want to believe all is well, but they are puzzled and full of doubt. The answering of such inquiries involves what may be called a large order. I hesitate to attempt it, but I suppose I must.

The broad issue which the country is facing today differs not at all from the one which it faced a year ago. It is fundamental in character and, in the last analysis, involves our whole philosophy of government under the Constitution. Commencing in 1933 the administration embarked upon a vast program designed to establish what the President was pleased to call a planned economy applied to all forms of business and agriculture. To carry this out tremendous powers were voted to the President and by him delegated to the bureaucracy. The organization built up here at Washington and spreading out over the country is really gigantic—so much so that no one person can comprehend it all. It has stretched its arm out over the farms, down into the mines, through the factories, into the stores, and into nearly every place in which men and women seek to earn their living. Most of these measures have been enacted under the pressure of the emergency and some with the assurance that they were to be temporary.

Some of us took occasion back in the summer of 1933 to point out that the administration adhered to a school which teaches that the human race would be happier and more prosperous if it marched along the highway of life guided and controlled by superior wisdom lodged in government, and that these so-called "temporary measures" would turn out to be but the beginning of a vast program to be carried on through the years and to become permanent if the country should consent to such a thing.

PROSPERITY THROUGH SCARCITY

Among the more unique and experimental measures aimed at this general objective is the Agricultural Adjustment Act, generally known as "triple A." It has been administered on the extraordinary theory that the people may be made prosperous by the deliberate and planned creation of a scarcity of food. As you all know, farmers are receiving money from the Government, amounting to scores of millions of dollars, for refraining, in part, from producing food. The money which they receive—and most of them receive it with their tongues in their cheeks—is raised by the imposition of taxes upon all those persons and concerns engaged in the processing of the controlled crops.

It is the consumer who pays the tax when he makes his purchases. This tax is imposed by the Secretary of Agriculture, not by the Congress of the United States, which, if we are faithful to the Constitution, we must regard as the only governmental agency authorized to levy taxes. In this case the Constitution is openly flouted, and to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars we are being taxed without representation, the very thing against which our forefathers protested when they rebelled against the mother country back in 1776. It is a curious situation, but I suppose it may be accounted for by the fact that in 1933, and throughout 1934, the people were willing to try anything, to grasp at any straw, and, furthermore, were willing to forget, or did forget, the fundamental principles upon which our whole governmental structure has rested for a century and a half.

The administration is preparing to continue "triple A", and actually to expand its powers over an indefinite number of years. At this very moment it is urging upon the Congress an amendment to the act of 1933 granting to the Secretary of Agriculture the ultimate power to put under license every person and firm engaged and dealing in, or handling, or processing agricultural products. The condition upon which a license may be issued is to be fixed by the Secretary.

THE FARMER SCHEDULED FOR REGULATION

The administration does not dare to urge the licensing of farmers themselves, but it knows full well that if it can regulate, through a license system, every person engaged in buying or selling or processing farm products, the farmer himself will be regulated. That is the objective. There can be no question about it. I shall not spend much time in commenting upon the achievements of "triple A" up to date. When it reduced the cotton crop by paying the planters not to raise cotton and followed this by pegging the price of cotton at 12 cents a pound through loans extended to the planter, it not only greatly increased the cost of cotton textiles but opened wide the door for foreign countries to start in planting cotton themselves and to undersell American cotton in the great foreign markets.

Remember that something like two-thirds of our cotton has been normally exported to other countries. Already our exports have decreased very materially, and foreign production is increasing by leaps and bounds. Thus we are threatened with the loss of a tremendously important part of our export trade. I am wondering how long the South will continue to dig its own grave by supporting this scarcity-of-cotton program. The Secretary of State may work for years and years at his task of increasing our foreign trade, but he can never expand it sufficiently to make up for the staggering loss we shall suffer if our cotton no longer goes abroad. A curiously interesting announcement appeared in the papers day before yesterday. It comes from the headquarters of N. R. A., and it is directed to the cotton-textile industry. The announcement is to the effect that, due to the inability of the mills to sell their fabrics to the consumer, these same mills may reduce their production by 25 percent, which means, of course, that they must reduce the working hours of their employees proportionately. N. R. A. explains that this discouraging state of affairs is due to the processing tax imposed upon all cotton textiles by "triple A" and by the program of the Government in making cotton scarce and high in price.

NEW DEAL VERSUS NEW DEAL

Thus we see one great arm of the new deal tugging and pulling against another great arm of the new deal. Is it any wonder that people ask, "Where are we going?" Referring more specifically to N. R. A. we have a most extraordinary and unheard of situation. When the Congress passed that act in the spring of 1933 it turned over to the President the power to proclaim so-called "codes of fair competition" to be imposed upon any industries. When a code is finally prepared it is submitted to the President. He may change it if he pleases; he may reject it entirely; or he may write a new one himself and impose it upon the industry involved. Whichever way it happens, the code, when once proclaimed by the President, assumes automatically the force of Federal law. Those who disobey its provisions may be prosecuted in Federal courts as under a criminal statute.

In other words, the Congress, charged under the Constitution with the duty of making the laws for the Nation, has presumed to turn this function over to the Chief Executive, and has actually authorized him to make law by proclamation. Would anyone have guessed 3 years ago that such a state of affairs could exist in America? To be sure, N. R. A. expires by its own limitations on June 16 next, but it will be noted that the President is urging the Congress to continue it. Legislation to continue it in effect is now pending in the Congress, and if the administration has its way it will go through, with the result that for another period of time we shall have a single lawmaker presiding over industry, unless, indeed, the courts hold, as some of them are beginning to hold, that the Congress has no right under the Constitution to delegate its law-making power.

THE IMPERIAL GOVERNMENT OBJECTIVE

I say this is an extraordinary situation, but we must remember that this administration has an extraordinary objective in view, namely, the complete transforming of the Government of the United States—a transformation which will involve whittling away of the powers of the States, the building up of a gigantic imperial government clothed with power to regulate the life of the citizen as he attempts to earn his bread. This is "planned economy." To hasten the program we find the Government going into the business of generating and distributing electricity in direct competition with its own citizens. We find the whole utilities industry under attack by the agents of the Government, who have ready access to the press and the radio for their propaganda. No better example of this attack can be cited than the bill now pending before the Congress which declares specifically in its first section that it is the policy of the Congress to abolish all holding companies in the utilities field. Undoubtedly some holding companies have sinned, but many of them have achieved great things in the way of extending the use of electricity and steadily reducing the rates. To force them to dissolve, or even to put them under a sentence of death to be carried out later on, would strike a calamitous blow at a great industry in which a million people have invested their savings in perfectly good faith. Why not regulate instead of destroy?

Are we traveling in the direction of the nationalization of utilities and the putting into a strait-jacket all forms of business and farming? The steps taken thus far and the steps we are being urged to take are logical steps in that direction. And when we turn to governmental finances we encounter a situation which should cause the gravest concern to every thoughtful person. Instead of balancing the ordinary Budget of the Government, the Budget submitted to this Congress calls for an expenditure for the coming fiscal year $1,000,000,000 in excess of the amount appropriated by the last Congress for the present fiscal year. This, mind you, is just for the ordinary running expenses of the Government. The famous Economy Act of 1933 has not resulted in the balancing of the ordinary Budget.

And then when we come to the so-called "extraordinary expenditures" which are considered in a separate budget, we find billions of dollars being borrowed and spent and more billions called for. The famous bill putting into the hands of the President the gigantic sum of $4,800,000,000, containing the very mildest of restraints, is now on its way through the Congress. Every cent of it must be borrowed and added to the national debt, already mounting to unheard-of figures. Scarcely any plans for this vast expenditure have been made. It is claimed that 3,500,000 persons will be usefully employed on public works. I fear it is an idle dream. I doubt if any government on earth could invent enough public work to employ any such vast army of people. I have mentioned these things, and could mention others, which account for that almost universal inquiry, "Where are we going?"

WHO PAYS WHAT WE BORROW?

Can we borrow and spend our way out of the depression? And how long can Government go on with these borrowings and these expenditures? Today it is seeking to extend its ability in this respect by taking firmer control of the credit facilities of the Federal Reserve System, in order to compel the assistance of the banks in financing its huge borrowings. Thus the whole credit structure may become subject to political control. Who is to pay for all this? Not this generation. Such a thing is impossible. No; our children and our grandchildren will stagger under a burden of taxes which will make life hard and dreary for them. Is it not time to call a halt? Is it not time for the American people to stop, look, and listen?

If Government is to serve us in these difficult times, should it not save our money to the best of its ability? Should it not abandon these experiments, many of which fly directly in the face of the law of supply and demand—a law which no government on earth has ever succeeded in repealing? Should we not encourage the thrifty rather than the spendthrift? Should we not implant confidence instead of doubt and fear? But, fundamentally and far more important to the generations yet to come, should we not see to it that those great principles of liberty set forth so simply and eloquently in the Constitution are defended against all attacks, planned or unplanned?

TO PREVENT PROFITEERING IN WAR

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I had very little opportunity yesterday to say anything about this bill, and may I impose upon you for a few moments with some further observations as one of the minority members of the Military Affairs Committee? I will be very brief.

I think it is safe to say, at least from my parliamentary understanding, that on the entire subject of legislating to prevent profiteering in war, the Senate can pass no bill which will impose taxation. Obviously, this bill which the Military Affairs Committee reported unanimously, could not include provisions for taxation. It is safe to say that by far the great majority of those who are opposed to this bill are opposed to it on the ground no opportunity is given Members in opposition to vote for the inclusion of taxes in the McSwain bill.

I may add further that, according to the minutes of the Military Affairs Committee, I am the only member of the committee who reserved the right to oppose this bill on the floor. I want to say to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] that I have no intention of opposing the bill on the floor of the House. I am in accord with the gentleman, and I have great admiration for the remarkable work which he has done in the preparation of the bill. However, I have heard the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] state that if this bill is passed, he himself would introduce a companion bill, to be referred to the Ways and Means Committee, which would include provisions for the imposition of excess-profits taxes during war time.

It seems to me there is a way out of the dispute on this measure today. I am going to offer an open proposition on the floor on my own responsibility as one of the minority members of the Military Affairs Committee. It is a dual proposal. First, to those who are opposed to this bill, may I say that if the bill can be read today and no amendments offered—the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] agreeing, because I have no desire to go against his wishes—I will be very glad to offer a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means with instruction to add to its provisions a new paragraph to include the imposition of excess-profits taxes during a period of war.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Has the gentleman any proof that a bill will be reported out for the House to act on?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I have no proof of that. I am merely making the statement on my own initiative as a member of the Military Affairs Committee, provided those who are in opposition to the bill will agree to consider the bill as having been read today without amendments, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] agreeing, I will offer a motion to recommit the bill to the Ways and Means Committee. This leaves a way out. It means that we could get a bill back here for consideration, if the Ways and Means Committee sees fit, which will go to the Senate, and we can get something which will be whole hog without going just half way.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Ways and Means Committee has occupied several weeks in the consideration of the social securities bill? We also have the N. R. A. and other important legislation. I am for this bill, and my own suggestion would be to let the bill go along and then allow the Ways and Means Committee to act independently. I would think that would be the most effective course.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does not the gentleman think that his motion to recommit would be subject to a point of order?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. It would be.

Mr. COCHRAN. I would suggest that the gentleman appeal to the Members of the House not to make a point of order against his amendments or motion to recommit. I should like to see the bill amended as the gentleman suggests. If it is a good amendment for the future, it should be good now.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I am not going to offer the motion to recommit unless the bill is read today and no amendments are offered to the bill, and also the gentleman from South Carolina will agree that this is a fair proposition. This will protect our committee's bill and still give to those who wish to amend the bill that opportunity when it comes back to the floor of the House for further consideration.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. Suppose the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] did agree to that proposition, and suppose the bill passed today without amendment, and we came to the point where the gentleman would offer his motion to recommit to the Ways and Means Committee. There are some of us who want to take care of the labor provisions. Suppose the Ways and Means Committee brought in a bill under a gag rule, where would we be then?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I can take no responsibility for what may happen in the future.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's idea.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield my time to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN].

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] has imposed upon me by this proposal a very serious responsibility. If it could be arranged by unanimous consent, because it would have to be by unanimous consent, that the Members waived their right to offer amendments to this bill, if it could then be brought back, and those Members would then have the privilege to offer the amendments that they are conscientious about offering, of course, I would be agreeable to that proposal. But, Mr. Speaker, for me to take the responsibility of assuring a course of conduct for the future is too great. May I say if my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New York, who makes the proposal, will share that responsibility with me in the House, I am perfectly willing to go along with the arrangement.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes. And that any Member desiring to file individual or minority views may have the same time within which to file the same.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

TO PREVENT PROFITEERING IN WAR

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think we ought to settle the matter as to what we are going to do with this bill. The members of the committee may have something to say on that proposition.

Mr. McFARLANE. Also the Members of the House.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I will not object to the gentleman speaking for 2 minutes, but I shall object to any further requests.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the members of the Ways and Means Committee have worked almost day and night since this session began. They have heavy legislation in front of them. If we are going to get a chance to act on this piece of legislation this year, my guess is we had better act on it now. With all respect to the members of the Ways and Means Committee, if we put this extra load on them and expect them to report the measure out, I doubt if we get it out this year.

I believe we should go ahead and try to amend this bill and report it and then allow a tax bill to come from the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Any amendment that the gentleman adds to this bill at this time would not remove the objections that we are urging against this bill. We are interested in getting a tax feature in this bill, and such a tax feature is more important than any amendment that any gentleman can propose. We cannot add a tax on profits here because of our rules.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I think so, too.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I think the proposition made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] should be agreed to.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I must refuse to yield further.

I contend that a bill with a tax in it can come out and be a sister bill to this measure and can go through in the usual way.

Mr. MAVERICK. I am afraid "sister" is never coming. That is the trouble.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Then we would not have either.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 5529, be considered as having been read for amendment.

Mr. McFARLANE. Reserving the right to object, and the bill be printed in the RECORD as it now exists.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. And that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I would like to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. In the event the reading of this bill is dispensed with and in the event that permission should be obtained to have the bill committed to the Ways and Means Committee for the purpose of writing real tax provisions in the bill, when the bill then came back, would the provisions of the present McSwain bill again be read and be subject to amendment, or if we dispensed with the reading of the bill today, would that close all opportunity for amending its provisions?

The SPEAKER. Of course, if it were reported by the committee to which it was recommitted, it would be subject to amendment.

Mr. BOILEAU. The point I want to be certain about, Mr. Speaker, is this: In view of the fact that the Ways and Means Committee would have jurisdiction only of that phase of the bill that dealt with taxation, and the Military Affairs Committee has jurisdiction of the provisions that are now in the bill, if we were to permit the reading of the bill to be dispensed with today without offering these particular amendments, I want to be sure that we would not be deprived of the opportunity later on of amending the provisions of the present bill. This matter has never been considered since I have been a Member of the House and I am not familiar with the precedents and the rules in this respect and I wish to be sure we are not foreclosed from the right to offer amendments to the bill.

The SPEAKER. If the bill is recommitted, when reported back by the committee it would be taken up under the general rules of the House, subject, of course, to amendment and to such consideration as the House may care to give it.

Mr. BOILEAU. And all sections of the bill would then be read?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] if his unanimous-consent request is made in contemplation of the fact that the motion to recommit will be agreed to?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. If this unanimous-consent request is granted, I shall offer a motion to recommit the bill to the Ways and Means Committee with instructions.

Mr. McSWAIN. That will bind everybody, because the chairman is present.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Reserving the right to object, what are the instructions?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. The motion, as I have written it, would be to recommit H. R. 5529 to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to add to its provisions a new paragraph to include the imposition of excess-profits taxes during the period of war.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am going to object to any committal of this bill to the Ways and Means Committee, limiting that committee. If an agreement exists to send it to the Ways and Means Committee the committee should take complete jurisdiction. I am going to object to any committal to the Ways and Means Committee of a bill coming from another committee, a rare procedure, if ever adopted before, if the committee is limited in what we may do or what we may report from the committee.

Mr. O'MALLEY. This is not coming from another committee, but from the House to the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. McCORMACK. If I am sitting on the committee and the bill is referred to it, the committee should not be limited in reporting it to the House. You can recommit it to the Committee on Military Affairs with instructions to report it back forthwith, which is a different proposition; but I am going to object to it being committed to the Ways and Means Committee unless it is referred to the committee in the usual way. You may use the word "recommit", but it is tantamount to a reference for all purposes, including the tax angle. There are certain features of this bill I am opposed to. I am in favor of the purpose of the bill, but I am opposed to that part which permits Congress to declare, prior to a declaration of war, that an emergency exists, which would be tantamount to an actual declaration of war.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit, as a member of the Ways and Means Committee, he would have ample opportunity to offer any amendment to the provisions of the bill from the Military Affairs Committee when the bill comes back to the House. The provisions of the McSwain bill are purely within the province and jurisdiction of the Military Affairs Committee and not the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. McCORMACK. If my friend has an agreement I am not going to interfere with it. However, I am prepared to vote for this bill, I am prepared to support the committee, and I shall offer some amendments and support certain other amendments if they are offered today; and yet if there is an agreement between the members of the committee, I am not going to interfere with it; but if you are going to send it to the Ways and Means Committee, I shall object to sending it to the Ways and Means Committee with instructions. If you simply want to commit it to the Ways and Means Committee, that is all right.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I think I understand his position. It is my understanding the committee will offer an amendment to take out the provision with reference to an emergency due to the imminence of war.

Mr. DOUGHTON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I came into the Hall while this matter was under discussion. I do not understand its purport or purpose. Unless there is a full explanation of what is intended, I shall object. I understand a motion has been made to refer the bill to the Ways and Means Committee with instructions, and I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for interposing an objection, and unless there is full explanation I shall be impelled to object.

Mr. McCORMACK. Apparently there is some kind of an understanding—or that is the inference I have drawn.

Mr. McSWAIN. The only understanding is what has been arrived at openly on the floor. There is nothing behind it.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am not impugning the motives of gentlemen, but I thought there was some kind of a tentative understanding that the bill be submitted to the Ways and Means Committee with instructions to incorporate a tax feature. I shall not object if they want to send the bill to the committee without instructions.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I would like to understand whether any member of the Ways and Means Committee has been authorized to make an agreement. [Cries of "Regular order!" "Regular order!"]

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5529) to prevent profiteering in time of war, and to equalize the burdens of war, and thus provide for the national defense and promote peace.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. WARREN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose yesterday the first section of the bill had been read and it is now open to amendment.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 3 and 4, after the word "war", strike out the words "or the existence of an emergency due to the imminence of war."

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment I have offered is acceptable to the committee. It will remove the most objectionable feature of the bill, which was pointed out by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

I might say for the benefit of the members of the committee that there are several similar provisions, containing similar language, which will be eliminated later, and which will make it certain that these extraordinary powers granted to the President shall be exercised only when a state of war actually exists.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment merely to take time not to oppose the proposed amendment upon its merits but to say to the Committee of the Whole that what we have just witnessed illustrates to the Committee just what we were trying to impress upon it yesterday, that committees are properly jealous of their jurisdiction, just as our committee is jealous of its jurisdiction when it was proposed by one of our colleagues yesterday that we consent to commit this bill to the Committee on Ways and Means. We did agree to submit it to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions, and yet we find this difficulty in our way. It will be seen, therefore, that this committee, when it reported this bill without a tax provision, was respecting, as was its duty, the jurisdiction of the Ways and Means Committee. We respect their attitude today, because they could not in such a brief space of time understand fully all of the situations and implications involved, and, therefore, they have protected themselves and their jurisdiction in this way.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] I hope the committee will adopt it. Unless that language is stricken out, if the Congress of the United States were to declare an emergency to exist where war was imminent, for all practical purposes that is a declaration of war, and would be so considered by some other nation, and in fact by all other nations of the world.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. TABER. The effect of that language would be, if we were to declare such an emergency, that the nation against whom it was directed would commence hostilities immediately.

Mr. McCORMACK. There is no question about that. It would also interfere with other nations who might be exercising their good offices to avoid a conflict. Also, it might be used for internal purposes, because in time of war we must have what amounts to a unanimous opinion on the part of the people of the country to obtain success for all purposes of dictatorship. We do not want any twilight zone between the conditions of peace time and war time. With the actual declaration of war, then our state of mind changes, and we realize that the conditions confronting the country are entirely different than in times of peace. This amendment would eliminate that twilight zone, and at the same time would prevent, prior to the actual declaration of war—the time when we are actually compelled to declare war—the Congress taking a position which, for all practical purposes, constitutes a declaration of war. I might also say that I have no objection to the bill being referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. I will not interfere with any agreement or understanding that exists. However, if it is committed to the Ways and Means Committee, I feel that that committee should have all of the powers of original jurisdiction. Furthermore, I cannot see any reason for this going to another committee. The Committee on Military Affairs has done a remarkable job and has worked on this for weeks and weeks. I can see no reason why we should not pass this bill. Let us pass this bill now, and, as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, I shall urge as early consideration as possible of such tax legislation as will supplement this legislation. For years and years we have been trying to get through legislation of this character. Let those who oppose it because it is not drastic enough realize that if you do not get this bill through you are liable to get nothing. This is the starting point. Other legislation will have to follow. I favor drastic legislation. We should have had proper legislation years ago, and unless we get this bill through now the probability of its passage may be remote this year. This is simply my personal opinion, although I hope otherwise.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. What does the gentleman think of the real value of the conscription clause of the bill? That has nothing to do with profiteering. Does not the gentleman think that no conscription clause should be in the bill? What is the value of that, if this is a bill to take the profits out of war?

Mr. McCORMACK. This bill, as I understand it, is not one to take the profits out of war. It is my understanding it is more of a regulatory nature. The tax legislation to follow will carry out the purpose of the bill to make this completely operative along the lines desired for taking the profits out of war.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, a member of the Ways and Means Committee, for his assurance that he will assist us in getting a bill from his committee. We know he will and we think every member of his committee will. I have already begun preparation of a bill to be introduced, and as soon as it is in shape it will be in the hopper and before the gentleman's committee.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am glad to hear what my friend states.

Mr. CONNERY. With reference to the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY] about conscription, the gentleman referred to conscription as meant for the Army, did he not? It simply means conscription of men for the Army. The brother of the gentleman from Massachusetts had to serve in the front-line trenches during the World War while somebody else stayed at home.

Mr. McCORMACK. This bill recognizes the fact that in time of war it is the patriotic duty of everyone to respond to the common purpose, in order that we may obtain the common objective of victory and success.

I believe that profits should be taken out of war. I believe, however, it can be more effectively done and will be done through tax legislation supplementing this bill. I hope this bill will pass, as it is the opening step, which might delay any kind of action this year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] has expired.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri. I want to take time to say that at the end of the bill, after line 16, on page 4, I will offer the following amendment:

SEC. 8. Nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the conscription of any individual for any purpose other than as a member of the military or naval forces of the United States, nor shall any member of the enlisted personnel of such military or naval forces be required to perform any industrial, agricultural, or commercial activity not directly connected with military or naval operations.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. The gentleman, then, would object to the conscription of the management of industry?

Mr. CONNERY. No, no.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. That is the way the amendment reads.

Mr. CONNERY. No. This provides that you cannot put a man in the Army and then say, "Go back to your mill or your workshop and work for a dollar a day."

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. But the gentleman says they cannot conscript them except for naval or military purposes?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; that is true.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Then, they could not conscript a man at the head of a mill?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; that is true. They could conscript him for military service, but not conscript him in industry.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Then, I shall oppose the amendment, because we must conscript the management of industry.

Mr. CONNERY. I want to protect labor.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. That is all right. So do I.

Mr. CONNERY. Labor will not be protected unless some such amendment is adopted.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Could you not conscript the head of a firm to go into the Army?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I hope the gentleman will change that so that I can support his amendment. I favor the gentleman's idea, but I want it left so that the Government can say to the head of a factory, "The Government will take this factory over and you will be the man in charge of it; the commanding general of it."

Mr. CONNERY. That is the intention of the bill now.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. In such a way that it cannot be found.

Mr. CONNERY. It is in section 4.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Then the gentleman's amendment conflicts with it.

Mr. CONNERY. No; I do not think so. Section 4 takes care of this by licensing.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. SISSON. Does not the gentleman realize that it will be impossible so to amend this section as to still render it beyond power to conscript labor, put labor into the Army, and use labor to break a strike?

Mr. CONNERY. There are other amendments which I intend to offer to cover that situation.

Mr. SISSON. And does not the gentleman know that that proposition under a law almost exactly the same as this was done in France in 1924?

Mr. CONNERY. Not in the United States.

Mr. SISSON. The railroad employees were called to the colors and then put in charge of running the railroads.

Mr. CONNERY. That is why I have offered this amendment, so that that cannot be done in the United States.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman's amendment seeks to take care of a case of this character: A man is conscripted. It happens that this particular man is an expert in the manufacture of munitions; the Government takes that man, who is a member of the military forces, out of the line and assigns him to duty in a factory as an inspector. Is that what the gentleman is trying to prevent?

Mr. CONNERY. No. I am trying to prevent them from taking the employees of a whole shoe factory or a mill and saying, "You are in the Army now and you will get a dollar a day."

Mr. COCHRAN. I cannot conceive that anyone wants to do that.

Mr. CONNERY. Oh, they do a great many things in time of war.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. If the gentleman's amendment is carried, as I understand the real purport of it, we will be legislating for a lottery with human lives?

Mr. CONNERY. I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. KENNEY. I mean that by having troops raised by draft, we raise our armies by lottery. The names are put in a capsule and drawn out. Some have to go to war and the others stay home.

Mr. CONNERY. All right. But that is far more preferable than the volunteer system, which, as I said a moment ago, put Mr. McCORMACK's brother, who volunteered, as did all the men in our regiment, in the trenches with me and then left others at home who did not want to go at all.

Mr. KENNEY. Does not the gentleman first think we ought to have a national lottery to raise money to pay for the last war? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] has expired. All time on the pending amendment has expired.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] withdraw his pro forma amendment?

Mr. McCORMACK. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS], a member of the committee, is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, in the debate yesterday on one side or the other of this legislation a very important point, to my mind, was overlooked. That point is the effect upon the Nation of the ceiling of prices which it is proposed to establish. There has been a great deal said upon the proposition of taxing profits, but I simply want to explain to the members of the committee one of the things that we in the Committee on Military Affairs considered very carefully; that is, the establishment of this ceiling of prices. The reason we believed the argument on this ceiling of prices was so important was because we believed it would prevent the disastrous aftermath that follows all wars, because of the inflation of credit, inflation of currency, because of the enormous rise in prices that is inevitable during war.

Therefore, after much consideration and after listening to much testimony upon this subject, we decided that the establishment of the ceiling of prices was highly important because by it we believed we could prevent the disastrous aftermath which has followed every war in which this Nation has engaged. If we freeze these prices, the currency, the credit, and everything necessary along that line will be established and will not need to be expanded. Therefore, after the period of emergency has passed, we shall not have to go through a period of readjustment.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is price fixing, is it not?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman know there is a suit pending right now growing out of the last war, a suit brought by the Aluminum Co. of America, in which they contend the Government had no right to fix the price of aluminum? Does not the gentleman think it would be well if we had a constitutional amendment giving Congress the power to take the profits out of war by limiting profits by fixing prices?

Mr. FADDIS. I believe the gentleman is right in that respect, but there is nothing in the bill to prevent a constitutional amendment along the lines the gentleman suggests.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to offer an amendment soon to raise the pay of the soldier so it is equivalent to that of unskilled labor. The gentleman who just spoke in behalf of labor said he did not introduce an amendment to prevent the conscription of labor on the ground that it was not right to force labor to serve at $1 a day. My amendment will insure all drafted men being paid more than $1 a day. I hope the gentleman will change his amendment so that I can support it, change it so it will not prevent the conscription of the industrial, commercial, and transportation leaders of this country.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. It is not the purpose of my amendment that the Government shall say to the man who runs a plant, "We are going to draft your plant, your business, but we are not going to draft labor." I do not think that is fair. That man has got to go into the armed forces when called, he can be drafted as a soldier, under my amendment, yes, but not his establishment.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. If the gentleman's amendment reads that way and will be so interpreted, I will support it. I hope we can put some effective amendments in this bill. I have the greatest respect for this committee. For days and months they have been sweating and toiling, and they have submitted printed hearings so voluminous that it would put anybody's eyes out to read them. For over 16 years the chairman of this committee has been working on this problem, and I do not want to see his work fall short, but I am afraid the bill will fall short if it is not amended in certain particulars.

As to referring the bill back to the Committee on Ways and Means, I suggested that they are overworked already. We should not refer this bill to that committee, for they have said they would not take instructions from this committee. If you do refer it to that committee without instructions, it will not come out during this session of Congress.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. It is not for the Ways and Means Committee to tell the House whether or not they will do certain things. This bill has been brought on the floor and can be amended any way the House sees fit. If the House should choose to refer this measure to the Ways and Means Committee and order them to report it back with the tax measure, it is not for them to say they will not take instructions from this House.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman describe his amendment?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Yes; but I want to say first that the mere fact that this bill may pass is no reason why we should not pass another bill with taxation features coming from the Ways and Means Committee.

My second amendment is one that would give to the President power to close the stock and commodity exchanges as a means of curbing speculation, thereby holding down prices.

My third amendment is one that provides for a blanket draft of all management of industry, commerce, and transportation. I think it is necessary in time of war to give full power to the Government over the management of all industry, commerce, and transportation.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. MONAGHAN. If the gentleman's amendment would send them to the front line trenches, I would vote for it.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. It would if they did not carry on where they were.

Another amendment would change the bill from a wartime licensing of business to an immediate licensing of all munitions industries in order that the Government may control the munitions makers in peace time to prevent them from putting out propaganda that leads to war. There should be an effective embargo on arms. I think that should be provided for immediately, so the Government could control the activities of the munitions makers, who, at the present time, can generate a war and manufacture munitions for both sides. They evaded the embargo of the President by selling munitions to third parties who resell them to the countries in South America who are at war.

My sixth amendment provides for the establishment of a war industries board in peace time so they can have a planned program and keep up to date on the program and keep up to date on the civilian, industrial, and military needs in case of war.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in common with a number of other Members of this House who have spoken on this bill, I am heart and soul in favor of the purposes which the bill declares it is designed to accomplish, but I do not believe it will accomplish any of those purposes.

I have great respect for the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. McSWAIN], an honest gentleman and one of the ablest and most useful Members of this House; but in this bill he and his committee, in attempting to prevent profiteering in time of war, or even to limit the profits of war profiteers by the methods—or lack of them—set forth in this bill, are attempting something as impossible of accomplishment as it would be for a man to try to pull himself up into the air by his own bootstraps.

Not only is the bill useless, but if enacted into law it would be a potent means of helping to promote and bring on war, and it would, in the event of war, be a serious handicap to our Government.

I have read the hearings of the committee on this bill, and I tell you that it is a significant thing that none of the armament makers, steel manufacturers, or the munition makers, or their representatives, appeared at any time in opposition to this bill.

My good friend from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] said, in substance in debate yesterday, that this bill would serve notice upon Mr. Schwab and Mr. Grace and men like them that in future wars their profits would be cut down to the bone.

I do not think they are much disturbed about this bill. They are in favor of it because it will guarantee their profits. They are laughing now about this bill. They were not here opposing it. But in 1933, when we were trying to pass the arms embargo in this House, they were here—the Remingtons and the Colts, the manufacturers of steel, and all the rest who are continually trying to incite war and the rumors of war and who profit by the blood of our sons and the impoverishment of millions of our people. They were here then opposing the arms-embargo bill. And they were here last year, in 1934, when you passed the so-called "naval parity bill", and they were trying to insure the passage of that bill because it meant putting millions and millions into their pockets. And William B. Shearer, the paid provocator—the hireling of the munition makers and the armament makers—was here last year when we were passing the naval-parity bill; the man who came back and sued some of these same munition makers and armament makers for his services at the 1927 Disarmament Conference in trying to break up and prevent any agreement between the nations for the reduction of armament. No; none of these appeared here this year against this bill. They know it will not harm them; they know it will help them.

My good friend from Texas, Mr. THOMASON, another member of the Military Affairs Committee, said, in substance, in debate on Wednesday that, as he recalled, no one appeared who did not approve of the principle of this bill. He forgot that among others who appeared before his committee against this bill there was a noble, courageous woman, the Honorable Jeannette Rankin, a former Member of this House, who at the expense of such ridicule and abuse and persecution as few women, or men either, have the moral strength to endure, voted in 1917 in this House against the declaration of war. I am glad to see that there is at least one man who is still a Member of this House—there may be others—my good friend, Mr. LUNDEEN, still in the House, I am glad to say, who voted against the declaration of war in 1917. I cite this also to show how easy it is to be carried away by mental hysteria in time of war or in the imminence of approaching war, because that scanty number of men and one woman who had the courage to vote against the declaration of war in 1917 were placed, as it were, upon a roll of dishonor then. Thank God, a roll of honor now.

If I had been in this Congress in 1917 I should unquestionably have voted for the declaration of war because I was carried away by that same hysteria which propagandists like Hearst and the paid agents of the profiteers inject into us in order to get us to vote $900,000,000 in a single year, as we are doing this year, in preparation for war. But I would not do it now. I have learned that it is a contest in which no country can win, a game to make a few rich and millions poor. But it will never be necessary for any Member of this House to vote for a declaration of war unless we continue in this mad armament race which we are now urging on and unless we pass measures like this which are only provocative of war.

In reading the committee hearings on this bill I noted that someone asked Miss Rankin and someone else, "Who won the World War, anyway?" implying, I suppose, that we and the Allies won it, and she very aptly replied, "Who won the San Francisco earthquake?" If that question did not involve such tragic thoughts and memories it would be comic enough to ask the end man at a minstrel show, "Who did win the World War, anyway, Brother Bones?" Why, the war profiteers are the only ones who won the World War, because they added to their swollen fortunes; they increased the wealth and power of a few men at the cost of millions of heartaches and a hell of suffering beyond the power of my tongue to describe.

I wish I had the time to analyze this bill, dissect it, and use facts, figures, and arguments to tell you what it is, but in the space of time under the control of time as it is I could not get time to do it. I can only strike a blow at it where I would like to destroy it.

I thought at first glance at this bill that it was a harmless bill, an innocuous bill, as harmless as a dove. It seemed to me at first only like the resolution of a high-school debating society; but upon examination I find that it is a vicious bill, a dangerous bill. Clothed with a fair exterior, it is, underneath, a sepulcher of hypocrisy and iniquity. It is merely another of the means of preparing for war instead of securing peace.

The Nye committee has spent several months in investigating the munitions makers and the causes of war. They have prepared a bill to help remove the causes of war. That bill, as one of its vital provisions, confers the power to tax the excess profits of war profiteers out of existence. That bill is already encountering the active opposition of those who profit by war. The Nye bill should be passed. This bill will hinder its passage.

The high-sounding purposes declared in this bill as a declaration of policy—as they have been termed—will have some hope of accomplishment by the passage of the Nye bill.

The Nye committee is opposed to the passage of this bill.

This bill is bad because it provides that whenever Congress shall either declare war or the existence of an emergency due to the imminence of war, such a declaration, namely, of an emergency due to the imminence of war, would in itself be one of the most potent means of bringing on a war. It is bad because it guarantees profits through its price-fixing provisions. It is bad because the length of time that would be required for the President to determine at what level or ceiling, or whatever other delightfully vague term may be used, prices shall be frozen, the profiteering would have gone on; and even then the prices must necessarily be fixed so as to furnish some profit, as has been so ably pointed out. That would mean a multiplying of profits many times over due to the increased demand not merely of so-called "war munitions" but of all commodities—food and other commodities—in time of war.

And let me say this to those of you who believe that until we tax all of the war profits out of existence we have no right to conscript labor, that this bill cannot be so amended as not directly or indirectly to confer the power to conscript labor unless you take section 3 out of the bill entirely.

I noticed some vagueness and hesitation when the committee was asked the meaning of the term "unorganized militia", and I looked it up in section I of the National Defense Act, where it is defined. It is not limited to those capable of bearing arms. It consists of all able-bodied male citizens of the United States and all other able-bodied males who have, or shall have, declared their intention to become citizens of the United States between the ages of 18 years and 45. The bill limits it to the years between 21 and 31.

And even if you insert the word "military" before the word "service", you cannot cure it. Let me point out to you that in the French railway strike in 1924 the strike was broken because France had a law somewhat similar to this, and they conscripted all of the railroad workers into the army, and then put the army in charge of running the railroads.

Since under this rule we cannot so amend this bill as to tax war profits, let us not make the serious mistake of guaranteeing and freezing war profits.

There is no way to cure the defects in this bill and leave anything that would be one particle of use to us, either to secure peace, to prevent war, to equalize the burdens of war, or to increase our efficiency in time of war. The only way to cure this bill is to defeat it.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we had quite a colloquy here awhile ago about trying to make a good bill out of this measure by trying to get an agreement to send this bill to the Ways and Means Committee, so that this committee that has exclusive jurisdiction of all tax matters could attach to it certain tax amendments, but no agreement was reached. I am not critical, and I am sure the others who oppose this bill are not critical, of the limited jurisdiction of the committee that brought out this legislation; however, it is unfortunate that some one particular committee does not have sufficient jurisdiction to handle the different phases of the subject matter of taking the profits out of war. We could have cured that situation had we had a rule submitted which would have given authority to consider tax amendments. This was not done for reasons stated here yesterday and today.

Since the rule has been adopted, as I understand the parliamentary situation now existing, the only way by which we can consider tax amendments in connection with this piece of legislation at this time, that will make this measure the kind of a bill it ought to be, is after we have considered the bill and the various amendments to move to commit the bill to the Ways and Means Committee, which does have the authority to place in this measure the necessary tax provisions. We can perfect this bill with the other different amendments that may be offered during its course through the House.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I say to the gentleman that I have no objection to that feature. I do not want the gentleman to get a misunderstanding as to my position. I have no objection to this bill being submitted or referred to the Ways and Means Committee. My objection was to the "with instructions."

Mr. McFARLANE. May I say to the gentleman, as I understand it from the parliamentarian, it is impossible for the House under the rules to refer a bill to the Ways and Means Committee with instructions to report back a tax measure; but we can refer the bill to the committee and have that committee give it the consideration that the bill ought to have. If that committee does not bring it back here for consideration, then we can take such steps as we deem necessary to bring the legislation before the House.

Mr. McCORMACK. That was not the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. McFARLANE. I am not critical of the gentleman. I am trying to put before the House the parliamentary situation as clearly as I can showing how we can at this time in connection with this bill get proper legislation before the House without considering the matter piecemeal.

Here is what I am fearful of and others are fearful of: If we pass this measure without any tax provision and without amendments that will make it really an effective bill, because this measure just guarantees profits, and that is all it does; and there is no use beating the devil around the bush about it. It conscripts labor, but it does not conscript capital, as it is written; but, of course, those provisions will be amended. It conscripts the man and makes cannon fodder of him, but it does not affect, except in a limited way, any profits. So let us not send a bill over to the Senate that the Senate cannot place tax amendments on or that they cannot place amendments on that are not germane to the subject matter as it comes from the House. Let us amend this bill and do a complete job of it at one time while this subject is before the House so that when we send the bill to the Senate the Senate will have a bill to work on and one that they can amend by placing proper amendments in the bill should they decide our amendments inadequate. If the House will commit this bill to Ways and Means so that we can add the tax provisions we can in conference take care of this whole situation in one piece of legislation and not do it piecemeal.

What I am afraid of if we now pass this bill is that we will not be able to later get a tax bill out of the Ways and Means Committee, and that is why I think we ought to follow the course that has been suggested. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNERY: On page 1, line 8, after the word "article", strike out the words "or thing."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, this may seem a small amendment, but nevertheless, in consulting with the legislative counsel, he said there was a great possibility that the word "thing", in the hysteria of war, could easily be considered to mean labor, and I want to protect labor where in this bill it provides that it "shall be unlawful for any person to buy, sell, or otherwise contract for any article or thing." In other words, if they were contracting for their labor and this word "thing" were in the bill and was considered to include labor—which we refuse to concede because we say labor is not a commodity—nevertheless, the whole matter could become so involved that for the safety of labor in this regard I desire to strike out these two words which do not interfere with any other matter in the sentence.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I am in agreement with the gentleman about labor being protected, but I rise to ask the gentleman, even with this provision in the bill, will there be any difference, so far as this entire measure is concerned, due to the fact that it is not a bill which will accomplish or do that which it purports to do, namely, take profits out of war and take profits out of preparation for war?

Mr. CONNERY. I am in entire agreement, of course, with respect to taxes and taking the profits out of war. I am the last one who would not want to do that, and I have every good reason. While we were over in France the profiteers were home, making millions. So I do not have to offer any defense on that proposition, but I was afraid to see this bill recommitted to the Ways and Means Committee without labor being protected before it went to the Ways and Means Committee, for fear it might come back with the tax that the gentleman wishes, but with no protection for labor.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Does the gentleman then propose that this bill be referred to the Ways and Means Committee so that in this bill we may have the solution of the problem which every one of us desires to settle through this measure?

Mr. CONNERY. So far as I am concerned, if we can go along with this bill and agree upon amendments which will protect labor and then send it to the Ways and Means Committee and that committee takes care of the taxation and brings back the same bill with protection for labor, of course I would favor this.

I think I have explained very clearly to the Committee what I am after with respect to striking out these words "or thing", and I shall not take any further time of the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CONNERY) there were—ayes 30, noes 57.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. CONNERY and Mr. MCSWAIN.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—51 ayes, 78 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "person", insert a comma and the following: "firm, partnership, or corporation."

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, while I think it is unnecessary, the committee will accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was adopted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "thing", at the end of the line, insert "the use or consumption of which is essential in the judgment of the President for the prosecution of the war."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I do not mean to reflect, of course, on the intelligence or motives of any Member of the House; but as I read this first section and endeavor to analyze its implications and ramifications, I am wondering if we are not about as hysterical today as it is charged we were when we entered the war back in 1917.

The bill issues a mandate that a so-called "ceiling of prices" be imposed upon every article or thing produced in the United States. Every article or thing produced in the country is to have a price fixed at the maximum level reflected on a day selected by the President.

Mind you, the President has no discretion except the selection of the day governing the maximum price. I ask you to visualize the effect of any such attempt. It will apply not only to munitions of war, it will apply not only to the shoes the soldier must wear, the clothing, and the food that he must eat. It will apply to pins, dress, lipsticks, all articles of women's clothing, every sort of thing you can think of. It would apply to tens and tens and tens of thousands of different articles which will have nothing to do with the conduct of the war. Under the mandatory statute a ceiling price shall be put upon them all.

Visualize, if you can, the immense problem that is going to follow this mandate.

We are a people of 125,000,000 or more, millions scattered all over a continent, and all of a sudden, by proclamation, it is decreed that no one in the entire country shall sell any article whatsoever at a price higher than existed on a certain date, that date to be selected by the President. It would take the Army you raise to police this job. The danger is that you will clutter up your Government to such an extent with insoluble domestic problems that it will not have a chance to fight the enemy, or will be greatly handicapped in it. When this country gets into war, and none of us wants that, the first thing to be certain of is that it wins the war. Let us not saddle upon the President, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, a task as utterly impossible as this. My amendment proposes simply to apply this section to all those articles which, in the judgment of the President, are necessary for the successful prosecution of the war. Then he can select the articles which fall under the term or title of munitions.

Mr. DINGELL. Will bread come in under that definition?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly. You cannot fight a war without bread, but you can fight a war without silk stockings.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Why should anybody profit during the war?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would not say that a person profits by reason of a war or during a war because he makes a profit on selling a pair of silk stockings or an ash tray or a lip stick or any one of the thousands of things that one can think of. What I want to do is to simplify the prosecution of the war at the hands of the Commander in Chief. You are putting on him in this situation a burden which no human being or set of human beings can carry through.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Does not the gentleman think the possibilities of war will be much less if no one could profit during the war?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Possibly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has put his finger on the nerve of this proposition, and he has put it just where I submit the profiteers would like to have it, and why? I do not, of course, intend to reflect in any respect upon the distinguished gentleman, but this matter was argued out before the War Policies Commission and this committee. If you do not clamp down a maximum price beyond which prices cannot rise on everything, then all these other commodities which the President may not proclaim as essential to war will begin to rise, and they will be factors in the price of essential commodities themselves, and an effort will then be brought to bear upon the President, through section 2, which gives him the right as it must to raise or lower prices according to the proof that may be made to appear at the time, to raise the price of munitions. The President or his agents will be importuned, and they will be told, "You must raise the price of munitions, you must raise the price of steel, you must raise the price of nitrogen and of shoes and bread and all these things that go into munitions of war, because all these other things down underneath have gone up." For instance, they will say that the girls who work in the factories putting the fuzes on shells are wearing silk stockings, and they must have higher wages with which to pay for them. No, Mr. Chairman, that has been thrashed out to the complete satisfaction of the War Policies Commission. Who made up that War Policies Commission? Four Members of this House, 2 Democrats and 2 Republicans; 4 Members of the Senate, 2 Democrats and 2 Republicans; and 6 members of the President's Cabinet, everyone a Republican. And all of that entire War Policies Commission agreed that the only means of solving this problem was to clamp down this ceiling of prices upon every commodity.

That does not mean there shall be no competition underneath, beneath the ceiling. If anybody can sell pins more cheaply than they were selling at 60 days before we entered the war, if that be the date fixed by the President, let him sell them more cheaply. This does not say that there shall be no competition downward, but it does say there shall be no competition upward. If we should adopt this amendment, we will strike at the vitals of the thing we are seeking here, to prevent the rise of any prices on anything whatsoever, so that there can be no excuse for the President or anybody representing him to raise prices.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hope that I can express myself in the form of a question, because I know the gentleman's time is limited. The gentleman has stated, has he not, that in his opinion the price of these nonessential goods will rise to unheard-of levels if my amendment should be adopted, and that that price in turn would encourage a price rise in the essential goods? Prices do not rise without demand, and if you restrict the prices of the essential goods you will stop the war profits as such, which cannot thereafter be spent to pay great big prices for nonessential goods. Where can there be any greater demand in time of war for pins than in time of peace?

Mr. McSWAIN. Oh, but silk stockings constituted the gentleman's question. Pins are not a fair test. Yes, the demand will depend upon the ability to buy, and since all the people will be employed making munitions preparing for war, since millions will be going out to fight, and those who labor will be in demand, they will have money to buy luxuries. They will have the result of the wages of everybody with which to buy, and that will raise the price of these nonessential commodities, and the first thing you know they will begin to mount and mount and mount, and we will have just the condition we had the last time. That has been fought over, and we ask you to vote down the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAUTHOFF: Page 1, line 10, after the word "determined" change the period to a comma, and add the following: "except that all agricultural products shall first be guaranteed cost of production to the producer. Such cost of production shall include the cost of seed, labor, depreciation of machinery, and all buildings used in producing such agricultural products, reasonable rental value of the land used in producing the same, pro rata share of taxes, fire and windstorm insurance, and any and all other costs necessary and essential to the production of such agricultural products, plus a reasonable profit."

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. The amendment, on the face of it, is not germane to this section nor to the bill. There is nothing in this section about guaranteeing any costs or the fixing of any costs of any product.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF] care to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I should like to be heard briefly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I believe this amendment is germane to the bill for this reason: The President, as the chairman has said, is authorized and empowered to fix a ceiling, beyond which nothing that is produced shall go in time of war. What my amendment seeks to do, as far as agricultural products are concerned, is to be sure that that ceiling is not fixed below the cost of production, because we all know that in at least the last 5 years the farmer has not been getting the cost of production for his goods. If there should be a date fixed at any time within the last 5 years, then the farmer, as usual, and as during the World War, will once more be getting "gypped." I offered this amendment in the hope that he will be protected.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WARREN). This is a bill which seeks to take the profit out of war. There is nothing in it that would guarantee profits. The Chair thinks the amendment is clearly not germane and, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEE of Oklahoma: At the end of section 1, page 1, the following subsection shall be inserted, to read as follows: "(b) Beginning from the date of the declaration of war the per diem pay of soldiers shall be a sum equal to the daily wage of unskilled labor as of the date proclaimed by the President for price determination, and the President is hereby authorized and directed to determine and proclaim the amount of that wage."

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. It is clearly out of order. There is nothing in the bill about fixing any wage for any soldier or for any other group or for any other class.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I ask the gentleman not to press the point of order, but to hear me on it.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The gentleman can be heard on the point of order, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama reserve the point of order?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I will withhold the point of order temporarily.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, first, I want to say that the very purpose of this bill is to equalize the burdens of war. That is what it says. This would equalize the burdens of war. Then, again, this amendment is based upon the rate of pay of labor, which would be fixed by this section, and I cannot see why it is not in order.

Now, as to the amendment itself, if we had something like this, we would not have an argument 15 years afterward on adjusting the pay of the soldiers. Why is it right for a soldier to go to war for a dollar a day and a chance to die and labor to draw $7 a day at the same time? Taking as an average period of service 16 months, the difference between what a soldier draws and what a worker draws is $2,800. Now, that is a terrible penalty to place on patriotism. Of course, it is said we should be glad to serve because of patriotism. We are guaranteed nice clean wounds and we will be applauded when we march down the streets. Are we to be penalized for being patriotic? If we remained out of the service, we could have earned more in almost any business that we turned our hands to. I see nothing wrong about setting the rate of pay of a soldier at least equivalent to that of unskilled labor. In most businesses the greater the hazard the greater the pay. Here is the most hazardous occupation in the world, with the lowest pay—75 cents a day and a chance to die. You thought we got a dollar a day. We did, but we paid $8.50 a month back to the Government, and out of that fund, $408,000,000, we paid the death claims of our dead buddies. That is the first nucleus that paid the death claims of our dead buddies.

Mr. Chairman, I think this is germane. I think it is in point. It equalizes the burden. You ask the soldier to bear all the physical dangers and at the same time take the greatest economic loss of anyone. Gentlemen, I ask you to support this amendment. I hope the Chair will rule that the amendment is germane, because it is in point on this question. You are fixing the price of everything else. Then why not fix the rate of the soldier's pay at least equal to that of the day laborer?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. If only it could be declared germane, and I hope it will be, it will be the first break that the man who does the fighting has ever had.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman; he is right.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. May I say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that when these men who do the fighting come back incapacitated to the extent they cannot work, the pension paid them by the Federal Government is such a small insignificant amount of money that it does not pay for food and rent, $35 a month, and $50 a month to those who lost their sight; yet these men were willing to go further, even to the extent of sacrificing their lives for their country.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. The gentleman is right. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, this bill is not the proper bill in which to fix the pay of soldiers. That proposition ought to come up in a separate bill; and, of course, in the event of another war it will come up in a separate bill for general military purposes.

The gentleman proceeds on the theory that because some unskilled labor in this country received $7 a day in the last war that unskilled labor will receive that much if we have another war. The truth is that if this bill we have before us becomes law and operates as we expect it to operate there will be no such wages paid during the next war. I do not think that here and now in legislation that really does not deal with the subject of pay of soldiers we ought to try to fix the pay of soldiers for the next war if there should be one. The amendment certainly is not germane, and I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair hear me on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wisconsin on the point of order.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama stated that this bill does not fix the wages of soldiers during any war that may come in the future and based his point of order on the ground that the amendment was not germane to the bill. As I understand it the gentleman did not make any point of order that the amendment was not germane to the section.

I call the Chair's attention to the language in section 3 of the bill, beginning in line 12, that—

> The President be, and he hereby is, authorized to draft into the service of the United States such members of the unorganized militia between the ages of 21 and 31 as he may deem necessary subject to such conditions, exemptions, rules, and regulations as the President may subscribe and publicly proclaim.

It seems to me that under the provisions of that language the President could fix the salary, wages, or compensation paid those members of the unorganized militia who should be drafted in the service; and in view of the fact that he is authorized and directed to fix that compensation, it seems to me the amendment is germane to the bill. The amendment provides that the compensation paid to soldiers shall not be less than that paid to civilian laborers who are not in the military forces.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair holds that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma is not germane to section 1 of the bill and, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, we have been considering this section now for about an hour. It is the desire of the management that this bill be concluded today in order that we may have the week-end in which to get some rest we badly need.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto conclude in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I shall object unless I can be heard on paragraph 1. I want to find out what this really means to the agricultural sections of the country. If the chairman of the committee intends to foreclose on us, I can only acquiesce, but I do want to be heard.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman must not misunderstand me; it is not my desire to cut off anyone, not at all; and that has been very manifest. If the gentleman desires 5 minutes, I will modify my request and put it in the form of a motion.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto conclude in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania offers the following amendment: Page 1, line 2, strike out all of the remaining language after the word "assembled" and insert in lieu thereof the following:
> "That in the event of war no American citizens shall be sent out of the United States or any of its possessions for military service."

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that clearly it is not germane to the section.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, but the Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I shall consume but a moment of time. My amendment, if it could be adopted, undoubtedly would prevent war. This is the reason I think it ought to be held to be germane: If it is not germane, at least it is very humane, and, therefore, ought to be germane. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not pass on the humaneness of the amendment; but so far as the germaneness of the amendment is concerned, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the first section.

Mr. Chairman, I raised the question yesterday as to what effect this bill would have upon the agricultural sections of the country, if passed as it reads at present.

I have no doubt about the zeal and sincerity of the chairman of this committee. The compliments paid the gentleman yesterday were fully deserved. I have not his acquaintance, but I realize his desire is to present a proper bill to take the profits out of war; a general proposition to which 90 percent of the Membership will agree. But here is a bill which provides that automatically on a date to be determined upon by the President all prices are going to be fixed as of that date.

Mr. Chairman, we have been here for 5 years from the Middle West trying to get a parity of prices on farm products as compared with industry. We have not succeeded, and today we are worse off than we were when we started, 5 years ago. At the present the index of prices on agricultural products is about 21 to 22 percent below 100, while the prices on manufactured products are from 16 to 18 points above. If you are going to put through a law of this kind, which is going to freeze agricultural prices down to a point where the farmer will be struggling along, almost on the border of bankruptcy, for an existence, and fix the prices of industrial products at higher levels, which, under the N. R. A., must have a 10-percent profit, allow the price of things the farmer buys to remain where they are, or higher, then you are going to have more trouble in time of war than these gentlemen may anticipate.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. McSWAIN. Of course, the gentleman must understand that war, we hope, is a long ways ahead and that the agricultural situation will have been corrected and that the parity which is so desirable will have been established long before we have another war. But in the event the situation should not be straightened out, under section 2, all of us who are vitally interested in that agricultural proposition may go to the President, make a showing, and get relief against the ceiling that shall be established by the proclamation. Surely we must trust somebody, and we must put the power in time of war in the hands of the President.

Mr. HULL. I appreciate the gentleman's statement, but the fact remains that we have had a situation here for 5 years. It would seem just now that war is more imminent than is obtaining parity prices for our agricultural products.

Mr. LUCKEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. LUCKEY. Does the gentleman recall that during the World War the farmers' price for wheat was fixed at $2.50 while the steel companies made a profit of over 1,000 percent?

Mr. HULL. I will mention that in just a moment.

Mr. Chairman, we have had some experience out in the Middle West in reference to the fixing for farm product prices in time of war. The Food Administration fixed our prices during the World War. As the gentleman stated, they fixed the price of wheat, and also many other farm products. Here is another thing they did. To make sure that the dairy section of the Northwest might become acquainted with "coconut-cow" butter, called "oleomargarine", they passed a regulation which compelled us to buy a pound of that filthy stuff every time we bought a pound of butter, and when we declined to eat it we were called unpatriotic.

Mr. Chairman, we have had experience. Now they ask that the President be given power to fix prices. The President will not have the opportunity in time of war to even consider our complaints. He has not even the time to consider them in time of peace. Furthermore, may I say that we have tried for years to get some action here which would permit us to live as a part of this great country, out there in the Middle West, pay our taxes, pay our debts, and provide for our families. Even now in time of peace we are not able to obtain that.

May I say further that we are at this time suffering out there in the Middle West because of a policy that permits millions of dollars of agricultural products to be brought from abroad to this country to compete with our products and drive down the prices. As an illustration, only recently 8,000,000 bushels of rye came in from Poland to compete with and drive down the price of our domestic rye, and there was back of it a bonus of 30 cents a bushel paid by Poland. Our western farmers have been to the White House. We have been to the State Department and to the A. A. A. The only answer we get in this situation is that because our country sells more goods to Poland than we buy back it must not be interfered with.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WADSWORTH: On page 1, line 10, after the word "determined", at the end of the line add the following: "Provided, That the President may, by appropriate Executive order, exempt from the provisions of this section such articles and things imported from foreign countries which in his judgment should, in the interest of the United States, be exempt."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with the fixing of the ceiling of prices. In the matter of importations we cannot control the ceiling. We may declare it, but we cannot control it, because the foreigner puts the price on his goods. We have to have certain articles from outside this country when we go to war. For example, 90 percent of the manganese used in the United States is mined abroad. Manganese is a necessity in connection with the hardening and clarifying of steel. An equally large percentage of tin we must get from abroad, war or no war.

The amendment which I offer merely authorizes the President to exempt from the provisions of the first section those articles imported from abroad which in his judgment are necessary for the interest of the United States. It has nothing to do with the control of profits, it will not disturb the domestic ceiling at all, and it may prove vitally important.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. McSWAIN. Is not the purpose of the gentleman's amendment that on what the Government must import for its use the President may pay a higher price, if necessary, than what prevails domestically at a time prior to the war?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Government and private industry both. Suppose the Government makes a contract with private industry for the manufacture of armor plate or guns and you have placed a ceiling on the price of manganese. The President has not any right to change the ceiling except on the day fixed for all the articles. Now, that private manufacturer has got to have manganese.

The seller abroad fixes the price, whatever the ceiling is in this country, and all my amendment does is to permit the President to exempt from these ceiling provisions things we must have from abroad regardless of price.

Mr. McSWAIN. Would it not be entirely possible, though, in the event that the Government had to place contracts with steel concerns for the manufacture of steel for war purposes, for the Government to furnish the manganese and the tin and let that be taken into consideration in the price? I am afraid to leave this open to private concerns. If the Government is going to handle it, all well and good.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would be only in those cases where the President himself decides it is necessary for the interests of the United States. If you do not trust your President, what are you going to do? I tell you, you are putting your country in jeopardy when you interfere with imports coming into this country in time of war.

Mr. McSWAIN. We do not put the country in jeopardy, and I am suggesting to the gentleman an amendment to his proposal limiting it to importations by the Government for war purposes; and, if the gentleman will modify his proposal in this respect, so far as I am concerned, as I see it, I think it is proper to let the Government supply the material.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then that puts the Government into the business.

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes; into the business of importing.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, according to the language of this bill, it is somewhat different from the previous declaration of war by this House, yet to me it seems we are just naturally and logically approaching war without an enemy in sight, as we did in 1917.

You have all read Woodward on General Grant, as well as on George Washington, and you will recall how he described the approach of General Grant on Richmond. He said it was difficult for him to find language properly to describe that momentous event, and it was rather homely at that when he said he moved upon Richmond in a kind of "sidling way." This is what I see here. We are approaching war in a kind of sidling, indirect way, but nevertheless approaching it, if this bill means anything.

While you are on the subject, and I have just a few minutes—I do not like to say "caution you", because I hear so many people warning men about things when I know the men they warn have just as much sense as they have, but you are thinking people and I know that you are informed on this question, but as one of those who has had experience in seeing the approach of war, I think we ought to exercise great caution in this respect.

We are now lamenting the fact that the farmer was outraged by the Food Commission, even though it was conducted by a former President of the United States. He may have had his limitations, too. We know they put a price of $2.22 on wheat, while the American people had to take the sweepings from the mills, if not almost the streets, while the wheat was sent to foreign countries.

I should like to have the chairman explain whether this ceiling, or this new designation for the top of things, is to be applied to our allies, if we have any, as we did the last time, and if we are going to strip and impoverish this Nation again when a similar opportunity exists. If you had given the farmer what he ought to have had, $5 a bushel for his wheat, he could have paid off his mortgages and you would never have heard anything about his coming here to borrow money. I beseech you not to walk into any such trap as that and put the power into the hands of any man to take the substance of this country and practically give it to Europe in the face of their defiance of every law of ethics in not paying their debts when the opportunity came instead of preparing for more war. I should like to ask my most delightful friend, who has gone so laboriously into this matter and made such a fine analysis of it, whether this thought has occurred to him, as he was here with me when the other war came on and saw us pay $2.22 for the wheat, when the farmers should have received $5, and when we paid $1 a pound for butter, and $1.10 a dozen for eggs. Are you going to give him the benefit of legitimate prices, or are you going to make a present of his product to some supposed ally?

You know that on the other occasion we were not going into war, and it was stated that we should "think in terms of neutrality", yes, "he kept us out of war," and believe that there was no such thing approaching as war until we came down here one morning and were hurried into this Chamber and were asked to declare war. I say you are more nearly in war by the terms of this bill than you were in the war of 1917, until we actually came on the floor of this House and were asked by the President of the United States to sanction what he had practically already done and declare war.

Therefore I caution you, in the light of my experience, to be careful how you vote to delegate power, and think of what is liable to happen in view of the experience we have had in the past. Better outlaw war excepting for self-defense than now tamper with it and make the country again war minded. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WADSWORTH) there were—ayes 30, noes 72.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Whenever in the sole discretion of the President he shall determine that any maximum price, rent, rate, commission, compensation, or reward shall be adjusted either upward or downward he is hereby authorized to make and publicly proclaim such adjustment, and such adjustment shall have the full force and effect under this statute of such price, rent, rate, commission, compensation, or reward before such adjustment.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "whenever", insert "during the period of any war."

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I believe this bill rightfully should have been given a different name. As I read its broad provisions, giving great power to a benevolent President, I cannot help conjuring up in my mind what a dangerous thing it would be in the hands of an autocratic ruler.

For that reason, and having reviewed the bill in its entirety, the dangerous provisions which give a draft power to the President, and a power which not only does not destroy profits but can even be so administered as to guarantee profits, I have renamed the bill "A bill to guarantee profiteering in time of war and to place the burdens of war on the common people and thus provide for the national defense and promote warfare."

This bill can have no other effect, as the gentleman who preceded me so well said, than to promote war. Analyze its provisions and you will find that it may guarantee profits. Section 1 provides:

That whenever Congress shall declare war or the existence of an emergency due to the imminence of war, then from and after a date prior to such declaration, which date the President is hereby authorized and directed to determine and publicly proclaim it shall be unlawful for any person to buy, sell, or otherwise contract for any article or thing at a higher rate, rent, price, commission, compensation, or reward than was in effect at the date so determined.

Assuming that a man should be elected President of the United States other than the great champion of the "forgotten man", Franklin D. Roosevelt, he could set the price of commodities at a date of high prices, for example, back in the 1929 level, and thereby guarantee to the munition manufacturers and others who promote war for their own selfish purposes a higher profit than they might otherwise make.

The other power to which I raise strenuous objection is that contained in section 3, which is an obnoxious and objectionable power given to the President of the United States in peace time when the drums of war are resounding on every international horizon. There is grave danger in such action at this hour, when our great leader, who believes in peace and speaks of peace, is the only leader on the international stage who is not engaged in sword rattling.

I believe the bill will promote and instigate war propaganda. I believe that there is no way to promote peace but to legislate for peace, to promote war, legislative for war. To bring about peace we must think peace, talk peace, act peace, and legislate peace.

I have always believed that the way to peace was threefold: Taking the profit out of the blood money of war, educating for peace, and submitting the question of war to the people for their direct consideration.

One need only consider the number of millionaires created during the World War to become convinced that conscription of profits and conscription of wealth in war time and, if possible, in peace time especially as to munition manufacturing, is necessary if we are to attain peace.

Mothers bear the sons who battle. Wives sacrifice their husbands to the Nation in such a crisis. The miners who dig the ore, the men who work on farms, produce the war materials. Is it not, therefore, reasonable to suggest that the question of war be submitted to those who bear the brunt of battle? Rather than provide that, this bill specifically declares for their conscription against their will and wish.

Our fathers thought that honor could not refuse the challenge to the duel. We do. Our fathers thought we could not hear around the world. We do. Our fathers thought that men of divers creeds in concord could not live. We do. And some there are who say that we cannot live without war. But we can and will, and the only way to do it is by taking in a real manner the profits out of war and not by passage of a measure that is, as I have termed it before, a sugar-coated draft measure.

This bill legislates war, not peace, and it does not take profits out of war. There is only one bill proposed to date that will take the profit out of war, and that is the bill that Senator NYE, who has so ably conducted the investigation into the munition manufacturers' profiteering, has presented. I hope this bill will be defeated, and that we will adopt no amendments that will place a greater sugar-coating on a bill that has been so misnamed as this. [Applause.]

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, while we are discussing the control of profits in the time of war, it might be well to consider for a moment those forces that are operating in the United States at the present time, who are so intent upon grabbing their own profits just now that they are perfectly willing to make us industrially helpless, should war ever come.

I refer to those invidious forces who from the termination of President Wilson's term until the election of President Roosevelt deluged this country with false propaganda and used their power on three very weak Executives of the United States in such a way as to induce them to thwart the will of the Congress of the United States, by preventing the Government from operating its hydroelectric plant in the Tennessee Valley.

Now that they have been disappointed in their first attempt, they are endeavoring to stir up industry generally by disseminating propaganda throughout the Northern States to the effect that the Federal Government is sending agencies throughout the North to solicit factories and industry to leave the North and go to the Tennessee Valley. Through the South they are agitating opposition to the Government by telling industries down there that the T. V. A. activities ought to be stopped at once, because under private control solicitations of northern industries can take place, whereas under Federal control this cannot happen. They are trying to get the North to tie the hands of the Government in this activity, which is the very heart of our future military function, by telling them that the Federal Government is soliciting their industries to go south. They are urging the chambers of commerce in the South to embarrass the Government in every way, by telling them that the Federal Government cannot do this solicitation and that private industry alone can benefit them in this way.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I cannot yield.

Mr. MAY. Then I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking in order under the rule under which this bill is being considered.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, the last word is the word "adjustment" and I am talking on the general subject of adjustment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed in order.

Mr. HARLAN. Recently the Chamber of Commerce of Ohio circularized all of its members with a letter containing this propaganda, and not one word of evidence on which it could be based. In the meantime, Mr. Wilkie, president of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, of whom every Member of Congress is probably familiar, because he has taken an active part in all forms of lobbying against every action of this administration to control the securities market, to provide reasonable honesty in the sale of stocks, and to control stock gambling generally. Wherever the Government has attempted in any way to interfere with the old game of which Mr. Wilkie is so familiar, he has been on the firing line looking after the boys that get theirs out of the unsuspecting.

Mr. Wilkie, since he happened to be talking in Alabama, criticized the Federal Government very much because it could not go into the North and solicit business. Here is what he says:

I can tell you why we maintain an office in New York * * *. It is solely because of two reasons: First, to have a convenient and advantageous point from which we can work with the Alabama Power Co. and other companies to secure the removal of northern industry to this area. How successfully we have done this, perhaps you can judge by the fact that in the past decade the new industries division of the Alabama Power Co. aided directly or indirectly in the location of 245 new industries in 129 different communities in your State * * *.

After making an investigation of this northern propaganda, I wrote a letter to the secretary of the Ohio Chamber of Commerce, which under permission I shall read into the RECORD:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 22, 1935.

MR. GEORGE B. CHANDLER,
Secretary Ohio Chamber of Commerce,
Huntington Bank Building, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR MR. CHANDLER: I have delayed answering yours of the 4th, as I wished to be absolutely certain of my facts. It might be well to review them.

On February 11, you issued, on the stationary of the Ohio Chamber of Commerce, a vitriolic canard against the administration, in which you state:

"Those chambers of commerce in the north which were recently shocked to find representatives of the Tennessee Valley Authority in their cities, calling upon their industries to urge them to move to southern cities to secure cheap power rates, cheap labor, etc., will now receive a second shock when they learn that David E. Lilienthal, Director of the Tennessee Valley Authority, is advocating a changed freight rate structure to give the Tennessee Valley additional advantages industrially. He is also advocating extension of credit by the Federal Government itself to prospective industry which may locate in the Tennessee Valley."

You then quote from a speech of Mr. Lilienthal which does not bear out a single statement made in your initial paragraph. All that Mr. Lilienthal stated in his address before the Birmingham Rotary Club was that more equitable freight rates and new capital were very desirable to develop the Birmingham area. I suppose that same speech has been made in Columbus before many luncheon clubs, and I doubt if it ever received the interpretation which you have placed upon the Lilienthal pep talk.

In your next paragraph you criticize the Government for approving codes that gave the southern districts some wage advantage. If these codes had been imposed by the Government there might be some little merit to this criticism, but inasmuch as they were drafted and approved by the industrial bodies themselves, the basis for comment is decidedly vague.

The rest of your document was taken up with charges that representatives of the Tennesse Valley Authority were touring the northern States to entice industries to the South. In my letter of February 21, I asked you to produce the facts. In reply you quote the remarks of a Mr. Harvey Campbell, of the Detroit Board of Commerce, who, apparently, had no more facts than you.

You then quote an editorial from the Cincinnati Enquirer, which refers to a list of industries that might be improved by going to the Tennessee Valley, but no facts at all about any solicitation. You also quote a letter from a Mr. Slack, who talks about a man 50 years of age, of dark complexion, 5 feet 10 inches tall, and weighing 190 pounds, who called on him and solicited him to go to the Tennessee Valley development. Of course, that is a perfect basis for you to make the additional statement that this man was connected with the Tennessee Valley Authority and in the employ of the Federal Government.

It is entirely a natural thing for chambers of commerce and real-estate development concerns to do things of this kind. But it is a decidedly unnatural thing, and an unfair thing, for you to send out, speaking with authority, a statement that these men are connected with the United States Government.

It is just such propaganda as this that is keeping business concerns constantly stirred up, for a most obviously political purpose. The same thing that you are trying to do is, of course, being done in the South, except that there the line of chatter is that the Federal Government ought to be stopped at once, because it is only private-power concerns that can go into the North and solicit business. Therefore, as long as the Federal Government is developing this territory, there is no chance of inducing other industry.

Mr. Wilkie, president of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, in an address in Birmingham, Ala., on November 7, 1934, referred to this in the following words:

"Dr. Morgan said it was against the policy of the T. V. A. to remove industries from other sections of the country to the Tennessee Valley. I understand why the T. V. A. must take this position. The Alabama Power Co. can remove industries from the North because it is a business concern, but the T. V. A. can't remove them because it is a part of our Government, and therefore has to think of the political effect on the community from which the industry is removed." * * *

I have before me a letter from Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, Chairman of the Board of the Tennessee Valley Authority, in which he expressly said that there is not one iota of fact to substantiate the statement that any representatives of the Tennessee Valley Authority have ever taken part in any of the activities such as you set forth in your letter.

Yours very truly,

BYRON B. HARLAN.

I feel that these matters ought to be carried in a public record, so that those who have just received one type of propaganda may be in a position to know what is going on in other sections of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Without objection, the pro forma amendments are withdrawn. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SWEENEY. Am I in order to move to strike out the enacting clause?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman would be in order.

Mr. SWEENEY. I move to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. Does not such a motion have to be in writing?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The motion must be in writing. The gentleman will send his motion to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SWEENEY moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I made this motion to strike out the enacting clause for the purpose of trying to bring to your attention my opinion at least that before we enact a law that will draft human beings I want to see brought into this House a tax measure to take excess profits out of war. The committee has spent considerable space in its hearings report, on page 8, paying tribute to Mr. Bernard Baruch for the splendid advice he gave them in telling them how to take profits out of war. The committee could find no better man than Mr. Baruch to discuss that subject. In all fairness to him and his colleagues who served on the War Industries Board and the War Finance Corporation, let me say they made possible 30,000 millionaires as a result of the last war. Men who had political influence could come to Washington and get a loan to build an airplane factory, to manufacture airplanes, and the planes never left the ground. They could come and get money to build munitions factories to make imperfect shells and to build boats that never left the rivers and harbors, all contracts on a cost-plus 10-percent basis.

I have heard men in this House get up here and apologize for their action on Good Friday, April 6, 1917, when they were carried away with the stress of emotion and the propaganda of Lord Northcliffe, the British newspaperman who subsidized the American press in an effort to drag us into war, and who made them believe that the Kaiser was about to invade America. I have heard men on this floor apologize for their action in voting for war and say they would never again, as long as they lived, if they were Members of Congress, vote for war except it should be a war of invasion by a foreign foe. They know now and you know that the last war was a bankers' war—67,000 American boys were murdered to save the bankers' investments—and the next war will be a bankers' war with more investments to save. You have set up in this proposed bill, in section 3, this language, that " in the event of war or of a national emergency declared by Congress "—what does that mean? It means this, in my opinion, that if a coal strike is imminent in this country, the miners who labor down in the bowels of the earth may strike for a living wage, a wage the good God intended they should have. You can then get a bill passed in this House under a gag rule declaring that strike to be a national emergency, and the President of the United States can then draft from the unorganized militia of the Nation human beings to fight human beings. It is just possible they intend to and they are going to do that very thing. This bill is loaded with dynamite. It destroys human rights. It protects property rights. The committee has labored sincerely, but they have been misguided. A measure of this kind, I submit in all sincerity, should be preceded by a tax measure to tax the excess profits of war.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. Under the bill as it reads now, the President would not even have to bring out the militia. He would make those miners members of the United States Army.

Mr. SWEENEY. Draft them en masse; yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the gentleman's fears are justifiable—remote, but nevertheless justifiable. I think that that language will be stricken out, however, because we adopted an amendment to section 1 which goes right through the entire bill, that where any language gives authority outside of an actual war itself, it will and should be eliminated. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. SWEENEY. That may be so, but until such time as this Congress adopts the Nye bill to tax the profits of war or some similar bill to destroy the private munition trust and give the Government absolute control over the manufacture of the munitions of war, I for one will not support this bill.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. I yield.

Mr. MONAGHAN. I read from a prominent newspaper in Washington, which states:

> It was said on good authority that the President has expressed preference for the Nye measure.

Does the gentleman know that that is correct?

Mr. SWEENEY. I do not know. I hope it is correct. I do know the Nye measure ought to precede this sort of legislation.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Would not a vote for this bill as it now stands, with section 3 in there, be a vote for human conscription and not for the conscription of wealth?

Mr. SWEENEY. Absolutely. The gentleman is right.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. If this bill is sent back to the committee by adopting the amendment which the gentleman has offered, we could then bring in a bill from the committee and give it ample consideration?

Mr. SWEENEY. That is just the way to do it, and that is the reason why I made the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY] has expired.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I think we might as well meet that issue right now, and let the American people know once and for all whether upon the first occasion this proposal came before Congress from the only committee which was authorized to bring it in, a bill dealing with all the subject matter over which that committee had jurisdiction—whether or not this Congress now proposes to turn the bill back and thus frustrate all the hopes and all the prayers of those who throughout these years have been demanding and insisting that this thing be done. So insistent was the demand that in 1924 both of the major political parties of this Nation put into their platforms the proposal that legislation of this sort should be enacted into law. Through all these years we have been struggling trying to get this matter up on the floor; and now because a very few do not like some of the provisions, even though all seem to agree that the object is good, and because it is impossible under the rules of this House that the entire subject matter be covered in this bill at this time, it is proposed to frustrate the hopes and the prayers of the American people. I submit that upon a record vote on the question it would be very difficult for any man to go home and ever explain to his people that he was not willing to let consideration of this measure continue before the House, that he was not willing to let the effort to perfect it continue, that he was not willing to vote down the motion to strike out the enacting clause, that he wanted to kill it before the House could perfect it.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield, although I have not interrupted anybody myself.

Mr. SWEENEY. I know the gentleman always wants to be fair. Does he not think the proper kind of bill to bring in here is one that drafts capital as well as labor?

Mr. McSWAIN. We have not reached that issue yet; the gentleman wished to kill the whole proposition.

Mr. SWEENEY. And bring in a good one.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman has been in the House some time, and he has not offered any good bill on this subject, it seems.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Is the gentleman in favor of the Nye bill?

Mr. McSWAIN. I am in favor of its purposes; it is very comprehensive.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Will it not do more than this bill?

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman is entitled to his opinion about that.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Certainly it will accomplish more than this bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. Let us understand each other. Why get disturbed and distressed about this? This is an effort to do a right thing. We have asked this Congress to pass upon it; we are now adopting amendments that in the opinion of the majority of this House will assist in perfecting this bill. I have not opposed the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri. Several perfecting amendments have been offered here that I have not opposed, and I will not oppose some others that I know will be offered.

I want the Members to stay here and fight this thing on its merits and let the majority of this House decide what ought to be done; that is the democratic way; that is the fair way; yet some want to render judgment here on newspaper reports about what is going on elsewhere.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman from Texas at this stage. This is a highly preferential motion.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. O'MALLEY and Mr. CONNERY) there were—ayes 42, noes 76.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this measure has been heralded throughout the country as a bill to take profits out of war. There is grave difference of opinion as to whether the bill as written will do that. But, certainly there can be no dispute as to what else the bill will do. It most assuredly provides for a lottery—a lottery of human lives. The power is given in advance to the President to carry it out. Why this authority should be given now is beyond my understanding. Congress is better able to legislate with knowledge of what lies ahead and a blanket power to conscript troops should not now be granted. The provision has nothing to do with taking profits out of war. It is not a war preventative. It is unwise.

The learned gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL] yesterday in debate said that the intent and purpose of section 3 was to write into the law what Congress provided in the Selective Service Act of the World War. That law authorized the raising of troops by draft, subject to such rules and regulations as the President might prescribe. The drawing of the troops was by lottery. The method consisted in having a single set of numbers beginning at one and including the highest serial number reached in the largest local board area; in placing the small pieces of paper with these printed numbers inside a gelatin capsule; in putting the numbers in a huge glass bowl and afterward drawing them from the bowl at random by a person who was blindfolded. The drawing was held in the Senate Office Building. There were three of these drawings. Those who drew the first of the numbers included the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, and other prominent officials and men. If your number was pulled out you went to war; if not, you stayed home.

It seems a serious mistake for Congress at this time to consider any such kind of lottery. There is plenty of time to conscript our boys; that is the easiest thing we can do; far easier than taking the profits out of war. We have patriots in this country still; we have boys, plenty of them, who would volunteer, if need be, to defend our country; but if we are to draft, the time to draft troops for our Army is when real peril comes. If we must have a lottery, let us not now deal in terms of human lives. Rather let us look to a national lottery to relieve the distress caused by the last war. We have appropriated staggering sums of money of late and today authorized an additional expenditure of $5,000,000,000 for work relief. Should we not rather give consideration to a lottery of efficacy and through it raise funds to meet the gigantic obligations we have incurred and are incurring? How are we going to meet our bills? That question was asked yesterday in the Senate. The huge national debt is mounting and piling. Instead of providing for a lottery of human lives to be held in the future, I ask you of this body to be sensible and to establish something that will prove of real benefit to our country—something that is not new; something that is as old as our Government itself; something that is recognized as the aristocrat of emergency measures by practically every nation of the world, including every form of government—a governmental-authorized and governmental-operated lottery to raise not men but money, which is really needed. We had the lottery and used it in the Revolutionary War. We used it to pay the bill for the meeting of the First Congress. The Congress has heretofore authorized the lottery to provide moneys not available from ordinary sources. It is not new. It has been a lifesaver for us on many occasions. If we are to have a lottery, let it be a lottery for revenue.

Mr. Chairman, when we get to section 3 and the provisions of that section are read, it is urged that all Members who are in favor of a lottery get up and vote down the provision for the lottery of human lives, and by so doing you will register your conviction that if we are to provide for a lottery at this time it will not deal with precious lives but will be confined to wrestling with our economic money troubles. By our votes they shall know us!

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEE of Oklahoma: Following section 2, page 2, line 8, add the following: "Subsection (b): Furthermore, the President is authorized to close all stock and commodity exchanges in the United States of America if in his sole discretion it becomes desirable in order to curb speculation."

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to complete the job of controlling prices which has begun here. One of the things that contributed more than nearly any other thing to high prices was the skyrocketing of the stock market and the commodity market, creating high prices and making for uncontrolled speculation. Since we are controlling everything else in the first part of this bill, I see no reason why we should not go all the way and give the President, in his discretion, power to control these commodity and stock markets during the time of war. In other words, I have a feeling that everything in the United States ought to center toward one purpose, and that is to win the war.

In answer to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] with reference to conscripting anyone, may I say the only way to have a democratic service in the Army is through conscription; otherwise your most patriotic youths will volunteer, and you penalize them by placing them in the greatest danger. The way to have the rich man's son serve with the poor man's son, the way to have the high and low serve alike, is by universal conscription. I will not vote to support this bill if it carries with it human conscription only and does not commandeer the financial resources of the Nation and also conscript the leaders of industry, transportation, and commerce.

Mr. Chairman, my purpose is to draft a law here that will control everything quickly. Certainly it will be a dictatorship, but you cannot have a war without a dictatorship. But it will make the law more effective, and therefore our enemies will be much slower to declare war against us. I am offering this particular amendment because I think it will go the rest of the way toward controlling prices.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman not know that during the World War the exact procedure he refers to was followed with respect to the Chicago Grain Market? Wheat was selling for $3.21 a bushel on the Chicago Board of Trade and they fixed the price at $2.12. They fixed the price of corn at $1.28. They thereby robbed the American farmer of several billion dollars.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I did not know that.

Mr. TRUAX. That is true.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I know it would have been a better situation had the President been given this power and closed down the markets before that situation existed.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Will the gentleman please inform the House upon what principles he determines what is democratic and what is not democratic? What is the test as to whether a thing is democratic or not?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. That is a rather difficult question to answer.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Well, the gentleman made the statement. If he does not know the distinction, why talk about it?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Everybody knows what "democratic" means.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. No; everybody does not know and I doubt if the gentleman knows.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman tell me?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. No. I am asking the gentleman.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Then it is a draw.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. No; it is not a draw.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Nearly everybody knows what "democratic" means.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. I should like to know what the gentleman means.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. It means that every person shall take their fair share and shoulder their burden alike in time of war.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HOEPPEL. "Democratic" means to promise the people you will keep them out of war, then when elected you put them in a foreign war.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I have conferred with the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN], with reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE]. The purpose of the amendment seems good and seems to be in line with the objects of the bill. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I shall not insist on the point of order, and may I say that the committee has no objection to the amendment. I withdraw my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama withdraws his point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That in the event of war, or of a national emergency declared by Congress to exist, which in the judgment of the President demands the immediate increase of the Military Establishment, the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to draft into the service of the United States such members of the unorganized militia between the ages of 21 and 31 as he may deem necessary, subject to such conditions, exemptions, rules, and regulations as the President may prescribe and publicly proclaim. Likewise, during such time of war or national emergency declared by Congress, the President shall have power to determine and publicly proclaim from time to time the material resources, industrial organizations, and public services over which Government control shall then be necessary, and to commandeer same for use by the Government, and such control and commandeering shall be exercised by him through agencies then existing or which he may then create for such purposes.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FADDIS: On page 2, line 14, after the word "States", insert "for the armed forces of the United States"; and on page 3, line 2, after the word "purposes", change the period to a colon and add "Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed as conscription of those employed in industry."

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, it was not the intention of the Committee on Military Affairs, in drafting this piece of legislation, that labor should ever be conscripted, because we realize that it is both unnecessary and undesirable. There was not a man upon the Committee on Military Affairs, when this legislation was being drafted, who had not a thorough understanding that there should be no attempt in this bill to conscript labor.

With respect to the words "the unorganized militia", this phrase has a well-understood meaning. The unorganized militia of the United States is composed of all its able-bodied male citizens, or all of those able-bodied men who have declared their intention to become citizens, between the ages of 18 and 45, and in drafting this legislation the committee limited the draft of the members of the unorganized militia to the ages of 21 and 31 in order to conform with the provisions of the Selective Draft Act of the World War.

There was no intention that labor should ever be conscripted for anything except for the armed forces of the United States, and in order to clarify the matter and satisfy those who have objected to this section upon this ground, as a member of the committee, I have offered this amendment, which I hope the committee will accept.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Will the gentleman make it a little clearer as to the extent his amendment limits or restricts the right of the Government to conscript or draft for military services all able-bodied men between the ages of 21 and 31 as written in the bill?

Mr. FADDIS. Section 3 of the bill states that in the event of war or of a national emergency declared by Congress to exist, which in the judgment of the President demands the immediate increase of the Military Establishment, and so forth. Does this answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. ROBERTSON. No; I thought the gentleman had an amendment that restricted the draft to the Organized Militia.

Mr. FADDIS. The Organized Militia is organized today and does not have to be drafted.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Under the National Defense Act.

Mr. FADDIS. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Then will the gentleman answer this question? I assume that all Members of the House want to promote peace and want to take the profit out of war——

Mr. FADDIS. Very true.

Mr. ROBERTSON. To what extent does this new provision to draft the man power of the Nation for military service promote peace and to what extent is it a necessary part of this proposed legislation?

Mr. FADDIS. I will answer the gentleman in this way. Although opinions may be divided upon the question, it is generally accepted that a nation that is prepared for war is not as apt to get into war as a nation that is totally unprepared. Our history will bear this out. We have gone into many wars and we have been unprepared for all of them.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Was not Germany pretty well prepared in 1914, and did that keep her out of war?

Mr. FADDIS. That is not comparable at all with our situation.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman stated that history would bear out his statement, and I am giving an example where history does not bear out his statement.

Mr. FADDIS. We are not an imperialistic Nation looking to conquering the world, as was Germany in 1914.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Would it not be better now, in peace time, when we can act deliberately and coolly, to prepare this program rather than to wait until we are actually in war and hysteria is upon us and then try to put through a draft bill under lash and spur?

Mr. FADDIS. That is exactly the opinion of the committee, and was the theory under which the committee was working all the time.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAVERICK. The gentleman's amendment is supposed to be for conscription only into the Military Establishment or the armed forces?

Mr. FADDIS. Exactly.

Mr. MAVERICK. If they were to conscript various and sundry persons and then tell them to do certain kinds of labor, like plastering or painting or carpentering or shipbuilding, could they disobey such an order?

Mr. FADDIS. The amendment states "for the armed forces of the United States."

Mr. MAVERICK. I understand that; but they have soldier labor right now in the Army.

Mr. FADDIS. We are not discussing that question.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the purpose, but I wish my friend would change his amendment. The way it reads now the President is authorized to draft into the service of the United States, and so forth, and then after the word "States" you say "for the armed forces", but you are drafting him into the service of the United States, which does not mean the military service, but the "service." There is an ambiguity there, and I wish the gentleman would change his amendment by striking out the word "service" so that the amendment will read "authorized to draft into the armed forces of the United States." Under the gentleman's amendment he would be authorized to draft into the "service" of the United States "for the armed forces", which is a different proposition.

Transposition of these words is important, because the words "service of the United States" do not mean the armed forces, and I wish the gentleman would change his amendment so as to read "authorized to draft into the armed forces of the United States" such members, and so forth.

Mr. FADDIS. Very well; I shall accept that change.

Mr. CONNERY. With the rest of the amendment I am fully in accord, of course, because it forbids the conscription of labor in industry.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment to conform with the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman's amendment will not accomplish what he seeks to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 13, strike out the word "service" and insert in lieu thereof the words "armed forces."

On page 3, line 2, after the word "purposes", change the period to a colon and add: "Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed as conscription of those employed in industry."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I have great respect for the gentleman from Massachusetts and his interest in labor. The gentleman will find that if he amends the bill a hundred times the only way to do what he seeks to accomplish is just what you would do to a mad dog—kill it. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. The gentleman's amendment says that nothing in this section shall be construed as conscription of those employed in industry. Would not the superintendent of a factory be employed in industry?

Mr. CONNERY. I suppose so.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Then why should he be exempt?

Mr. CONNERY. I suppose you could conscript the employer or the superintendent, but they do not do that. The only one they conscript is the man at the bench.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. The amendment will keep us from conscripting the superintendent or the manager of a factory.

Mr. CONNERY. No; it acts just the other way. It will allow the conscription of the superintendent.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Why should not labor be conscripted the same as other people?

Mr. CONNERY. Labor is always conscripted into the Army—99 percent of the conscripts are laboring men. This is to stop them from wholesale conscription in industry.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. They could go into the Army from industry the same as from anything else.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, we are coming now to the most important part of this legislation, and we may as well recognize it. If you adopt this amendment you might as well strike out the enacting clause of the bill as far as effectiveness in getting ready for war is concerned. If we are going to get ready for war we need every resource at our command to successfully carry on the war. If we are going to exempt labor you might as well exempt capital; if we are going to say to any particular group, "We will let you alone"; if we are going to take the young men of this country and pay them $1 a day and leave those not in a particular group or class at home to profiteer, then you are not shooting square, and you are not writing correct legislation, in my opinion. Why should anybody be exempted from the proposition? If we are going to have war we may as well get ready for war; and we need all of the resources of the country, labor as well as capital, at the disposal of the Commander in Chief.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. If the gentleman will offer an amendment that no man, woman, or child in the United States shall get more than a dollar a day during a war I shall go along with him.

Mr. McFARLANE. That or something similar is the kind of an amendment we are going to have to write. Let us put these amendments in there. This bill is not properly drawn. You cannot amend this bill under the way in which it is drawn and shoot square with all the people. This is a profiteers' bill, with all due respect. It limits the ceiling of prices; but, taken at a time when those prices are high, it will make the profit all the more, as I pointed out to you on yesterday. If you adopt this amendment you exempt labor, and that is not right. In the last war we had boys working in the shipyards and in the manufacturing plants at $10 and $20 a day, while we in the service were serving at $1 a day. In spite of the good wages paid during the war, we found thousands of strikes and labor difficulties, most of them affecting industries engaged in the manufacture of war materials. According to Mr. Burton J. Hendrick, in Collier's for January 12, 1918, in the last half of 1918 there were 33 strikes or labor difficulties among men who built our Army cantonments. Similar troubles delayed construction at our great aviation fields, at our Federal arsenals, at naval hospitals, and at our navy yards. Construction of submarines were delayed many months because of strikes; longshoremen quit work at New York and New Orleans while ships were being loaded for our soldiers in France. Strikes in shipyards kept idle more than 25,000 men in San Francisco, 25,000 in Seattle, 4,000 in Portland, Oreg., 35,000 in and around New York, 12,000 in Norfolk, and 9,500 in Washington, D. C. More than 4,000 lumbermen in Oregon and Washington, producing lumber for our wooden ships and airplanes, quit work. More than 25,000 copper miners in Arizona, California, and Montana went on strike; 128,000 coal miners in the Middle West struck; 7,000 workers making khaki for soldiers struck; 25,000 making soldiers' shoes struck. Over 10,000 packers in Omaha and Kansas City, preparing meat for the soldiers, struck. The laborers in Peoria, Ill., making military tanks and "caterpillars", struck, and so on throughout the complete line of industries.

Mr. Hendricks, further states:

Riveters and fitters who are earning $90 or $100 per week are scarcely the exceptions. With an enormous demand for labor and a great scarcity, these men have simply taken advantage of a business opportunity.

In England during the last war they passed a law declaring strikes illegal and punishing with life imprisonment anyone who incited strikes. The same law limited the profits of manufacturers to one-fifth more than the average of the 2 years preceding the war.

I hope that under the brief discussion and consideration we have given here that we will not adopt an amendment that will weaken this piece of legislation. If we are going to have legislation on this subject, let us have it based on sound grounds and based on the proposition of being fair, and putting all the resources at the command of the Government. We do not want any exemptions.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes.

Mr. WOOD. Does not the gentleman know that during the war, in spite of all claims that labor had drawn fabulous wages, labor was not able to keep pace with the rise in the cost of living, and that labor did not profiteer during the war.

Mr. McFARLANE. I know, and we all know that labor profiteered as everybody else profiteered, and I am just as good a friend of labor as is the gentleman. They did not profiteer any more than they had a right to. They got by with it, as did the capitalist profiteers. But this bill is to see that everybody shoots square, both capital and labor. Let us adopt proper tax amendments along with other proper limitations, and that will do more to stop war than anything we can do. It is not right just because a man be left at home and just because he is over or under the draft age or through some kind of exemption or because he hides behind somebody's petticoat that he should be allowed to draw these unreasonable and fabulous wages.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. As I understand the gentleman, he is not satisfied with this bill because he cannot adopt within the four corners of the bill the so-called "Flynn plan" of taxing profits and paying for the war as you go.

Mr. McFARLANE. That is the proposition. You cannot write this bill as it now appears before us so that it will cover the subject. It just covers a part of the subject. It is a conscription bill for man power, but it does not touch the capitalists.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to see if we cannot get some understanding about the time on this section. I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the pending amendment. I have heard much about profiteering during the war, and especially profiteering of labor. I have analyzed this bill as best I could for the past 2 or 3 weeks. I cannot see where the bill can be amended in any way so that it will eliminate the dangers lurking within it, but we will have to do the best we can in case it should pass. Labor and industry were not conscripted during the war by the enactment of law, but I well remember that during the World War the Government sent out so-called "mediators", clothed with the title of major, dressed in the uniform of the Army of the United States. They were sent out from the War Department to mediate disturbances and controversies between employer and employee. I know scores of cases where they came into a community where there was a labor controversy in progress. They did not come there to mediate but they came there to intimidate the workers through veiled threats to go back to work, and they did go back to work on many occasions by the thousands, because a uniformed major came into the community and the workers believed they were clothed with unlimited authority from the War Department.

There was no legislation upon the statute books to conscript labor, but they were in large degree conscripted during the World War. I fear any legislation that will in any way mention the word "conscription" with respect to those engaged in industry. I certainly am in favor of this amendment. We forget to realize that the young men who went to war had sisters and brothers and parents who were back in this country endeavoring to do their part to win the war and to gain a livelihood. The very brothers and sisters of those boys who went across were unable, even in the organized trades, to keep pace with the rise in the cost of living. They could not keep pace with the profiteers of industry. So when the war closed the only benefits that labor ever got out of it, both organized and unorganized, was the privilege of steady employment; and they have paid for that, not only during the war but a thousand times over since, and are yet paying for it. If it were not for the World War we would not have had the great depression which spread over this land since 1929. So we should be careful not to subscribe to a policy that will conscript the young men of this country to do the fighting, and then so surround their brothers and sisters and their parents, who are the wage earners back home, with restrictions and conscriptive laws that will render them unable to take care of themselves and look after their own interests.

This bill does not stop profiteering in industry. The only thing I can see that the bill really does mean is to guarantee profits to industry during the war and to conscript all others.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WOOD] has expired.

Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHORT: On page 2, lines 9 and 10, after the word "war", strike out "or of a national emergency declared by Congress to exist."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I thought that all that was stricken out was the words "or of a national emergency." I believe that is all that should be stricken out at that point. If you strike out "declared by Congress to exist", you are doing something which I do not believe that you want to do—leaving Congress out of the picture. You and I want war to be declared by Congress and nobody else.

Mr. SHORT. Of course, that is stated in the first section of the bill.

Mr. CONNERY. But if the gentleman will strike out the words "or of a national emergency", that will make it positively clear.

Mr. SHORT. That will be satisfactory. I accept the modification.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment so as to read:

Strike out "or of a national emergency."

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment offered by Mr. SHORT: On page 2, lines 9 and 10, after the word "war", strike out "or of a national emergency."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHORT: On page 2, line 18, after the word "war", strike out "or national emergency."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH: On page 2, strike out all of section 3, beginning in line 9, down to and including the word "proclaim" in line 17.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH: After the word "proclaim" on page 2, line 17, strike out the period, insert a comma and the following: "Provided, That no member of the militia drafted into the armed forces of the United States under the provisions of this section shall while a member of such armed forces be permitted to serve on foreign soil."

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the drafting of the unorganized militia for the purpose of defending our frontiers, or for the purpose of defending our country or any of our possessions. I do have very strong convictions, however, against the conscription of our men to serve on foreign soil. If this bill really is intended as a bill to prevent war, as we have heard some gentleman state, then, it seems to me, it would be well for us here and now to write into this bill a provision that will make it known to the entire world that we have no intention whatsoever of conscripting our man power for the purpose of fighting foreign wars. [Applause.]

I believe the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] will agree with me that it is desirable that we retain provisions to draft the unorganized militia to defend our own country; and I agree with him that we should not conscript our man power to serve on foreign soil. I believe with all my heart that if this amendment were written into the fundamental, basic law of the land, it would do more than any other one thing to keep us out of war, because other countries then would know that we intend to defend ourselves but do not propose to enter into any war of aggression.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the thought expressed in the gentleman's amendment, except I can foresee something of this sort: Suppose a certain Pacific nation decided to go to war with the United States, it would be necessary to land American soldiers in the Philippines.

Mr. BOILEAU. My amendment states specifically "foreign soil." I do not consider the Philippines foreign soil. In my original draft of the amendment I had included also "hostile waters", but I realize that we must defend our Territories and possessions.

Mr. CONNERY. Suppose it became necessary to defend our Pacific coast, and I am using the word "defend" now in the sense that war actually has been declared against us, under the gentleman's amendment we could not take men over to a certain nation in the Pacific to attack them.

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not believe there is any justification whatsoever for our engaging in a war of aggression; and I cannot conceive of its being necessary to go to foreign soil in order to fight a defensive war.

Mr. CONNERY. Sometimes it is.

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not believe it is necessary under any circumstances.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. Would the gentleman be willing to accept an amendment to his substitute as follows, to add immediately following the word "soil": "only to prevent, repel, or quell actual invasion of the United States of America."

Mr. BOILEAU. The thought behind the gentleman's amendment appeals to me. I do not think it is necessary, however.

Mr. TRUAX. I think it is.

Mr. BOILEAU. I cannot see why it is necessary for us to go to any foreign country to stop them from attacking us.

Mr. TRUAX. It might be very necessary.

Mr. BOILEAU. Our frontier, it seems to me, is the place where defense takes place.

Mr. TRUAX. It may be too late.

Mr. BOILEAU. I cannot conceive any nation coming here and fighting a war in which we are on the defensive unless the fighting is on our frontiers. As I said before, the thought behind the gentleman's amendment appeals to me, but I do not think I can accept it in its present form.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment just offered.

The CHAIRMAN. That would not be in order at this time.

Does the gentleman from Alabama care to press his point of order?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I do not insist on the point of order. It seems to me the gentleman's amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment clearly germane, not as a substitute but as a perfecting amendment, if the gentleman wishes to make it a perfecting amendment.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer my amendment as a perfecting amendment.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONNERY. Is it in order at this time to move to strike out the last word?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not; there are two amendments pending.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment I just requested the gentleman from Wisconsin to accept to his amendment is positively vital. Conditions might arise whereby it would be necessary for the United States of America to send troops out of the country to prevent or suppress invasion.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. I believe, perhaps, the gentleman's amendment would not be opposed absolutely to the spirit of my amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by including the provisions of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX's] amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment proposed by Mr. BOILEAU: On page 2, line 17, after the word "proclaim", strike out the period and insert a comma and the following: "Provided, That no member of the militia drafted into the armed forces of the United States under the provisions of this section shall, while a member of such armed forces, be permitted to serve on foreign soil only to prevent, repel, or quell actual invasion of the United States of America."

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, it will be noticed in this amendment I used the words "to prevent, repel, or quell", and I did that for a purpose. We might face certain conditions whereby it would be absolutely necessary for this country to go, for instance, to Mexico, Canada, Cuba, or other foreign soil to repel or prevent a threatened and possibly known invasion of our country. I think we are all agreed that none of us want to draft the young man power of this country to fight a foreign war on foreign soil for foreign interests.

The chairman of the committee has expressed the hope that war is a long ways ahead; yet to read this bill and to hear this debate you might well infer and imply that war is not a long ways ahead; that it may be imminent; that it may be upon us. When we read the press of the country and note that Germany has an air force today equal to that of Great Britain, and when we know of the preparations that are being made by Japan, by Russia, and by France, are we then going to emulate that legendary figure of history, Rip Van Winkle, and peacefully snooze along for 20 years, because it is nearly 20 years since that devastating World War occurred. We go peacefully along like ostriches with their heads in the sand, unaware of what is going on, unmindful of what may happen in the future. I am not one who is willing to accept and swallow this bill whole simply because we cannot get the Ways and Means Committee to bring out a bill that we want.

The original amendment which I prepared to offer reads as follows:

Provided, That such members of the unorganized militia drafted into the service of the United States shall not serve on foreign soils, only to prevent, repel, or quell actual invasion of the United States of America.

This amendment is self-explanatory and has the same intent and purpose as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU], and I am grateful to the gentleman from Wisconsin for his courtesy in agreeing to accept the latter portion of my amendment as an amendment to his amendment.

As has been said many times during the debate on H. R. 5529, a bill to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war and thus provide for the national defense and promote peace, the mechanics by which the end sought is to be accomplished is somewhat vague, the title of the bill is somewhat misleading, and the ideals envisioned by the distinguished Chairman and members of the Committee on Military Affairs are not guaranteed by the provisions of the bill. There is, however, a positive guarantee of the conscription of the man power of the Nation not only in time of war but in "the existence of an emergency due to the imminence of war." Even in the existence "of a national emergency" declared by Congress to exist, which, in the judgment of the President, demands the immediate increase of the Military Establishment, this legislation authorizes the President to draft and conscript men. The bill as written not only has power to authorize, to conscript men, to defend our country but to press them into service on foreign soils for wars of conquest or aggression, for wars waged for the benefit of the rich, brought about by the rich, and for the further enrichment of the rich. This bill does not even exempt from this proposed draft young women, because the bill plainly states that "such members of the unorganized militia between the ages of 21 and 31 shall be drafted." Pass this bill as written and your President will have the authority to conscript women and send them into the Army, as is now done in Russia. My amendment will prevent all this.

This bill as originally written is grossly unfair and unjust, since it does not define in any such positive terms nor in such clear language the authority and powers of the President to conscript wealth. For years I have advocated and fought for the universal draft to protect our country from invasion by foreign foes. Those principles of the universal draft must always, to be fair and just, include the conscription of all resources, including not only the resources of man power but also the resources of materials and the unbounded resources of centralized and concentrated wealth.

Is anyone so optimistic as to believe that these huge financial resources of the money kings, the plutocratic war gods, and the tax-dodging millionaires of the Morgan and the Mellon type can be effectively conscripted by the ineffectual and equivocating provisions of the legislation we are now considering? Does anyone think that you can take the profits out of war and a series of Executive orders, notwithstanding the nobleness of purpose and humanitarian spirit of any President you may have in power, will be sufficient to counteract and halt the lust and greed of those piratical war gods, the du Ponts, the Schwabs, and the Fords? If anyone so believes, he has more faith and confidence in the changeability of human nature than have I. It has been well said that the only manner in which profits can be taken out is to tax them out. Do not pass this bill in the fond, and perhaps mistaken, hope that following its enactment you will be given an opportunity to vote for a bill that possesses teeth, claws, hooks, and fangs—namely, a bill that will levy a surtax of 95 percent on all net incomes of $10,000 and over in times of war. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on the pending section.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Is it in order to offer a substitute for the amendment as perfected by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin?

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments now pending. Do I understand the gentleman wishes to offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. No. I want to offer a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland as perfected by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin was not to perfect the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Virginia that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland was to strike out, while the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin was to add a provision to the section sought to be stricken out by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. When the pending amendments are disposed of, will it then be in order to offer a substitute amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McSWAIN and Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH rose.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, it is now 5 o'clock. I am satisfied that the Members are very tired. I therefore move that the Committee do now rise.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Has the amendment been disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland is pending and will be the unfinished business tomorrow.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONNERY. Was the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin agreed to?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I was asking for a division on that question before the Chair announced the vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moved that the Committee rise, which is a preferential motion.

The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WARREN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 5529 and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DORSEY (at the request of Mr. DALY), on account of death in family.

To Mr. LANHAM (at the request of Mr. JONES), for 2 days, on account of illness.

To Mrs. NORTON (at the request of Mr. KENNEY), for 10 days, on account of illness.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 619. An act to amend section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920;

S. 857. An act to authorize the Department of Labor to continue to make special statistical studies upon payment of the cost thereof, and for other purposes;

S. 1068. An act to establish a commission for the settlement of the special claims comprehended within the terms of the convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States concluded April 24, 1934; and

S. 1605. An act authorizing the President to present Distinguished Flying Crosses to Air Marshal Italo Balbo and Gen. Aldo Pellegrini, of the Royal Italian Air Force.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Saturday, April 6, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, APRIL 6, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Remind us, Father of all mercies, that the supreme end of man is to realize the kingdom of righteousness in his breast and to glorify Thee forever. It yields the secret of blessedness, the poetry of life, the flower of the soul, and the music of heaven. With increasing zeal and faith may we build it into our characters, using the precious stones of spiritual truth, godly virtue, and manifold charity and sacrifice. As we wait, open our minds to the rule of conduct which is, "Do right"; it is universal and perpetual in its obligation. It is Thy unchanging law in a changing world; we pray that our hearts may breathe this word. Herein is the highest virtue, the sweetness of serene faith, the hope that triumphs over adversity, and the bow that spans the storm. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 117) entitled "Joint resolution making appropriations for relief purposes."

CLAIMANTS WHO SUFFERED LOSS FROM FIRES SET BY GOVERNMENT-OPERATED RAILROADS IN MINNESOTA IN 1918

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in connection with the bill H. R. 3662, and to include some testimony of a witness in connection therewith.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for April 3, on page 4969, I discussed with my colleagues H. R. 3662, which is a bill for the relief of the several thousand claimants who suffered loss in the 1918 Minnesota fire, which was caused by Government-operated railroads. I quoted in the brief discussion of April 3 the testimony of the Honorable H. A. Dancer, one of the trial judges, with reference to the so-called "liberality" of the settlements.

Today I want to present some testimony at the hearings in 1930 from another witness, Mr. Frank Yetka, of Cloquet, Minn. Mr. Yetka is at the present time the insurance commissioner for the State of Minnesota, having been recently appointed. For the past 3 or 4 years he has served as county attorney for Carlton County, Minn. Mr. Yetka is a World War veteran, and when Cloquet was burned up he was in the military service. He returned home shortly after the fire, upon his discharge from the Army.

Mr. Yetka has been in Washington, in the interest of the fire-claimants bill, and I mention this fact because last year there was a lot of reference to "lobbyists" and so forth, and I want to say, frankly, if Mr. Yetka's efforts to explain the fire-claimants bill to Members of Congress who want to do the right thing amounted to lobbying, then he was my "lobbyist" in 1930.

I want to quote some of Mr. Yetka's testimony before the Committee on Claims with reference to the question as to whether or not the Railroad Administration coerced people into signing releases, and with reference to the question of the so-called "liberality" of the Railroad Administration. I am doing this because I have no way of knowing what methods the opposition will use, and I earnestly appeal to my colleagues to read this brief but pointed extract from Mr. Yetka's testimony. He says, on pages 203 and 204 of the hearings:

I also want to call attention to some of the methods that were used at the time these settlements were made. Much has been said about why we accepted those offers. I will make the statement now, before all the attorneys and all the people here who are not attorneys, that in no instance did the attorneys agree to or accept any of these offers of settlement, in spite of what Mr. Davis has said. They did not dare. The situation had gone to the point where they had already told their people, "You will either get all or nothing upon adjudication", and no one dared to assume the authority to accept these settlements. These offers were made; they were negotiated as far as we could negotiate them; and we finally had to go to our people and say, "That is all we can do." I have talked to many, many of them after some of these offers had come out, and they said, "Well, what are you going to do?" And I would have to say, "I can't tell you to take it on that basis, on the stand the Government took previously, and yet I am not in a position to tell you not to take it, because I know your circumstances. You will have to use your own judgment; do what you please." It was so disgusting to the attorneys who had taken this position originally, relying on the Government's attitude, that they could not take any definite stand, either of acceptance or rejection; and the final result was that many times meetings were held where several hundred people got together, and when they found out the attitude that the Government was taking and that it had reversed itself and that they might never get a dollar, they would say, "For God's sake, let us take what we can get."

That is the actual picture of the actual situation that existed in those areas; and the Government was not misled at the time these settlements were made, because at the time of these negotiations there was talk of appealing to Congress. When I saw that the people had to take them I filed my own claim, so as not to delay the matter. I agreed with the rest of them, if you call it an agreement, when I saw what was going on. I knew what I was doing. I have no apologies to offer. I told the Government agents at that time, "Some day we are going to go before Congress", and they knew it. And when I made that statement I was accused of being unethical, for demanding our rights from the United States Government. I told them that if it was unethical to petition Congress for redress of our grievances, then I was going to be unethical. The last settlements that were made were completed in the year 1927, and the records of the Seventieth Congress in 1928 will show that a bill then appeared for the relief that we are asking now, but it never reached the committee.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Right on that point I would like you to state just how you managed to get the people of Cloquet, who had recovered judgments on this understanding that you say was had with the Government, to be paid all if they got judgments—how you managed to get them to agree to take 50 percent.

Mr. YETKA. We did not get them to agree, Mr. CLARK. They agreed themselves. When they realized the situation, that here was a chance to get something; that if they waited they might never get a cent; that the Government positively refused to pay any of those judgments and took the stand, "You can either take what we offer you or take nothing, and, as far as the rest of them are concerned, you will have to litigate each individual case separately"; when the cost, in many instances, might be 10 times as much to try a case as the amount of the claim they had—what were those people going to do, when they had not a dollar to their name, practically, scarcely enough for their existence for a period of years? The first settlement took place 3 years after the fire, when they were still living in shacks, most of them, and they were in debt. Some of them had started building new homes, relying on the findings in the Cloquet case; they had put a part of their insurance money into their new homes. What would any man in those circumstances do? What would I do if I had a thousand dollars insurance and put it into this new home as a part payment, relying upon what had transpired previously, and then the Government came along and said, "You will either take what we give you or go without; take it or leave it"? They stood the chance of losing even that last dollar received from the insurance company. Personally, I did not start to rebuild until 1922. With most of the claimants it was a case of life and death. Those people were desperate, and unless a person was there and lived with them they could not realize how desperate their condition was.

In connection with your question, I might say this: I might state my position briefly on this. I want to summarize this as follows, divided into 1, 2, 3, and 4 points.

For instance, first: The original attitude of the Government that you would have to litigate your case and that they would either pay all or nothing, depending upon the court's adjudication, whether or not the Government was liable.

Second. The absolute refusal on the part of the Railroad Administration to pay judgments that had been entered against it.

Third. The absolute insistence, and unqualified position of the Railroad Administration after defeat that each case would have to be litigated separately.

Fourth. The dictating of their own terms on the part of the Railroad Administration as to where areas of settlement should be established and what percentages should be paid and the methods of settlement.

Fifth. The inability of the litigants to enforce their judgments.

Sixth. The misrepresentation and coercion on the part of the representatives of the Railroad Administration.

In the connection this may need a little explanation. I have referred to our first experience, that we had at the beginning of our education, in fighting the Railroad Administration, and that was in negotiating the Cloquet settlement.

I think somebody touched upon it lightly yesterday, but there was at least one attorney, I remember, that had in mind that if he got a certified copy of the judgment and brought it down to the United States Treasury, they would pay it. Where he got that idea, I do not know, but he said something to that effect. He said, "Maybe we could find some way, if we figure long enough, how we could tap the Railroad Administration"; something like that. Mr. McLaughlin smiled and said: "If you think you have found out a way whereby you can collect that judgment, you had better start figuring all over again. If you think you can figure out a method of collecting these judgments, you had better start figuring all over again."

In other words, he tried to paint us a picture there that the Railroad Administration had a certain amount of money, lots of other claims, and that they were continuing to settle and pay, and that you would have to litigate these cases separately from now on, even if you got judgments by that time.

Well, maybe we will not have the funds and you will have to go to Congress, and you know what Congress will do if we do not recommend it.

That was the import of the statement that was made.

If we do not recommend an appropriation, you know what Congress will do.

I call that misrepresentation, because it was disclosed absolutely that the Railroad Administration had sufficient funds to pay all of these claims in full and never was short of funds, as I understand from things I have learned since.

It should be noted that the Mr. McLaughlin referred to in the above testimony was at one time Director General of the Railroads. It is submitted that Mr. Yetka has set forth clearly the unfair attitude of the Railroad Administration and uncontroverted facts that show the Railroad Administration met its obligations only halfway.

THE WORLD WAR

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, it was just 18 years ago this very hour that the Congress of the United States was about to vote on a declaration of war.

Today we have under discussion a measure designed to do away with the profits in case we have another war.

I am sure I voice the sentiments of every one of my colleagues when I say that neither the Government nor the citizens of the United States want another war. The destruction of property and the spending of billions of dollars in the World War conflict is still very fresh in our memories. The sacrifice of our boys upon the battlefield is constantly before the Members of Congress in petitions for pensions and hospitalization from those who made the sacrifice. With the improved mechanisms that would be used in case of another war, the destruction of human life would be so terrific and terrible that we could only look forward to the destruction of our civilization.

As a member of the subcommittee on war appropriations, I was in hearty sympathy with strengthening our national defense. Just so long as selfishness and greed are controlling elements in our social and economic adjustments—just so long we will have to maintain a national defense that is adequate for protection against those nations that apparently are ever equipping themselves for further war.

Mr. Speaker, this day is designated as "Army Day." As we listen this very minute, we hear the martial music of the Army Band as it heads down Pennsylvania Avenue, with the various units of war equipment following. This demonstration is not a preparation for war. It is merely the training of our young men for such emergencies as may be brought about by conditions which can only be controlled through such activities. In this line of march we find the sons of the Spanish War veterans, the American Legion drum corps made up of those who were enlisted in that great struggle, the war mothers that lost their sons on the battlefield, and other similar units. The speedy pursuit planes and the terrible bombers are now in Langley Field ready to take the air in demonstration of the efficiency of our national defense.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Congress and the purpose of the people of this Nation is not to create a set-up that would provoke another war, but it has been demonstrated that this administration is constantly building a social and economic fabric that will dovetail into a world peace movement, a fabric that will bring about an adjustment in our industrial conditions that will make it possible for every man to have a position and earn an honest livelihood.

Last year we graduated from our high schools 1,017,000 young men and young women equipped to raise our institutions to a higher level of efficiency. This June we will graduate approximately 1,150,000 more young men and women from these institutions. It is not our purpose to prepare these young men and young women for war activities but to prepare them for citizenship-building and Nation-building activities.

In checking up the profits that men and companies made in creating and manufacturing war materials during the last war, it is self-evident that some measure should be adopted by which the profit could be eliminated in case of another war. If we divide the number of boys killed during the last war into the number of dollars spent to carry on the war, we find that it cost the Nation approximately $100,000 for each boy who was killed on the battlefield. That a great percent of this $100,000 that it cost to kill each boy was unearned profit seems to be apparent.

As a nation we can preserve our institutions; we can build a fabric that will make the Nation a better place in which to live; we can put our house in order by adjusting our economic and social institutions.

The passing of the $4,000,000,000 work-relief bill yesterday by the Congress of the United States is evidence of the faith we have in our institutions. It is a demonstration of the policies of the administration to put forth every effort to put men back to work. It is an example of Government procedure that the nations across the sea might well follow instead of the war expenditures that they are creating this very hour.

Mr. Speaker, we have kept faith with the better things in life; we have kept faith in our fellow men; we have kept faith in the social and spiritual institutions in our land. By so doing the United States heads all the nations of the earth in the march toward a purer, plainer, and fuller citizenship structure—a citizenship structure that we can hand down to our children and our children's children with pride.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

WAR PROFITS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5529) to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war and thus provide for the national defense and promote peace.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5529, with Mr. WARREN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose yesterday there was pending the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland upon which all debate had been closed.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Maryland rise?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. To submit a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by me stated that all of section 3 should be stricken out down to and including the word "proclaim." After offering this amendment the language of the bill was perfected by the following language:

Provided, That no member of the militia drafted into the armed forces of the United States under the provisions of this section shall, while a member of such armed forces, be permitted to serve on foreign soil only to prevent, repel, or quell actual invasion of the United States of America.

The parliamentary inquiry is whether I am now entitled to recognition for the purpose of offering an amendment which will perfect the previous amendment offered by me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to perfect his amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object until we hear the proposal.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH: Page 2, line 9, strike out all of the first sentence of section 3.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object—and I have no disposition to object—I would like to have it understood, however, that I may submit a unanimous-consent request to perfect the amendment accepted yesterday by changing the word "only" to the word "except"; in other words, strike out the word "only" and insert the word "except", which is simply for the purpose of making the language a little clearer.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I have no objection.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I think that ought to be done. The word "only" does not make the intent as clear as the word "except."

Mr. BOILEAU. If the gentleman from Maryland will withhold his request until I have asked unanimous consent to make this correction, I shall not object to his request.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I have no disposition to object to the gentleman's request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection, first, to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object to ask the purpose of the request of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The proposed amendment simply perfects the previous amendment by striking out all of the first sentence of section 3, which would include the amendatory language.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent to strike out the word "only" in the amendment that was agreed to yesterday afternoon and insert in lieu thereof the word "except."

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, am I entitled to recognition for 5 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. As soon as this request is disposed of the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maryland.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, what difference would this make?

Mr. BOILEAU. This is simply to clarify the language. It is rather cumbersome to use the word "only." This change makes no difference in the intent of the committee as expressed yesterday afternoon.

Mr. RANKIN. There is a great deal of difference between the words "only" and "except."

Mr. BOILEAU. I appreciate that; but I offered the amendment first, and then the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] offered an amendment to my amendment, and the language of the two did not fit in very well. I am sure it was the intent of the committee yesterday to use the word "except."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, all this amendment does is to strike out and eliminate that part of the bill providing for human conscription. Those of us who see no necessity whatever in time of peace for a provision providing for human conscription are in favor of the legislation with that sentence eliminated.

The bill without that sentence would have the same tendency to restrain the cupidity of those who make money out of a national emergency or national calamity, and therefore we favor it.

But our contention is, if the time ever comes, which God forbid, that it is necessary to consider the question of conscription, Congress can dispose of it then.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The bill exempts every man above 31 years of age until the young manhood of the country is exhausted?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is correct.

Mr. RANKIN. The munition manufacturers and the international bankers, all being above 31 years old, will know that their time has not come until the young manhood of the country is exhausted.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. The people of this country think that this Congress is considering legislation which will tend to prevent war, but when the mothers and the fathers of this country find out that the American Congress is writing into legislation a provision which will call into the military service every man in this country between the ages of 21 and 31, they will reach the inevitable and correct conclusion that this is not a bill to prevent war but a bill which invites war.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Ninety-nine percent of the Members of Congress who vote for that war would be exempt under this law, even if they did not exempt themselves, until the young manhood of the country was exhausted and another draft law passed.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. If there was only a sentence in this bill that would state that every man who made a speech in favor of war should be automatically drafted into the front lines it would be a good thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. McSWAIN Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. As I stated the day before yesterday, section 3 under consideration is taken from the Capper-Johnson bill, which received more endorsements from patriotic organizations than would be possible to be printed on one page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. All of the patriotic organizations that I remember were listed by Royal Johnson in connection with an address which he made on this floor in support of his measure, and I submit that that legislation would have become law, I believe, 10 or 12 years ago, except for the proposal, that permitted the drafting of labor and of human services other than for military service. As the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] and the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] have been adopted, what do we have? We have only the proposal that when Congress declares war there may be drawn into the military service young men between the ages of 21 and 31 to fight to defend what? To defend the United States. How was the United States to be defended? We have a small Regular Army, and I am in favor of a small Regular Army.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I am sorry, but I cannot yield. Those of you who have served with me here for 14 years know that I have all of the time resisted the increase in our professional standing Army. I believe in a well-trained civilian reserve Army that represents a cross section of the sentiment of the American people, and I believe in keeping the Army forces of the country subject to the strict civil authorities of the Nation, and you gentlemen know that. How is the country to be defended? This small Regular Army is a volunteer army. The National Guard is a volunteer army. The Organized Reserves are volunteers, and all these put together make up something like 350,000 officers and men. Suppose war is declared, suppose we need, as the language of the bill says, an "immediate increase in the armed forces", and for what purpose under the Faddis amendment? To defend our own land. I would like to know where is the man who would not fight, who would not die to defend America. [Applause.] You cannot tell me that human nature has changed in a hundred years.

Mr. MONAGHAN. I thought the gentleman was trying to prevent war.

Mr. McSWAIN. I am talking now about letting everybody know that America is seeking only to defend her territory, but at the same time letting them know that she is prepared to defend her territory. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I am sorry, but not now. Human nature has not changed in a hundred years. About a hundred years ago, a little more, this Capitol was ransacked and burned to the ground, and the White House and the young Federal City was destroyed. By whom? By those who were during the last war our allies. Those to whose rescue we went.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SMITH of Virginia: Page 2, line 10, after the word "exist", strike out all of the language down to and including the word "Congress" in line 19.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is designed to accomplish the same purpose as the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH]. It is merely a slight change in the language and is offered as a perfecting amendment. My reason for offering that amendment is that this bill which we are considering today has been heralded to the country as a bill to prevent war, a bill to take the profits out of war, and we find here, buried in its midst, a mere portion of a sentence which will do more, in my judgment, to promote war than anything that we could do here in this House today. [Applause.] The remainder of this bill is a beautiful gesture. I am willing to concede that it is a useful gesture, and I know that it is a sincere gesture on the part of the committee which has done so much work in its perfection.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I have only 5 minutes.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Please yield to me.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I cannot do it at this time. There may be provisions of the bill which I have described as a beautiful gesture which are all right, but when the time comes for its practical application, when you come to commandeer private property and private property rights, we all know that you run right smack into the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I cannot yield at this time. Therefore, if you find that the rest of this bill is attacked on the ground of its unconstitutionality, all you are going to have left in the last analysis is what one sentence in the bill provides, namely, conscription for every boy in this country from the ages of 21 to 31.

Now, if that is what you want, as the gentleman said, if that is what you want, tell the people of this country that is what you want. Enact a conscription bill. Advertise in the newspapers that this Congress is conscripting in time of peace the boys of this country between the ages of 21 and 31, and if we are to exclude all over that age, tell that to the country also and then listen to the furor and the protests you will hear in this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific. [Applause.]

I do not expect to influence anybody by this statement. I simply wanted it to go into the RECORD. That is all I have to say about the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] has expired.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] and to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH].

The provision in the bill which these amendments seek to strike therefrom is exactly the provision that this Congress wrote into the law after we went into the World War, that we might successfully wage and win the war. It provides the only democratic system, the one fair, equitable, and just system for raising an army necessary in the event of war, to protect our land, to prevent invasion of our soil.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I only have 5 minutes. I am sorry.

In every war in which the volunteer system has been used events have shown that system to have been wrong, to have been unfair and unjust to the citizenry of the country and dangerous, if not disastrous to the Nation that was waging the war. Gentlemen speak of the fact that this provision provides for the selective draft of young men. Of course, it provides for the selection of young men, because you cannot fight a war with old men. [Applause.] If you are going to repel invasion, if you are going to protect your homes and firesides, then you must call upon those in our land who are able to wage warfare, and they are the young, strong, virile men.

This measure is written so as to discourage any nation from making war upon us by letting that nation know that if we are forced into war we are prepared to defend ourselves and our land. It follows the advice given by George Washington when he said that our Nation should maintain a respectably defensive posture, not a posture of aggression, not a posture of offense, but such a posture of defense as would cause the nations of the world to respect us and to be fearful of engaging us in war. Had we in the past followed the wisdom of George Washington we would have been spared the humiliations and disgraces of the War of 1812. This very Capitol would never have been burned by British soldiers, to the shame of our country.

I think it is not too much to say that had we followed the wisdom of Washington we might never have been drawn into the World War, because we know that the German high staff in its careful and painstaking efforts, rated the military power of our country as negligible. Nations, like individuals, do not go to war to lose. As John Paul Jones so aptly said, "I do not count the cost of victory, but I do always count the chances of victory."

The gentleman from New York yesterday referred to the fact that Germany had been prepared to go into war. Yes; Germany was prepared, but Germany was prepared for a war of aggression. Germany put herself in no defensive posture. She prepared that she might be the aggressor and wage war for conquest. On the contrary, let us look at Switzerland.

Napoleon in his day made Switzerland a billet and a highway for his armies, and used her nationality as a pawn in his ruthless politics. Prior to the World War, however, Switzerland assumed a respectably defensive posture by reasonable democratic military preparation, and because of her defensive posture Switzerland was able during the World War to maintain her neutrality and to preserve the inviolability of her soil. We of the United States covet no territory, we seek no conquest, we envy no nation on the face of the earth. All that we ask is to work out our own destiny on our own soil under God's approving eye in peace and in cooperation and friendship with all the other nations of the earth. Under the Constitution it is the duty of the Congress to insure this right for our Nation and our people, and the best and surest way to insure it is to follow the words of Washington and maintain for our country a respectably defensive posture. It was to this end that the provision was put in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on the pending amendment.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman at this stage. There are two amendments pending.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi will send to the Clerk's desk his motion.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the motion is dilatory. That motion was voted down yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The gentleman will send forward his motion.

Mr. RANKIN. I make the motion to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANKIN moves to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the motion is not in proper form and therefore not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, believing that there has been a substantial change made in the bill since the motion to strike was made. The gentleman from Mississippi moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak for 10 minutes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, but we must make progress——

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that this bill should be brought before the House at this time, especially in its present form. It will leave the impression upon the American people and people throughout the world that we are preparing to plunge into another war.

Eighteen years ago today we took that terrible plunge into a conflict that cost the lives, all told, of 10,000,000 men, the picked flower of the world's best manhood. It left crepe on every doorknob of Europe; it wrecked the economic structure of every country under the sun; and left us burdened with a debt it will take 100 years of taxation to pay.

We are not looking for war; the American people are not expecting us to get ready to get into a war; they are expecting us to hold this country out of war. [Applause.] If you will strike out that provision that drafts the young manhood of this country but leave in the profiteer, manufacturer, the national banker, and those who got rich out of the last war and tax their profits, I will gladly vote for this bill.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. No; I cannot yield. The gentleman objected to my speaking 10 minutes, and I must decline to yield in the short time I have. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, if you want to tax the profits of war let us tax the profits of the last war [applause]; and then we will not have any next war in your day and mine. [Applause.]

I saw America plunged from the highest pedestal of moral and spiritual leadership any country has ever attained. Eighteen years ago today we went to war to make the world safe for democracy, and what has been the result; what is the result today? We drafted our young manhood, we burdened our people with debt. I saw those mothers you are fixing to punish today, the mothers of those young men from 21 to 31 years of age—I saw them turn their sorrow-stricken faces to the chairs made vacant by the old fireside and weep the tears of broken hearts. I saw those fathers who occupied the positions of those who are going to be punished under this bill, leaning on the staff of decrepitude, the emptiness of age in their faces and on their backs the burdens of the world, bowed down with grief for those sons you drafted into the service and sent across the seas to "make the world safe for democracy", democracy which now has virtually disappeared from the face of the earth. Why do you want to leave out men above 31 years of age? Oh, somebody says it takes young men to fight. I wonder if you ever read the history of the Battle of Shiloh, where men marched by the sides of their sons and some by the sides of their grandsons. Are you Congressmen too old to fight?

[Cries of "No!"]

Mr. RANKIN. This bill will exempt 99 percent of you. If you are too old to fight, you are too old to vote to send the other fellow to fight. [Applause.]

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. No; I cannot yield.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Not for a friendly observation?

Mr. RANKIN. I am not going to yield for an observation, friendly or unfriendly; and I say this with all deference to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

This amendment ought to be adopted by all means. Let us not lead the world to believe that we are getting ready for another war. The next war may destroy civilization; it will wipe out men, women, and children. Let us serve notice on the munitions manufacturers and others who got rich out of the last war that they shall not get rich out of another war. Let us tax the profiteers who grew rich out of the last war and let them understand now that they will never again reap their millions at the expense of human suffering. But let us also serve notice on the world that America is leading the way to peace and avoiding the calamities of another war. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

Mr. Chairman, before proceeding to address myself to the motion, and as further evidence of my absolute good faith, I have in my hand an amendment in the form of a new section that I propose to offer to this bill, which amendment I hope and believe will be held to be garmane, to wit: This bill having for its purpose the taking of the profits out of war, I shall offer an amendment providing that in the event of war a tax of 100 percent shall be levied upon excess war profits.

I have done this after conference with the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Senator VANDENBERG], who is now in the Hall, who says that if there is just a word in this bill with regard to the problem of taxation that it can be made the framework upon which he and his colleagues can build up the whole structure our friends argue is so important. I believe the amendment is germane.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. No; I am sorry; I have only 5 minutes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McSWAIN. No. I know the gentleman wants to ask a question, but if I yield to the gentleman I must yield to others, and that will use all my time.

Mr. O'MALLEY. What is the gentleman going to do about the sacrifice of young manhood?

Mr. McSWAIN. That is what I am going to answer. The motion before the committee is to strike out the enacting clause, because there is something in the bill somebody does not like. Let me remind you that 125,000,000 people are waiting to know first of all whether we are going to carry out the promise of the Republican Party and the Democratic Party made in 1924 to do something to take that first step toward taking the profits out of war.

I want you to believe that I am in this fight to the finish, and those of you who profess so innocently to desire this thing may trust me to lead, and I am inviting you to follow me. If I have not been working on this matter now for some 14 years, I have not been interested in anything. So, Mr. Chairman, when I am asked now to withdraw from this fight, I want to say, "No; I am going to keep my promise to my constituents. I am going to keep the promise that all Members have made to their constituents." You know and I know that no one piece of legislation is so complete and so perfect that standing alone at the very time of passage it does all the things that are desired.

I am asking you now to vote down the proposal to strike out the enacting clause. Let us go on with this proposition. Let us amend it, if you see fit, by a majority vote. I am enough of a Democrat to know that the majority must rule, but I am in favor of standing by the Capper-Johnson bill endorsed by dozens and dozens of patriotic societies and endorsed time and again by American Legion conventions.

The proposition comes down to the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], although he asked unanimous consent to withdraw his motion. Now, are we going to say that all the people who endorsed the Capper-Johnson bill all these years did not know what they were talking about? It was, of course, a peace proposition, and it was endorsed by all these patriotic societies. It said this: "We do not want war, but if we do get into a war, we not only intend to take the profits out of it but we intend to see that the war is conducted to a successful conclusion."

Mr. Chairman, nobody wants war. Nobody will fight against it more than I, but I want to tell you that the time to talk against war is when we are talking about declaring war. If you are in a war, then every man, woman, and child in the Nation must rally to bring that war to a successful conclusion. Every man is bound in time of war to fight, if necessary, and die. All cannot fight. Who will fight? Everybody knows that the younger men are the ones best fitted to carry on the conflict, and this is the age limit that was prescribed by the first draft passed by this Congress in 1917.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand a vote on my motion. The gentleman from South Carolina has convinced me that my motion should prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANKIN, Mr. O'MALLEY, and Mr. SWEENEY) there were—ayes 54, noes 107.

So the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported again?

The Clerk reported the amendment of Mr. SMITH of Virginia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Virginia, Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania, and Mr. O'MALLEY) there were—ayes 68, noes 102.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] were appointed tellers.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 69, noes 108.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH and Mr. CROSSER of Ohio) there were—ayes 64, noes 84.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] were appointed tellers.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 79, noes 91.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina needs no assurance from me as to my friendship and affection for him, but the proposition involved in the measure now before the House far transcends any personal consideration.

I remember well, 18 years ago, when this country entered the World War. I remember the assurances that were given and the maneuverings that were practiced to create the sentiment that was desired. I remember, too, that at that time, in 1917, we passed a conscription law. Those who say that in all wars in which this country has engaged the Government adopted and enforced laws for the conscription or draft of human beings are very much mistaken.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before us has been advertised from one end of the country to the other as a measure for the purpose, and the purpose only, of taking the profits out of war. What do you suppose would have happened if it had been advertised to the country that the main purpose, and I say the only purpose, of those outside of Congress, who constitute the main driving power behind this bill, is and has been to place on the statute books of the United States a law providing a permanent policy of conscription or draft of human beings and that is all about which they are concerned. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, let me tell you that if we strike out the first half of section 3 of this bill, those who chatter about taking the profit out of war will lose all interest in the measure and will be perfectly willing to have the bill thrown into the wastebasket and be done with it. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, this talk about conscripting property and this title at the head of the bill saying: "for the purpose of taking the profit out of war" are both for the purpose of making more palatable, more likable, to the people the autocratic drafting of human beings.

Just as I heard it argued for the draft 18 years ago so the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], yesterday proclaimed to us that this bill in its proposal to draft men is a democratic measure, that it sets forth the democratic plan of raising an army. My friends, the conscription of men is not democratic in the smallest degree. On the contrary, it is the very essence of autocracy.

We are told that the mechanics of democracy requires that all propositions be decided by a majority vote. There is, however, one right which, consistently with the principles of democracy, should not be submitted to the vote of the democracy and that is the right to continue as a unit of the democracy itself. To continue as a unit of the democracy one must continue to have the right to vote and of course in order to vote one must have his life. If the majority may take away a person's life or his vote upon one excuse, they can take them away upon any excuse that may occur to them. The right to continue to vote is the very foundation of democracy and without it we have no democracy.

To illustrate, suppose we have 25 people landed on an island where there are no other persons and no government. The 25 people for convenience consider the desirability of having rules of order or conduct to be observed by all the 25 in order to promote the convenience and comfort of everybody. The 25 persons therefore agree in writing to be bound by whatever the majority approves by its vote. In other words, they proceed in accordance with what they regard the principles of true democracy. If, however, the right to vote is subject to control by the vote of the majority of the 25, you can see what would happen. The next day after signing the contract to be bound by a majority rule, 13 could arrange for an election at which 12, a minority of the 25, could be disfranchised. Likewise, 7 could hold an election to disfranchise 6 of the remaining 13 and so on until 2 persons would be left contending against each other in accordance with the old notion that brute force should prevail in society.

As already stated, the life of a member of a democracy is absolutely essential to his vote and if a majority can send the minority to a place where they are practically certain to be killed, it would be a very convenient way for the majority to secure complete control of the government for persons of their particular views. If the right to continue as a unit of the democracy is guaranteed to the minority as well as the majority, then what may have been the minority opinion at one time may become the majority sentiment as a result of discussion and education. To repeat, the right to continue as a unit of a democracy regardless of any pretext whatsoever is the very essence of democracy.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] was emphatically right when he stressed the fact that this is no time to pass a draft law. If we are to pass a measure to take the profit out of war, let us confine the discussion frankly and fairly to that issue, and let us vote on that proposition alone, and I will guarantee that those who are opposing this measure today will vote for the bill, much as they doubt its efficacy. But, Mr. Chairman, let us make a straight-out issue before the American people on a single, separate bill involving the profit question if we are to raise that issue at all. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, to begin with, I may state there is nobody in the House of Representatives that is more opposed to war than I am. I have risen for the purpose of calling attention to what seems to me to be the ridiculous attitude in which the Congress may get itself before the country.

During the present session of the Congress we have practically all voted for appropriating out of the pockets of the taxpayers of this country huge sums of money to build a great national defense organization in both the Army and the Navy. We have voted funds against the taxpayer aggregating almost three-quarters of a billion dollars for this purpose, and when the Committee on Military Affairs, after weeks of hearings, comes to the House of Representatives with a bill which proposes to take the profits out of war, we find it meeting all kinds of opposition on the floor of this House.

Suppose we defeat a bill that proposes to take the profits out of war and suppose it goes to the country that we have sat here and voted upon the taxpayers of this country a burden of three-quarters of a billion dollars in taxes to prepare for war, and then, in the same session of the Congress, we have refused to pass an act, whether perfect or imperfect, that has for its sole purpose the taking of the bloody profits out of the pockets of the profiteers in time of war. We then stand before the country convicted of taking a position in favor of war and letting the profiteers go free. This is the position in which we will stand in the event you defeat this bill.

Ah, they talk about drafting the young men between the ages of 21 and 31. I have two sons today that are well within these ages. I love them as dearly as I love my own life, and if the flag of my country was hoisted and Congress should declare war and they did not volunteer, I would disown both of them and never recognize them again. [Applause.]

I believe in peace, and I believe that the surest and safest guaranty of peace is to be adequately prepared for war; and when we give notice to the profiteers and the international bankers that my friend the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] referred to this morning, that there are no more profits in war, then we will have served a great purpose and we shall have placed in the hands of the American people a weapon that will prevent war in season and out of season; but if, upon the other hand, we refuse to pass a bill to take the profits out of war, we will have said to the American people that we propose to allow the slaughter of men and the profits to go on with unrestrained activity.

Why, Mr. Chairman, I am persuaded that when we think once more about this question everybody in this House will be agreed upon one thing, and that is to take the profits out of war; and if the purpose of the bill is to do that one thing, in the nature of things it cannot be a perfect measure without fault, let us put through some kind of bill, and if it is imperfect a future Congress can correct it, if it needs correction.

We shall thus have laid the foundation and let the people know that we are working to have no more excess profits in war in this country; and if it becomes necessary to draft the young manhood, the flower of our country, they will be drafted and capital and wealth will be drafted also. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the bill as the first great step toward the much-coveted objective of world peace. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, when this measure was called up, and we were told that we would get to vote on a bill that would take all of the profits out of war, I was one of those here who was delighted. I have been anxiously waiting to vote for such a measure.

But with the Faddis amendment in this bill, exempting organized labor from its provisions, which in case of another war would allow labor, through strikes, again to hold up this Government as was done during the World War, I cannot support it.

And with the additional amendment giving organized labor special rights and exemptions which my good friend from Masschusetts [Mr. CONNERY] seeks to put in it, and which is now on the Clerk's desk and will likely pass, no profits whatever will be taken out of war, so far as all work, all manufacture of munitions, and all war supplies, and all necessary war construction are concerned.

When the country enters a war it is not merely soldiers, and cannon, and shells, and horses, and motor power we need, it is not merely money we need; we need men to labor to do necessary work and everything else that goes to make possible a successful war. We need men to labor—men to do this and to do that, just the same as we need men to fight, and if we can draft men to fight and die, why cannot we draft men to work in safety at home?

I remember in the last war these 10-percent cost-plus contracts, and the unconscionable profits connected therewith, that took huge sums out of the Public Treasury wrongfully, but we had to pay, because organized labor forced it through strike after strike until skilled labor in certain sections forced the Government to pay as high as $30 per day, when men were fighting in trenches for $30 per month.

I will support this bill heartily if you will change it and make it provide that when this country is at war, all Government employees, from the highest to the lowest, who get to stay at home in places of perfect safety, who get to stay with their loved ones, who get to work in pleasant surroundings, who are never in any danger, who get to enjoy themselves nightly at theaters and other amusements, shall draw identically the same that our soldiers draw who do the fighting and do the dying.

I am perfectly willing, during periods of war, for Congressmen to draw the same pay fighting soldiers and sailors draw. Just as much patriotism should be demanded of Congressmen as is demanded of the men we call on to give their lives. If we cannot give big pay to fighting soldiers, who constantly face death in trenches, because it would not be patriotic for them to receive it, then it ought not to be patriotic for any other Government employees to receive big pay, and in war time they all ought to be treated exactly alike.

If we will change this bill, and provide that during war all Government employees, from the highest to the lowest, shall receive exactly the same pay that the fighting men in the death trenches receive, that would indeed be a start, and a real start, toward taking the profits out of war. And then, indeed, there would be no more war. You would hear no more jingo speeches from this floor. There would be plenty of men with the sagacity of Bryan, Champ Clark, and Claude Kitchin who would not be afraid to raise their voices to save our country from the curse that came upon us, when we entered the World War, that in every way has demoralized our Republic.

The records down here in the Department show that during the last war there were more than 6,000 strikes by organized labor against the Government during the war period. Six thousand strikes, and your President called Congress together and said that unless you gave him the "work or fight" amendment, which would make men fight when they refused to work, he could not conduct the war successfully.

The House passed it. Senator Thomas, of Colorado, led it in the Senate, and it passed; then when organized labor organized its march on the Capitol against it, it was defeated. I remember how Senator Thomas was crucified in Colorado in the next election and never came back to the Senate because he had dared to be patriotic and to obey the President's orders.

In the district represented by my colleague [Mr. SOUTH], which until January 3, 1935, was in my old district, there were two splendid boys who wanted to get into the service. One donned the uniform and went to France, fighting in dangerous trenches, for $30 a month. The other brother was put in the shipyard in New Jersey as a skilled mechanic, who, following strike after strike, finally drew $30 a day as a skilled mechanic. Why should that occur? One brother drew $30 per day to work in safety while the other brother got $30 per month for fighting and dying in foreign trenches. What is there about labor, I say to my beloved friend from Massachusetts, what is all this halo about its head that makes it so sacred and holy? Is a laborer more sacred than a soldier who dies for this country? Just why is labor of more consideration than the lives of human beings. With this Faddis amendment in this bill, I will not vote for it.

I want to say that if this is a bill to take profits out of war, let us take all the profits out of war and not leave any profits in it.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman going to explain why we should place this great sacred halo around the head of the laboring man and give him greater consideration than the soldier, who is forced in trenches to die?

Mr. CONNERY. No; the laboring man wants no halo. The gentleman does not state who will take care of the wives and children of the men that work in the shipyards. The Government should do that in time of war.

Mr. BLANTON. Who is going to take care of the wives and children of the fighting soldier who dies? Let them all be treated alike. We will take care of all of them. We are going to do that by a bill that will be brought in next week. I am one of those who believe that when the next war comes—and God forbid that it shall ever come—that the country should have the things that it needs, the money that it needs, the manhood that it needs, and the workers that it needs. There is no particular sacredness about labor which makes it more important than the lives of the brave soldier boys who die. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, we have debated this section 1 hour this morning. We debated it 1 hour yesterday afternoon. I think it is time for us to take a vote. I think the minds of all Members here are pretty well made up one way or the other. I think it is due to the House that we conclude debate at this time, and I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SISSON and Mr. O'MALLEY) there were—ayes 87, noes 59.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to say it, but I have heard more jingoism and more war talk in the last 2 days than in all the rest of my life. There is too much war talk. Do you not know, from an international viewpoint, that all of this talk about conscripting the youth of this land will resound around the world? The whole world will say that we are conscripting the youth of this land in order to prepare for war. That is the attitude going out to the world. What did they say when Hitler conscripted the youth of Germany? They said he was preparing for a bloody war. That is what the people of the country will think about this, and what the people everywhere else will think about it. Somebody has said, "How are you going to go back and face your people if you vote against this bill?" Mr. Chairman, I come from the greatest military district in North or South America. I am against this bill, and I shall face my people and tell them that I voted against this bill, if I so do. If the taxation features are not in the bill it does not take the profits out of war. Why write piecemeal legislation? Let us really take the profits out of war. [Applause.]

No soldier wants war. I think our differences here are conscientious, but this does not take the profits out of war. All this bill does is to conscript human beings. Why let the war profiteers go, and conscript the youth of our land to be shot, killed, and maimed? If the profiteers know they cannot get any money they will not want any war, so the only way to do is to let them know that we are going to tax them out of it.

Somebody talks about the ridiculous attitude of voting against this bill. Where is the machinery in the bill to take the profits out of war? There is none. The only machinery that exists is to draft human beings. That is all there is in this bill. There is nothing to the bill that will be really a defense measure either. It mobilizes youth but not industry and finance. I can tell you something about drafting people. When you fight a war which is in a foreign field, when you have to send men over to Germany or any other country to be slaughtered, a draft is probably necessary, but whenever you have a war where this country is defending its own soil, you will not have to draft anybody. [Applause.] All of the big industrialists are for this bill, at least they have not said anything against it, and many are for it. But there are plenty of people who are against it. The American people would vote against it 100 percent if they knew what it means. I have presented a resolution which you can read in the RECORD tomorrow, and I ask unanimous consent to put it into the RECORD.

This resolution sets out a matter of national policy in reference to this Nation fighting only defensive wars. It is something like the resolution that Jeff McLemore from Texas presented in 1917 to stay out of belligerent areas and stay out of war; it proclaims neutrality and peace; also it clamps down an embargo on arms. It drove old Jeff to his grave. He was hounded into his grave because he presented this resolution. I have been through enough war so that I feel sure they will not put me in any grave for introducing this. I shall like to see this thing go through this House, and I am not afraid to see it put me in my grave as it did Jeff McLemore.

The resolution offered by Mr. MAVERICK is as follows:

Joint resolution

Whereas the only possible excuse for the entry by the United States into any war should be for the purpose of defending American soil: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That—

First. The Congress of the United States, on behalf of the living generation and future generations of its citizens, condemns war, and requests the President to inform all nations of this resolution, accompanying it with a message of his own writing.

Second, Should war occur anywhere in the world, this Nation shall remain neutral, maintaining an embargo on the export of the munitions of war and on any article or commodity used in the manufacture of the munitions of war, such embargo to be effective immediately upon the creation of the status of war, and to apply not only to belligerent nations but to those nations likely to reship any such munitions or articles or commodities used in the manufacture of war to any nation engaged in war or being in the status of war.

Third. The President is hereby granted the power, effective immediately, in time of war or peace, to place an embargo, or embargoes, on the munitions of war (including metals used in the manufacture of munitions) when, at his discretion, he shall determine such embargo is deemed desirable.

Fourth. That since history has taught us that commerce in hostile waters and territories during a war by a neutral nation is not only dangerous but may be a factor in leading the neutral nation entering into the conflict of war, the President is hereby requested immediately to warn, upon the declaration or the creation of the status of any war, that all Americans shall refrain from travel in hostile waters and through or in warring or belligerent nations; and to refrain from traveling on any and all ships of all powers at that time engaged in war, which ship or ships shall mount guns, whether such ship is called a merchant vessel or belligerent naval ship; warning further that if any American citizen or citizens shall travel in any of the ways here set out they shall do so at their own peril.

Fifth. That should this country ever enter into any war, it shall be only for defensive purposes, and no troops shall be transported to or upon any land which is not the soil of the United States of America.

Sixth. That the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America do jointly resolve that it is the policy of the Nation to preserve the integrity of our national sovereignty and to uphold the rights of its citizens and to defend those purposes on American soil with the arms of war if necessary; that this body and all other governmental bodies, the officials thereof, and all citizens of the United States of America shall exercise care, consideration, wisdom, and patience in avoiding such actions in financial or diplomatic relations which may tend to involve this Nation in war.

Seventh. That the policy of this Nation is and shall be peace and good will to all nations.

SEC. 2. Whoever exports any munitions of war or other articles in violation of any embargo authorized by this joint resolution shall be fined not more than $100,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

Mr. MAVERICK. The thing that ought to be done if we really want to take the profits out of war and to defend ourselves in case there is one is to vote this bill down and get a real bill that will actually draft the profits of war.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. I have offered Senator NYE's bill today, and I hope we will have speedy action upon it.

Mr. MAVERICK. And I offer this resolution here, and that is all I have to say, except that I hope we will vote against this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 20, after the word "material", insert the words "and financial."

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have just offered is self-explanatory, and will be acceptable, I think, even to the bitterest opponents of the bill itself. If we add the words "and financial" following the word "material" in line 20, we guarantee that the President can commandeer and control the financial barons of the country as well as the material resources. Certainly if the Government has the power to seize a man's farm or factory or forest, it should likewise have equal power to commandeer and control financial resources.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. Yes.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Is not that exactly one of the amendments that I placed in the gentleman's hands yesterday?

Mr. SHORT. I do not have the gentleman's amendment here.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. It is a good one, and we will put it through.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] gave me a carbon of a proposed amendment to that effect, and I assured him that, as far as I understood it, we would not oppose the proposal. I do not think there is any difficulty about it.

Mr. SHORT. I think it is a most excellent amendment, and we should give all credit to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE].

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there has been a great deal of hysterical talk around here this afternoon about this one section, section 3 of the bill. I want to submit in all sincerity to the members of this Committee that we should take into consideration the fact that this piece of legislation is backed by men who saw service in France, by the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars, men who know what war means to this Nation if it should ever come. I submit in all sincerity to the members of this Committee, Do you think men who have gone through the hellish horrors of war, men who bear upon their bodies the scars of conflict, when they ask that this country be adequately protected, that we have an adequate system of national defense, are doing this in order to perpetuate a system which will plunge this country into war? I ask the members of this Committee in all sincerity, Do you not believe that those men have seen enough of war for themselves? Do you think they ever want to see this Nation plunged into war unnecessarily, into a war that their sons shall have to fight? Those are the men who have seen the bitter experiences of war. They have seen another land laid waste by the horrors of war. They are the men who have seen ruined homes, they are the men who have seen one-seventh of the area of the fair land of France laid waste by an invading army. They are the men who are asking the American people today to provide that this Nation shall never be exposed to the horrors of war. I ask in all sincerity of the men who are fighting this piece of legislation if you are willing to disband the armed forces of this Nation, would you as willingly disband the police departments of your own cities? Would you as willingly disband the fire departments in your own cities as you would throw your Nation wide open to the invasion of a foreign foe? The day may come when the blood of thousands upon thousands of men, slaughtered because we are unprepared, will rest upon the heads of these fanatics who absolutely refuse to take into consideration the facts that are most pertinent to this legislation, who so far forget their duties as Members of Congress that they do not carry out the instructions given by the Constitution to provide for the common defense of this Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] has expired.

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, H. R. 5529, now before us, purports to be a bill to take the profits out of war. We are told that this bill is the product of long and arduous study; that it has been formulated on the basis of prolonged and extensive hearings; that it is the best that can be had at this time; that it is a starter. Now, under debate, what do we find? Instead of preventing profiteering in war time, it guarantees profits. Instead of equalizing the burdens of war, it paves the way for gross injustices. Instead of promoting peace, it is loaded with dynamite. It gives big business a full bill of rights. This bill fixes the price ceiling, but it does not touch profits. We all know that when the demand for goods is high, as it is in war time, the volume and turn-over are tremendous, thus increasing profits enormously. But no provision is made in this bill to touch these profits. They are guaranteed. Not a word is said of taxing the profits or taking the profits out of war.

The parliamentary situation is such that no tax amendment can be offered. The Committee on Military Affairs, under the rules of the House, has no jurisdiction to bring to the floor any bill that would carry or make provision for a proper taxation clause to be written into the law. We are told that this taxation provision must come through another bill. In plain words, we have here a bill that means nothing as far as taxing the profits out of war is concerned. It is a sham and a delusion. Are we so chain-bound by rules and precedents that this House cannot draft and enact a bill that means what it purports to be? Must we bow helplessly in the face of these rules and precedents when the Nation is demanding from us effective legislation to curb the scourge that is trying to destroy our civilization? Have we forgotten the lesson of the war?

We know that wars are based on greed. Their causes are commercial; and the motive for war is gain and loot. Take the profits out of war, and you remove the incentive for war. Propaganda and catch phrases should not fool us any longer. This bill is based on a catch phrase to fool us. We are offered a stone instead of a loaf of bread. What will our constituents say when we come back with this bill enacted into law? What will the mothers say when we return empty handed, or worse than that? What protection does the bill give the youth of the land?

For 16 years our people have demanded effective legislation along this line, and repeatedly we have promised such legislation. Catch phrases will not pass any longer. Our people remember how they were deceived by high-paid, organized propaganda into entering the World War—how we were told to make the world safe for democracy and how we were to go to war to end war. These words sound like hollow mockery today. We say we are a peace-loving nation, and this Congress is about to appropriate one and one-half billion dollars for preparedness in the greatest peace-time appropriation ever made. There is profit in war and we are preparing for it. The slimy hands of greed are concealed under this bill to guarantee these profits. Attempts are made to change this bill, but it is so muddled and involved that this is impossible.

Let us kill this bill and get a bill out that will be effective and carry out its intended purpose. If our rules and precedents hamstring us from doing so, let us use some common sense and change these rules so we can enact effective legislation on this matter. Let us enact a law that will pay for the future war out of the profits of that war. Let us enact a law that will equalize the burden of war. Why should the industrialist and the civilian who stay at home make any profit at all out of war when the soldier must risk his all?

I am opposed to this bill in its present form. I do not want to be a traitor to my constituents. I do not want to be a traitor to the mothers of America and the youth of our land by supporting a measure that does the opposite of what it purports to do. [Applause.]

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEE of Oklahoma: Insert at the beginning of line 16, section 3, page 2, following the word "necessary", the following: "and all persons responsible for the management, direction, and control of industry, commerce, and transportation"; and following the Boileau amendment, change the period to a colon and add: "Provided, however, That the per diem pay of such members of the unorganized militia so drafted shall be a sum not less than the daily wage of unskilled labor as of the date proclaimed for price determination, and the President is hereby authorized and directed to determine and proclaim the amount of that wage."

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I reserve points of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would conscript the managers of industry, commerce, and transportation and place them under a blanket draft. Just like men were notified to hold themselves in readiness, they would go ahead until they were notified by the Government what to do. Simply because the salesmanship of those who oppose such conscription has sold some people on the idea that it cannot be done does not prove it. Permit me to say it actually was done in a hit-and-miss fashion before. This would give the Government control over these leaders from the beginning of a war and thereby substitute system for confusion.

The other part of the amendment simply places a bottom to the pay of the soldiers, like we attempted to place a ceiling to profits. That is what the two amendments amount to.

Now, as to the conscription part of it, there is no use for us to be foolish about this. When war comes there will be conscription. [Applause.] Which is the better—for us, in a cool and deliberate fashion, to outline conscription and attach to it as much as we can to make the burden rest equally upon all, or wait until a war hysteria attacks us and then draft it under lash and spur?

As for me not knowing what to do, the gentleman spoke about me not knowing. I wonder if the gentleman ever heard a buddy's life ebb away by the blood rattle in his throat. I wonder if he heard that death cough of those stricken by gas. I wonder if he ever stood, like I stood, with a rifle firing a salute over the flag-wrapped body of a dead buddy, a swarthy young man from Colorado. Then would he tell me that I am not against war? It is because I oppose war that I am for this conscription of the managers of industry, commerce, and transportation as a practical means of preventing war. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SISSON) there were ayes 72 and noes none.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I reserved a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma. I think the amendment is in order, and now withdraw my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNERY: On page 2, line 15, after the word "and", strike out "31" and insert in lieu thereof 60.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order for the reason that it seeks to amend an existing statute, namely, section 1 of the National Defense Act, which defines the unorganized militia as males between the ages of 21 and 45.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by striking out the word "sixty" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "forty-five."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNERY: On page 2, line 21, after the word "organizations", insert the following: "other than bona fide labor organizations."

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane either to the section or to that part of the section to which it is offered. The language sought to be modified reads:

The President shall determine and publicly proclaim from time to time the material resources, industrial organizations.

The gentleman would exempt labor organizations. Industrial organizations have nothing to do with labor organizations.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; they have; that is why I am putting that in, because, if the gentleman will yield, the phrase "industrial organizations" can be interpreted as meaning labor organizations; and under this language the President could commandeer every labor organization in the United States and say, "You will do exactly what I tell you to do and at whatever wage I specify"—in industry; not in the Army, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is a limitation on industrial organizations, and, therefore, holds the amendment to be germane and overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CONNERY) there were—ayes 24, noes 79.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Virginia: On page 2, line 15, strike out the word "thirty-one" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], beginning at line 16 on page 2. The gentleman's amendment reads in part as follows:

And all persons responsible for the management, direction, and control of industry, commerce, and transportation.

I would like to modify this by striking out the word "and" before the word "transportation", inserting a comma, and, following the word "transportation", add the words "and communications."

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I agree to the modification.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: Page 2, line 15, strike out the word "thirty-one" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty-five."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to section 3?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNERY: On page 2, line 15, strike out the word "thirty-one" and insert in lieu theerof the word "fifty-nine."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair informs the gentleman from Massachusetts that the Committee already has adopted an amendment to strike out the word "thirty-one" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty-five."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I wish to introduce an amendment which adds a new section at this point. Is it proper that I introduce the amendment before the Clerk reads the next section?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may send his amendment to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAUTHOFF: On page 3, line 2, after the word "purposes" and the period, add a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. The President during such time of war declared by Congress shall draft into the military service of the United States all Members of the Congress of the United States who vote in favor of war."

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make just one observation.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already ruled on the point of order.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Am I not entitled to be heard on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Had the gentleman from Wisconsin asked to be heard on the point of order before the Chair ruled, the Chair would have heard the gentleman with great pleasure.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin may be allowed to proceed for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. GEARHART. I object.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I want only 1 minute. That is all I ask.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, the only observation I want to make is that a very distinguished Member of this House 18 years ago today, Mr. Claude Kitchin, said: "It does not take either moral or physical courage to vote for a declaration of war which somebody else will have to fight." [Applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONNERY. Does not the Chair think that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin was the best amendment offered during this entire day?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no right to express himself on that proposition.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. During the period of any war or emergency declared by Congress the President is authorized to determine, and by public proclamation announce, what classes of public service, or of dealers or of manufacturers of any article or commodity, shall be required to operate under licenses, to fix the conditions of such licenses, and to grant licenses under such conditions. After such determination and proclamation by the President it shall be unlawful for any public service, dealer, or manufacturer in such determined classes to engage in business without such license.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHORT: On page 3, line 3, after the word "war", strike out the words "or emergency."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAVERICK: On page 3, line 9, after the word "conditions", strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That this shall not apply to any newspaper, press association, or news-gathering agency."

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment so that the licensing system shall not apply to newspapers. In the last war I did not have much time to read newspapers, because I was not here. I understand that they did not print much of the truth. Some of them did print the truth and they were put in jail.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make it so that it will not be necessary for a newspaper to have a license, because that will amount to censorship of the press. I believe if we do have a war, and I do not think we are going to have one, we ought to have it so that they can tell the truth and so the freedom of the press will not be destroyed.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Would this, in the gentleman's opinion, prevent the Government from censoring newspapers during a period of war?

Mr. MAVERICK. I am afraid in war they will do anything. This is just a hope of mine, that is all.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment solely for the purpose of obtaining time to go on record as regards this bill.

Mr. Chairman, now that we have passed the vital section of this bill without changing or striking it out, I can vote against it with a clear conscience. This bill is nothing but a timid gesture made toward the American people, because they are strongly against war and war profiteering. One of the things that the lobbyists for the munition makers always do is to throw a sop to public opinion so that public opinion will quiet down and they can then continue to ply their nefarious trade and play their old game of fomenting war and making huge profits.

As has been stated before, the only purpose of this bill is to put a permanent conscription law on the statute books of the United States. That is why the war profiteers do not oppose it. I want to go home and look the mothers and fathers of my district in the face and tell them: "I will never vote for a bill conscripting your sons and sending them to death as long as the Congress does not, at one and the same time, include in that bill a provision to conscript every penny of private property and wealth in this country for service and use by the Government during war time without payment of profit."

There is only one way we can conscript the private property and wealth in this country for war use, and that is through a constitutional amendment. The courts have continually held that as the Constitution now reads you cannot take the property of individuals without due process of law, and the war profiteers know they are perfectly safe in their blood money, no matter what kind of a bill we may pass. We have the opportunity now to pass that kind of a constitutional amendment.

Mr. Chairman, 2 years ago I introduced House Joint Resolution 155, reintroducing it again this session as House Joint Resolution 13, now pending before the Judiciary Committee. It has been gathering dust up in that committee for many weeks. There has been no hearing given to it in spite of the fact that scores of American Legion, V. F. W., D. A. V. posts, and the American War Mothers, and other patriotic organizations have endorsed its principles and asked for its consideration.

Today I have placed a petition with the Clerk of the House to bring about a vote on this resolution of mine. We ought to let the people of the country pass upon this proposition of taking profits out of war. They will do it and do it quickly and effectively if we give them a chance to vote such a constitutional amendment into our American Constitution. Personally I am never going to vote, whether I am in this House a short time or a long time, to conscript human beings and send them to death in war if there is any possibility of anyone in America making one penny of profit out of the bloody sacrifice of men who serve their country in battle. I know we can go back home and look our people in the face without shame only if we vote down this bill, which conscripts young men and sends them to their death but does not do anything to conscript wealth. You will not have to worry about coming back if you defeat this bill, when it contains such a vicious betrayal of American youth as section 3, which provides the only purpose of the bill being brought up for passage. The rest of the bill is just a little sugar coating in order to put a permanent conscription law on the statute books of the United States.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman know that one of the amendments just adopted and included in section 3 states "and the financial resources"?

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman shows a good intention by his offering and successful passage of that amendment, and that is all this bill shows. The road to hades, however, is paved with those kinds of intentions. You cannot conscript financial resources, in the view of the best constitutional lawyers, without a constitutional amendment. I hope the bill, if passed, will accomplish what the gentleman is trying to do, but I do not think the courts will uphold it in the face of all their decisions relative to the last war.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. May I read an excerpt from the Supreme Court on that point?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. I have introduced a bill today which is the Nye bill introduced in the Senate, which will tax all profits and put a limit of $10,000 on the amount of salary that anyone may receive. This measure will really cover the situation.

Mr. O'MALLEY. May I ask the gentleman one question? Does he believe it is fair, democratic, or that it equalizes the burdens of war, as this bill has been advertised, to conscript men when we do not conscript wealth in the same bill? This bill does not conscript wealth at all.

Mr. McFARLANE. That is why I shall vote to commit this bill to the Ways and Means Committee so we can have a decent bill reported from that committee that will meet that situation.

Mr. O'MALLEY. And then we can go back to the people and say that we would not vote to send men to death until we had voted to conscript wealth and property during times of war if there was to be any conscription of the young men of the country. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am very strongly in favor of doing everything possible to secure peace, and I presume this is the sincere desire of every Member of this House. I am also in favor, as a means of securing or helping to secure and preserve peace, of maintaining an efficient Army and an efficient Navy for defense purposes only.

Basing my opinion of this bill upon these premises, I say to you that if this bill were passed by the Congress and became law, it would be a most terrible handicap to the Government of the United States in the event we became involved in war, which God forbid.

The gentleman from New York, my distinguished colleague, Mr. WADSWORTH, engaged in the debate upon this bill yesterday. I may say that very frequently I do not agree with Mr. WADSWORTH, but I am always compelled to admire and respect the clarity of his thought and the integrity of his intellect, and I want to ask every Member now sitting within the range of my voice, upon his judgment, before he votes upon this bill, to read in the RECORD the speech made yesterday by JIM WADSWORTH, because he pointed out that the policing necessary to enforce the price-fixing provisions of this bill, in case we became involved in a war, would involve us in a domestic war within our own borders.

Mr. Chairman, I would not give a snap of my finger whether this bill were passed by this House today or not except for two reasons, which I shall speak of in a minute. Because it is doubtful if the bill, if and when it goes over to the Senate, will ever come back here; and if it does come back, I shall be surprised if it even bears the name of the introducer. They will change the bill so that its own father would never know it.

However, I hope the House does not pass this bill, because there has been introduced and is now pending in the Senate a real bill, the Nye bill, which provides the only way of controlling profits, namely, to tax them, and the passage of this bill by the House might hinder or prevent the passage of the Nye bill. That is the first reason why I hope that the House will not pass this bill.

There is another reason why I am opposed to the passage of this bill by the House. Of course, I am opposed to the bill itself because it is a vicious and a bad bill, but it will never become a law, and you need not worry about that, because the Senate will take care of that, and so will the President. The Nye committee is opposed to the bill, and I know the President will be opposed to it, because he has said he favors the Nye bill. However, there is a greater reason why this bill should not be passed on this day, of all days, and that is because it is a rattling of the saber. It is notice to the other peoples of the world that we think there is going to be war and that we are getting ready for war. This will cause them to believe we are going into war.

I stood today in this Capitol before the busts of three great Americans, the Honorable Robert M. La Follette, the Honorable Claude Kitchin, and the Honorable Champ Clark, and I was pleased to note that a great organization, an organization not for war but for peace, had honored these men because of their stand against war. The National Council for the Prevention of War had placed at the base of the pedestal of Robert La Follette, Claude Kitchin, and Champ Clark a wreath of flowers dedicated to them because of their stand against war 18 years ago. I hope in justice to their memory that this House will defeat this swashbuckling jingoistic bill. [Applause.]

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, according to the title of this bill, there are four objectives to be accomplished by the passage of this legislation; namely, first, to prevent profiteering in time of war; second, to equalize the burdens of war, and thus to, third, provide for the national defense; fourth, promote peace; and it is apparent that those designing this legislation believe that the four must be insolubly joined.

All peace-loving Americans desire the accomplishment of these broad purposes; and especially do those veterans of the last war, who were summoned into the service of their country by the action of Congress just 18 years ago today, desire to effectually promote peace by discouraging unconscionable profits to the makers of munitions and war supplies. They believe that the winning of the war in which our country may be engaged is the business of all of its people and feel that its burdens should be shared as equitably as possible. They believe that the best means of preventing an attack by foreign powers is an adequate preparation. Having experienced the hardships and hazards of war, their burning desire is to promote peace and consequently believe that the accomplishment of the objectives enumerated in the title of this bill is the best way of insuring permanent peace.

Disclosures recently made in the hearings conducted by the Nye committee have shocked our people. The American people will never again countenance inequalities that existed during the last war to obtain in another war.

If it is admitted that the first objective is to prevent profiteering in time of war in order to justify the enactment of this legislation, then this bill falls far short of accomplishing that purpose.

This bill does not take the profit out of war, but merely freezes prices. It makes no pretense at removing profits, and it may possibly result in an increase rather than a decrease of profits. There is a strong belief among Members of Congress that the only effectual method to take profits out of war, and thus discourage the appetite for war, is to tax the profits of those corporations or individuals engaged in the production of supplies and matériel to such an extent that there will be no unconscionable and excessive profits made in any future wars.

It is the opinion of many Members that, while this bill does effectually conscript the youth of our country, it fails in its major and primary purpose. The Flynn plan, on the other hand, does constitute an effective way to accomplish this primary purpose. It also will provide revenue for paying for the next war and will avoid handing that burden on to unborn generations. Therefore, it would seem that, if it is the wish of Members of Congress, that such a plan should be included in any legislation of this nature, there should be some method in the parliamentary machinery of this body to include in this legislation the Flynn plan, or one of a similar nature. Certainly, if we cannot accomplish through this legislation the primary purpose, we should not be satisfied merely to legislate for other purposes outlined in the bill—if we are of the opinion that all of these objectives are integral parts of the whole, then if we have failed to accomplish the first, and in the opinion of many the most important purpose, this bill should not be enacted unless properly amended and amplified. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to see if we can come to some understanding about closing debate on this section. I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. O'MALLEY) there were—57 ayes, 16 noes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. McCORMACK). The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-one Members are present, a quorum.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

Several Members objected.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KENNEY. What is the amendment before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MAVERICK) there were—21 ayes, 53 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Following section 4, line 12, page 3, the following section shall be inserted:

"Ninety days after this bill becomes law all manufacturers of munitions of war, including vehicles of destruction for air, land, and water, shall be required to operate under licenses, and the President is hereby authorized and directed to fix the condition of such licenses so that he shall have control during peace or war of the manufacture, sales, and shipments of all war munitions."

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, instead of waiting until war was declared, would license the manufacturers of munitions 90 days after the bill becomes a law. It would license munition manufacturers in order to give to the Government control of the manufacture of munitions in peace time, which control seems to be necessary in order to make effective a Government embargo on the shipment of arms.

It would give the Government power to prevent propaganda coming from manufacturers of munitions. It has appeared in the investigation of the committee of the Senate that pernicious propaganda has originated with the manufacturers of munitions.

The purpose of this amendment is to give the Government, through a licensing power, immediate control of the munitions industry. The munitions industry cannot make profits unless there is war. Profits never flow until blood flows. It is, therefore, highly desirable for the Government to have control of these manufacturers of munitions during peace time. I shall give you some examples of that. What was the last straw that broke the camel's back that plunged America into war? It was the sinking of the Lusitania, was it not? At the time she went down, Mrs. Bryan writes in her diary that she and Mr. Bryan, the Secretary of State at that time, were dining out. She said in her diary that Mr. Bryan was very much disturbed, and on the way home, speaking of the ship, wondered if she had munitions on board, and said that he would have Lansing investigate that. Mr. Lansing did investigate and reported the clearance papers showed that the Lusitania did have munitions on board, and yet the Du Ponts said before the committee if it had not been for the Du Ponts America would have been a German colony. That is your manufacturer of munitions. Perhaps if it had not been for that boatload of munitions, one more cargo of death, it might be that there would be 60,000 fewer crosses in France. We must control this in peace time if we are to keep out of war.

Mr. THOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Not now. Those who have voted opposite to me here today cannot go stronger on this proposition than I. If it is a matter of medicine, we call in a doctor; if it is a matter of law, we call in a lawyer. Ask the ex-service men here if they do not know that when war comes there will be conscription, and it will be rushed through in a spirit of hysteria, because the turning of it down here is no proof that it will be turned down then. There will be conscription. We should make it now while we can make the kind that we want.

Further, on this munitions-business control, in the last war a bunch of Tommies were trying to take an objective in the war. They lost many men. There was a superior make of gun that was mowing them down. Finally they captured it and thought it would be a fitting tribute to take the gun back to England and put it in one of the parks. They mounted it, and it is there today. On one side of its barrel you will find engraved the names of the Englishmen who fell capturing it, while on the other side you will find the name of the makers of the gun—Vickers & Co., an English manufacturing company. That is the patriotism of your group that would keep us from being a German colony. They are not patriots, they are profiteers. We must control them through the licensing power in peace time. When the allied forces charged the Dardanelles they were fired upon by cannons manufactured in England and financed in France. There is your munition maker. I am submitting this amendment in order that we might control them in time of peace and prevent them from selling to our potential enemies, prevent them from evading an embargo on arms as the committee showed they have done in South America, selling to a third party and then transferring.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's very forceful speech shows that there is merit perhaps in his amendment, but there are also, perhaps, implications and complications that we cannot know about in the brief time we have had this amendment before us. The bill before us is a bill to do things after war has been declared, while we are in a period of war. The gentleman's amendment proposes to provide for the licensing of certain businesses before any declaration of war, before any war has been declared by the Congress. I do not think the amendment is germane to the bill or to the section, and I insist on the point of order.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair hear me on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule, but would be glad to receive any suggestions the gentleman may offer.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, this is offered in the form of a new section. The three purposes of the bill will be carried out in this amendment. The amendment does connect back with a former section in which a licensing power is granted. The only difference between my amendment and the previous section is simply a matter of time, placing that power in 90 days rather than deferring it to the time of war. I think that should be taken into consideration.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCCORMACK). The Chair is prepared to rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] applies not only to war-time conditions but to peace-time conditions. The bill clearly shows on its face that it does not become operative until after Congress has declared a state of war to exist. For that reason, the point of order is sustained.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MASSINGALE: Amend section 4 of the bill by striking out the comma after the word "announce", line 5, and by striking out the word "what", line 5, and substituting instead the words "that all."

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment just makes this law, if it is to be passed, operate as to every kind of business or industry. In the discussion of this bill, I want to give the House very briefly the things that have struck me with a great deal of force. I was led to vote against the first motion that was made here in an effort to kill this bill because the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. MCSWAIN] told us he was going to show us what this bill meant and why it was necessary that it be enacted into law. He said he was going to convince the House that this bill was designed for the purpose of taking the profits out of war and prevent profiteering. I think the gentleman is sincere.

Now, another distinguished leader on this side of the House—and I speak of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK]—told us that this bill was never intended to prevent profiteering in time of war. Then we had this difficulty: One of these gentlemen, the chairman of the committee [Mr. MCSWAIN], said that he could not afford, as Chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, to surrender his jurisdiction to the Ways and Means Committee; that the Ways and Means Committee was the only committee authorized to make provision for expenditures. Then comes a member of the Ways and Means Committee and tells us that they will not accept the bill if we put any strings on it.

Now, I am a kind of a lawyer, but I believe it is a serious mistake, in the light of what is developing here, to have distinguished lawyers as heads of these committees, because they are jealous of jurisdiction. What do the people of the United States of America care about jurisdiction in procedure before Congress? They do not care whether the Military Affairs Committee or whether the Ways and Means Committee has jurisdiction of this. I will tell you what they are interested in. They are interested in seeing that the Congress of the United States gives them a piece of legislation that means something. They are not getting it. The people of this country expect this Congress to do something worth while. Here we have lawyers holding the positions of chairmen of these committees jealous of their jurisdiction. Darn the jurisdiction! The chairman of this committee says that he cannot do anything other than he has done. I agree with him. I think he is sincere in it. The gentleman says that those of us who figure on voting against this bill have to reckon with the righteous indignation of the people back home. I want them to know that I am going to vote against this piece of legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE] has expired.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CITRON: Page 3, line 12, after the period, insert "This section shall not apply to the publication or distribution of newspapers, periodicals, or books."

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Chairman, I am introducing this amendment because it is proper and necessary.

The bill itself does not do what the people of this country want. They want more than the prevention of profiteering; they want profits to be taken out of war. No one wants war, but sometimes we are inevitably forced into it by the mad actions of humans. We have reached a state of civilization when we admit that wars are unnecessary and preventable. We would like to outlaw war.

This bill to a certain extent admits that war is a curse; its results are negative.

It is better that we discuss this subject dispassionately in the days of peace than to attempt to argue it in the heat of passion on the threshold of war. I believe the committee and its chairman when they say they will continue the work they have started to take financial profits out of war. This can best be done by taxation, and I hope to see such a tax measure introduced and passed. I for one will introduce such a measure also.

Now, this bill itself has its dangers, unless amended. My amendment proposes to exempt newspapers, periodicals, and books from the terms of section 4. This section provides that during war the President shall determine what classes of public service, of dealers, or manufacturers of any article or commodity shall be required to operate under license. It also states the President may fix the conditions of such license.

Are we going to permit the stifling of the press, one of our greatest public services? Could we prevent the capricious conduct upon the part of authority to reduce the freedom of the press to a nullity, under this bill, without my amendment? True, our Constitution says Congress shall not abridge its freedom. But under this system of licensing it could be stifled by indirection. The freedom of the press is something that free people have sacrificed for too long to surrender so easily. Upon it rests democracy itself. When a country takes away the rights of a free press, it has taken away one of the props upon which its liberties, its culture, its education rest. If we stifle it in war, we will stifle it in other emergencies. Once stifled, it cannot raise its head in freedom.

Hence, my amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it will be noticed that in section 4 the term "public service" is used. It further provides that the President may fix the conditions of such licensing of public service. That can be interpreted to include newspapers, periodicals, or books. That matter is so important that our Constitution provides that the freedom of the press shall be inviolate; but we know that under such a section as this one could so regulate this industry, either through the control of paper as a commodity or through the sale of type or otherwise, as to prohibit and prevent newspapers from being published. The day may come in this country that a newspaper, simply because someone in control of the Government may not like its politics, could be prohibited from publication. That is a serious matter.

This act could by indirection violate the spirit of our Constitution. So far as giving aid, comfort, news, and information to the enemy, the Espionage Act covers this. Sedition, unlawfully obtaining and disclosing information, conspiracies and violations of express law, disloyal conduct, inciting and obstructing the effective prosecution of a war, is criminal and punishable by well-defined laws. But this act, without my amendment, might endanger a free press. There is no harm or injury in accepting my amendment. It preserves one of our fundamental liberties for which men have struggled through the ages. Anglo-Saxon liberty without the right of the press to be free would be a thing of the past. Let us show the world that in our civilization and culture we are not abrogating this fundamental right even in war. For if we are right in entering war, a free press will so declare our cause to the world.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I will say that the gentleman consulted me about this proposal yesterday. We considered it, and as far as we are concerned we will not oppose it.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, up to about 30 minutes ago I was prepared to vote against this bill. I believe, with a lot of you other Members, that this bill, to say the most, is only a short step in the right direction; but since the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], which provides for the conscription of wealth or the direction or control of industry, transportation, and communication, if there was no other thing before this House for consideration, if there was no other thing in this bill except that, and that alone, that should cause the Membership of this body to vote for the passage of this bill.

It has been said that probably that portion of the bill will be held unconstitutional. Perhaps it will be, but I submit to you that we have been told today that the Nye bill has been introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE], and I am advised it has been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. If it has, it has been referred to the committee which has jurisdiction to report out a bill which will accomplish the thing which, in my judgment, the majority of the Members of this House want to accomplish. Now, let us go on record and show the world that we do favor the very thing that the Nye bill provides for, by voting for this bill, having in it the amendment which at least attempts to do what they say the Nye bill will do without question. Then I want to plead with you Members that you join hands with the rest of us who so badly want to see the Nye bill or some such bill passed, in urging the Ways and Means Committee that that bill receive immediate consideration and be given immediate hearing, and that it be reported out to the floor of this House for the consideration of the Membership of this House. I say that the strongest argument you can make for that position is to vote for this bill in its present form.

I will say frankly to you that I am as unalterably opposed to the conscription of men without the conscription of wealth as any Member of this House can possibly be, but I submit further that if we turn down this bill now, then the Ways and Means Committee will have a perfect answer to make to you when you go to them and insist that they report out the Nye bill, because if it happens that they are against it—and I do not know that they are—but if they are, they would have a perfect argument to make to you in saying, "You had before you in a milder form even than the Nye bill, this proposition, and the House turned it down."

You will find yourself closing the door in your own face and unable to accomplish the thing in which I think the majority of the Members of this House are most interested. I plead with you that you now support this bill so you will be in position to demand in good faith the consideration and passage of the Nye bill when it comes before you on the floor of this House. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McSWAIN) there were—ayes 46, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. CITRON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. During the period of any war or emergency declared by Congress the President is authorized to determine and publicly proclaim the order or priority in which any manufacturer, dealer, or public service in the United States shall fill orders, or transport anything, or furnish power, and after such determination and proclamation, it shall be unlawful for any such manufacturer, dealer, or public service to fill such orders in any other order of priority.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHORT: On page 3, line 13, after the word "war", strike out the words "or emergency."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, during the fierce and sometimes exciting discussion that has taken place upon this floor during the last few days I have at times been constrained to think that the honest, the persistent, the conscientious, and the serious work the members of the Committee on Military Affairs have done upon this bill has not been appreciated fully; but let me say to you here and now that this is the first constructive program or bill that has been presented to the Congress of the United States by any committee, under any rule of this House, since the World War, to prevent the recurrence of damnable profiteering by citizens of our own country at the expense of the misery of the world and the blood of our soldiers in the field.

While I do not think this bill goes far enough, I wish to congratulate the committee, and especially do I wish to congratulate the chairman of the committee [Mr. MCSWAIN], the bill's author, upon taking this first step in the right direction.

In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it would be proper for me to neglect during these few remarks to say a few words about the distinguished chairman of this committee, who has been a crusader in this cause for 16 years. Our suspicion sometimes is aroused by lobbyists and enthusiasts in this, that, or another cause. When we find among our colleagues here a sponsor of a great movement, a crusader, if you please, we sometimes wish to go back to the fountain from whence comes the enthusiasm for crusading in behalf of that cause, and often, as in the case of our colleague [Mr. MCSWAIN], I am glad to say we find only motives of the deepest patriotism. I want to say in behalf of the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina, the Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives—and I say this only because I know that in his modesty he would not say it himself—something which will show you the type of man who has been fighting this battle to cut the profiteering out of war for many years. A good deal of objection has been heard because of the conscription clause in the bill, which calls men between the ages of 21 and 31, but everyone knows that very thing must be done in case of another war, so why not say so now?

If war were declared tomorrow this section would not apply to the distinguished chairman of the committee; neither did the age limit fixed 18 years ago apply to him, for at that time he was over 42 years of age. He had a lucrative law practice, and wife, children, and other dependents. What did he do? He was not called upon to volunteer or to be conscripted, he did not ask for a dollar-a-year job and go into some sinecure, but he grabbed a rifle and went to the camps of this country at $1 a day. [Applause.] He would do that very thing again. Those who know this distinguished gentleman know also that there is no power which could be wielded by the profiteering and munition interests of this country that would cause him to vote for an unnecessary blood sacrifice by this country in war that they might profit, or that could cause him to knowingly sponsor any bill that would reflect discredit upon this Congress, upon the youth of this country, or upon the heads of those who bore arms with him under the flag of this country during the World War.

Mr. Chairman, many of the arguments that have been made here have astonished me. As I sat here and saw what sometimes amounted to hysteria in a minor degree, I wondered if it was anything like what took place in this Hall when war was declared against Germany many years ago. If this is an illustration of what can happen when a bill like this is considered in time of peace, what chance would there be of considering such legislation on its merits in time of war? Now is the time for us to legislate on this subject. This bill is the first constructive step that has been made by the Congress of the United States to deprive those leeches of the opportunity to profiteer while somebody else is fighting their battle. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have been intensely interested for the past 2 days in the debate upon this important piece of legislation looking toward taking the profits out of any war in which this country might participate. As I sat here a moment ago, I thought of the man who lived on the border line, the Mason and Dixon's line, at the time of the War Between the States, who did not know whether to cast his fortunes with the North or with the South. Finally he hit upon this idea: He purchased for himself a blue coat and a gray pair of pants.

The result was that he did not gain favor with either side. The soldiers of the South shot him through the coat and the soldiers of the North shot him through the pants.

Mr. Chairman, as we consider this legislation today, we should realize that we have the opportunity afforded us this afternoon, because a vote will come upon this measure, of taking one step across an imaginary line which will place us very definitely upon the side of those who would take profits out of war at a time when the country is engaged in mortal conflict. We should not predicate our votes upon whether this legislation goes as far as we personally want it to go or whether we place our approval upon the suggestions of Senator NYE and the findings of that committee. We are confronted with the fact that while we are debating here this afternoon the paraders have marched in front of the Capitol in observance of Army Day. We are face to face with the fact that tomorrow or on any other day there may come upon this country another world war. Our opportunity is present here now to serve notice that no more in America shall profit come when humanity is at stake.

Mr. Chairman, let us go back for a moment prior to the World War. I recall that one of the leading newspapers of this country commissioned one of the finest journalists of this Nation to go to various parts of the world and interview individuals asking them in the interview this one question: Is there a possibility of a world war? This man went first to the Archbishop of Canterbury and asked the question, "Is there any possibility of a world conflict?" The Archbishop said to him: "There is no possibility of a world war. Christianity has stretched its beneficence into all sections of the world, and we cannot have fighting at this time." He went, secondly, to the president of the University of London, a great educator, and asked him the same question. The president of the university said to him: "Education has made it impossible for another war." He also went to a man who held the purse strings of finance, an international banker, and asked him the question and got the reply: "There is no possibility of a world war." This journalist then went to a military genius and put the question to him. He was a man who knew of the latest inventions and tactics used in time of war. That man said, "We cannot have a world conflict because we have death-dealing devices which today, if war were declared, would wipe out the countries of the world and the people of the various nations would not allow that."

Mr. Chairman, that was the situation back there in 1913 and 1914. Few persons connected with the forces that guided the destinies of the nations of the world thought we would have a world war, but the shooting of a count or "no count" in a small country lighted the fire which caused the World War, and we may be close to the same situation today. We should go on record now. Delay has been too evident and years have come and gone with nothing done.

May I say in behalf of the members and the chairman of the committee this afternoon that whether I personally agree with all the provisions contained in this bill or not, I shall cast my vote in favor thereof, because I believe it is the basis for later legislation which will help bring about everything that the Membership of this House wants brought about, and that is to have profits taken out of war when the United States is engaged in such a conflict.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's position, but does the gentleman think that a bill which brings about human conscription is one that takes the profit out of war? Why should such a section be in a bill that is supposed to take the profits out of war? I may say that the gentleman's vote in favor of the bill will make this human conscription possible.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I understand there is only one perfecting amendment to be offered to the pending section. It seems to me that 5 minutes in support of the amendment and 5 minutes in opposition should be sufficient. It is getting late. There are two more sections to be read and two additional sections to be offered.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DONDERO: On page 3, line 20, after the word "service", insert the words "willfully and maliciously."

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for the purpose of perfecting the language on page 1 of the bill, as well as the language appearing in sections 4 and 5.

The President has a right under the present wording of the bill to fix a date prior to the declaration of war, after which it shall be unlawful for a man to sell, deal in, or rent property, and so forth. Some day the people of this country, in case of a declaration of war under this bill, will wake up to the fact that 5 months after they have rented a house, sold a pair of shoes or a suit of clothes, they are the willful violators of a law which would punish them for doing those things by a fine of $100,000, 1 year in jail, or both.

Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering this perfecting amendment is to have this bill apply only to any person who does that thing willfully or maliciously, and that innocent people will not come under the provisions of the act. I hope the Committee will adopt the amendment.

Mr. McSWAIN. Does not the gentleman think it would be more appropriate from a legal point of view to simply say "willfully"? "Maliciously" involves moral turpitude and other things.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to accept the gentleman's suggestion, and I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be modified and that the word "maliciously" be stricken from the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 4 in order to offer an amendment to line 12, in section 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to return to section 4 and to offer an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 12, after the word "classes", insert "willfully."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan?

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 1, section 1, for the purpose of inserting the word "willfully" following the word "to."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to return to section 1 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DONDERO: Page 1, line 8, after the word "to", insert the word "willfully."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That during the period of any war or emergency declared by Congress the President is empowered to set up such agencies, boards, or commissions, or to designate such persons, to exercise such portion of his powers as he may deem necessary and proper to accomplish the purpose of this act. Likewise, at such time, he shall have power to make such rearrangements of departments, and of bureaus and divisions thereof, and to transfer such duties and powers as he may deem necessary for the proper conduct of war, or for the meeting of such national emergency.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is my candid opinion that one of the best ways to find out whether the people of the United States would want to go to war would be by a referendum. I have no doubt if it were to be decided by our citizens, they would vote "no"; in fact, I believe if the people of every country in the world had an opportunity to vote whether their country should go to war, in my opinion, they would decide against it.

Who is it that wants to have war? Those people who desire to accumulate big fortunes. I think it is abominable that we should have men in our country who want to make profits on munitions of war, because when they do this they know they are destroying human life.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that the resolution to amend the Constitution, which was introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW], will be reported by the committee and brought before the House. If the Members of the House vote for this amendment, it will give the citizens of the United States an opportunity to vote on whether their country shall go to war. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, before we come, later in the consideration of the bill, to the labor amendment which I shall offer, so that we may not get mixed up on the labor proposition, I wish to pay a tribute to my friend the Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee.

I regret I shall not be able to vote for this bill, due to the voting down of the previous labor amendments which I offered; nevertheless, I want to pay a deserved tribute to the Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee. No man was a better soldier, no man is a better chairman, no man in this House is a finer gentleman in every way than the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN]. [Applause.]

I want at this time to pay this deserved tribute to him and, at the same time, to make my position clear with regard to the provision which was attempted to be stricken out in regard to the draft.

I had the honor of serving in a regiment which was a 100-percent-volunteer regiment. I am not saying this for any personal credit, or anything of that sort, but if in a war you left it to the volunteers of the United States to fight the war, whether it was for national defense or to go abroad, you would not be able to win your war, because you would not have enough soldiers. [Applause.] We who served in the front-line trenches in France and took the gaff that every man had to take there did not feel very kindly toward men who were able-bodied, who were not married, who had enough money to leave to their dependents, and who would not volunteer in the service of the United States.

Now, today is Army Day, and there is a parade going on now outside of the Capitol, and I believe that the men who are parading there now are the best of Americans, and I do not like to hear men stand up here today, with a plea that they want peace, and then try to stop, in time of war, the drafting of men into the military service of the United States. [Applause.]

No man is a greater advocate of peace than the man who served in the front-line trenches. We know the horrors of war, but we also know that with all these clouds gathering in Europe, with France sending army corps to the German border, with all the nations jittery, the safety of the United States depends upon being ever ready, as Teddy Roosevelt said, being prepared in every way with respect to our national defense, and then saying to the world, "We do not want war; we want peace. We will do everything with honor to obtain peace, to keep peace; we will help you to keep peace, but we are ready; we have no chip on our shoulder; we are not jingoes, but we are strong and we are prepared. We tell you this frankly, so that you may know that the United States is ready to shake your hand in friendship; but if you attack us, we are ready and able to knock hell out of you." [Applause.]

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHORT: Page 3, lines 22 and 23, after the word "war", strike out the words "or emergency."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 7, after the word "war", strike out the words "or for the meeting of such national emergency."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Following section 6, line 7, page 4, the following section shall be inserted:

"The President is hereby authorized and directed immediately after this act becomes law to set up a war board. It shall be the duty of this board to formulate plans for the mobilization of industry and for the coordination of the civilian, industrial, and military needs in case of war. It shall be the duty of this board to revise and refresh this plan from time to time and keep it up-to-date and to keep the military and industrial leaders informed as to the plan."

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order. Let us have the point of order disposed of now.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman allow the point of order to be reserved?

Mr. RANKIN. I always like to accommodate my genial friend and I will withdraw the demand.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, in brief, this amendment is simply to coordinate the plans now in time of peace for action in case of war and not to wait until we get into the war.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Does not the gentleman know that the War Department has just such a board?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Yes; but the objection to that is that it is totally colored by the War Department. The hope here is to get one that will consider civilian and industrial needs as well.

I realize that a bill to take the profits out of war must come from the Ways and Means Committee. If and when you get such a bill I will support it. This bill, however, can and will help limit profiteering. If we get a chance to vote for the so-called "Nye bill", and it is as the newspapers report it, I shall support it.

This is the first chance we have had to give expression on this proposition. I ask you to go along with us, and if the amendment providing for conscripting or commandeering industry and transportation is not agreed to, I cannot support the bill.

In my opinion, that is the one redeeming provision in the bill. I shall not vote to conscript men unless the conscription of the leaders of industry, commerce, transportation, and communication is in the same bill, also the conscription of the financial resources. If these amendments remain in the bill, I hope it passes, but without them I cannot support it. But as it is amended we have gained much in our fight for universal service, and I hope you help us to put this over; then we can put over a tax bill later if we can get one reported out. To those people who are speaking against the general bill, I say that our purposes are the same. Let us not fight simply because we see it differently. We have made some gains in this. I ask you to come along with us and help us put the bill over. I know that you are well-meaning people, but take the word of men who have been in war. I am sure your intention is good, but it is misdirected. One time we got some Red Cross socks over there. They had been knitted by dear ladies who loved us so much that they yearned to do something to help us and to cheer us. Let me illustrate a point of good intentions gone wrong. One of the boys put on a pair of those socks and rolled up his leggins and started hiking. Something like a gravel in his shoe began to hurt his foot. After a little while he began to limp, and every step he took was more painful than the last. Finally he got orders to fall out. He unwrapped his leggins and took off his sock, and down in the heel of the sock was a little hard ball of paper. He unrolled it, and written on it were the words "God bless you, poor tired feet." It was a matter of good intentions gone wrong. You gentlemen who are opposing this, join with us. If you bring up a stronger bill I will support it. You cannot make it too strong for me; and I will join with you on the tax bill if we get that chance.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the purposes of the amendment are already written into the law in section 5 (a) of the National Defense Act. I think it is clear that the amendment is not germane either to the section or to the bill. The bill provides for the doing of certain things after war has been declared. The amendment would provide for doing certain things prior to any declaration of war, in time of peace, as well as in time of war. I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. This is a bill to take the profit out of war. It becomes operative only after war has been declared. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma attempts to set up a peace-time organization. The Chair thinks that the amendment is clearly not germane, and, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SWEENEY: Page 4, line 7, after the word "war", insert:

"On each anniversary of the declaration of war it shall be in order for the House of Representatives to remain in session for the purpose of the consideration of legislation to conscript man power and protect property rights in the event of war."

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the section or to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That any person, firm, or corporation violating any of the provisions of this act, or violating any publicly proclaimed orders, rules, or regulations made by the President for executing the powers contained in this act, is hereby declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be liable to indictment and trial therefor, and upon conviction thereof shall be sentenced to pay a fine, not exceeding $100,000, or to serve in prison, not exceeding 1 year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNERY: Page 4, after line 16, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 8. Nothing in this act shall be considered to authorize the conscription of any individual for any purpose other than as a member of the military or naval forces of the United States; nor shall any member of the enlisted personnel of such military or naval forces be required to perform any industrial, agricultural, or commercial activity not directly connected with military or naval operations."

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment. The amendment might have been germane to section 3 of the bill. A similar amendment was adopted to section 3. I suggest that the amendment is not germane to this part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to the fact that the amendment reads "nothing in this act shall be construed", and so forth. The Chair thinks it is germane to the section and overrules the point of order.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment was in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD today, and the Membership knows what it means. I call the attention of my friend from New York, who asked me yesterday about the railroads in France, to the fact that this amendment is so drawn that in time of war you could not use your Regular Army, your National Guard, or your National Army to run the factories. I intended that. It also provides that you cannot take a mill or a factory or a farm and say, "Every one of you workers is now in the United States Army, and you are going to work for 40 cents a day or 50 cents a day because you are in the Army and you have nothing further to say about it." In other words, this is to stop the drafting of labor and the farmer in time of war, into their own work.

Succinctly, if a man was getting $1.50 a day in industry or on the farm, this is to prevent the United States Government saying to him, "You are in the Army now and you are going to work for 10 cents a day." It also stops them from using the Regular Army, the National Guard, or the National Army and saying to them, "You are going into Chicago and you are going to run the stockyards and throw men out of work", or "Now you are going to run the railroads."

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. McSWAIN. Does not the gentleman think we have already protected labor, both organized and unorganized, in every reasonable and proper way?

Mr. CONNERY. If I thought that, of course I would vote for the gentleman's bill, but this bill as written now oppresses and conscripts labor.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman is trying by two expressions here to do the same thing.

Mr. CONNERY. No. The first amendment which I offered yesterday, and which the House voted down, would prevent this situation to exist in time of war. If an employee should ask his employer to give him a dollar a week more on his wages and the employer granted him that privilege, under this bill as written now both of them could be fined $100,000 or serve a year in jail, or both. The second amendment which I offered, and which was voted down, would prevent the commandeering of every labor union in the United States by the President in war time. Under the bill as written now the President in war time could wipe out the entire American Federation of Labor by a single order and set as low wages as he wished for the working people. That is not American.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I want to support that language, but it seems to me it flies in the face of the amendment we have already adopted, which would conscript the management of industry.

Mr. CONNERY. I agree with the gentleman. I do not want to take the superintendent or owner of a plant and put him into the United States Army and then say, "Run this plant", any more than I want that done to labor.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. If this amendment is agreed to, will the gentleman support the bill?

Mr. CONNERY. No. I made that clear. In the first place, the two labor amendments which were defeated, and which I just explained, have hamstrung labor. In addition, the bill does not take away any excess profits from the big interests. How can I consistently vote for the bill?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Would the gentleman allow a strike during the war, if he had the power?

Mr. CONNERY. Now the gentleman is asking me what I would do if I were President of the United States. I do not know, and no other man knows until he would get into that position.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Would the gentleman allow the railroads and transportation to be tied up when the soldiers are in France?

Mr. CONNERY. No; of course not. Labor does not do that in time of war. And the gentleman knows that the great majority of the men in France were the sons of laboring men.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] has expired.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened with mingled feelings of emotion to a great deal of the argument throughout the days during which this bill has been under debate. We have heard this bill discussed from the standpoint of finance, industry, and business, and we have heard it discussed from the standpoint of labor. I submit that it was the intention of this committee to submit this bill, not for the benefit of any particular class or caste or creed, but for the benefit of 120,000,000 American citizens. I would like to see this House address itself wholly and solely to the question of supreme importance; that is, the perpetuity of this Republic in time of war and in time of peace. [Applause.] There is no time to talk about class legislation or religious legislation when this country faces an emergency. I say this applies in peace as well as in war. The supreme duty of every American citizen is to place, if necessary, his life, his liberty, and his all on the altar of sacrifice in the hour of trial in an emergency. [Applause.] I have the highest regard for the opinion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY]. I know he means well. I have high regards for the right of labor, for industry, and for finance, but I have a higher regard for the welfare of the Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. Who is going to take care of the wives and children of those men working in factories if you commandeer them and say, "You are going to work for a dollar a day?"

Mr. STARNES. Who takes care of the wives and children of the men who fought the war at a dollar a day? [Applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. Nobody did. Nobody took care of them. That is my answer to that. Nobody took care of my wife while I was over there.

Mr. STARNES. I want to say this, that I was one of those boys who went over there 18 years ago as a volunteer soldier. I have two boys who are dearer to me than my own life, but my life is still at the disposal of my country and the lives of those two boys are at the disposal of my country. Every dollar I have, every foot of property that I have belongs to my country in the hour of trial and emergency. [Applause.] I would not keep faith with those who sleep here and over there, whose forms are now resolving into their original elements, if I did not stand here today and plead for support for this bill for a united country. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, nearly 17 years ago ended a war which was to end all wars. During the past few days we have been discussing the McSwain bill to prevent profiteering in the next war.

That next war should never come. If all of us could look at the meaning of war and at the motives of those who bring about wars, I tell you it would never come again.

THE MOTIVES FOR WAR

A war breaks out. A nation mobilizes its resources and strength. And into a gigantic struggle are thrown millions of men, billions of dollars, and the productivity and energy of many nations.

Yet, if we could only see clearly behind all this fine display, two hideous words would stand out in gigantic letters before us. These words are "greed" and "hate." The greed for profit and the hate and jealousy of nations for each other cause war. Most of the other motives stem from these two.

THE VERSAILLES TREATY

Let us go back a few years to the aftermath of the World War, to the treaty of Versailles. Statesmen of almost every nation in the world were gathered there. One would suppose that their chief purpose would be to establish principles of justice and fairness in the dealings of nations with each other. One would suppose that this great conclave of nations, having one of the greatest opportunities in all the history of mankind, was going to present at last something permanent and lasting in the way of international peace and understanding and of well-being for the nations of the world.

Instead, what actually happened was this: On one side were grouped the victors and on the other side the vanquished. And the victors proceeded to claim the spoils of war. They squeezed from the vanquished every possible profit, without any thought whatever to the economic future and prosperity of those or other nations and without any consideration for peace and good will on earth.

NO ONE WINS A WAR

They refused to admit one important fact. And let me say, if only all of us could realize that fact, we would not have to talk about war again. For that fact is this: No one gains anything in a war. Neither the victors nor the vanquished profit from it. Even the nation who wins the war does not profit from it. You might as well talk of winning an earthquake or a tornado. War means disaster to everyone—no matter who wins it.

And today, because of those men at the Peace Conference of Versailles, who thought they could cut up the map of Europe and divide it among themselves, Europe faces another war. I should be the last one to say that that war must come. Neither I nor anyone else wants to see it come. But when we see one situation after another developing in Europe, any one of which might serve as the lighted fuse for a gigantic explosion, we must face the fact that war might easily come over there.

If another war comes in Europe, let the United States of America keep out of it. Let us keep our boys at home, and let us keep our money at home. Why should our people bleed and die to settle quarrels between traditional enemies in Europe? Let Europe take care of its own mess. We should have no business with it.

George Washington, in his Farewell Address, advised us to keep out of foreign entanglements. We should certainly keep out of foreign wars.

I have spoken of the hate of nations. And hand in hand with that hate of nations goes the other creator of war—the greed for profits, for money. We cannot destroy greed, regardless of any laws which we might pass.

THE GREED FOR WAR PROFITS

What we can do, and what we shall do is to make it as difficult as humanly possible for that greed to thrive on the misery and suffering of mankind. That is why we are finally coming around to see that once we take the profits out of war we will have taken the greatest step ever made to halt war itself. Just as maggots and worms feed on the filth of nature, so does the lust for the dollar and for the power and strength which it gives feed on the suffering and devastation which every war must bring—both to those who win and to those who lose.

THE COST OF THE LAST WAR

Today, as we see the other side of the world on war's edge, let us stop and make some simple computation of the cost of the last war, a war whose bill is not yet paid. Let us first put down a total of 7,583,000 dead and 17,930,000 injured. Beside that figure let us put down another one, $211,000,000,000. That was the cost of murdering those 7,000,000 young men and of wounding eighteen more million.

And what about the sorrow and the grief of the widows and orphans? What about the tears of the mothers and fathers? What about the ruined lives of young girls whose sweethearts were killed or maimed? What about the destruction of the fine and beautiful things which had been before?

Two hundred and eleven billion dollars were spent. Who got that money? Well, let us see what happened in this country. Today, as a result of the congressional investigations which have been carried on, we can trace the trail of that money until it reached various pocketbooks more closely than ever before. Of course, we know that the soldier—the man who did the fighting, who went through the unspeakable horror of actual conflict—he did not get it. He was paid $1 a day.

WAR PROFITS IN THE UNITED STATES

During the years 1917 and 1918 the United States Government spent more than $39,000,000,000 for war supplies. A major general of the United States Army testified that in his opinion more than half of that sum represented excess profits. Profits of 700 percent on these supplies, he said, were the rule rather than the exception.

The Government bought millions of suits of underwear for its soldiers. The Government paid $4 per suit for it, although that underwear cost 75 cents per suit to manufacture. In 1918, $19,000,000,000 were spent for war supplies. At the congressional hearings it was testified that $14,000,000,000 of that $19,000,000,000 represented profits, and that these profits ranged from 300 to 1,700 percent.

Let us look at some more figures on the question of who wins wars. Here are some of the winners:

The United States Steel Corporation increased its earnings more than 12 times from 1914 to 1917. In 1912 the United States Steel Corporation was making slightly less than 3 percent on its investment; in 1915 that figure went up to slightly more than 5 percent; in 1917 it was almost 25 percent.

These figures may mean more if I give them in dollars. Here they are: In 1912 the United States Steel Corporation earned seventy-seven million; in 1915, ninety-seven million; and in 1917, when the war was at its height, four hundred and seventy-eight million.

In the 3-year period before the war the four largest meat-packing companies in this country made an average profit of $19,000,000. During the war period their average profit jumped to one hundred and forty million.

The American Metals Co. was one of those companies which operated for the Government on a cost-plus basis. Its profits were so large that during the year 1917 it paid out to its officers bonuses of $1,190,000. It simply had to do this in order to hide the huge war profits it had gained.

THE VICTORS OF WAR

The officers and directors of these various corporations are in a position to answer the question, Who won the war? They know better than anyone else. They had the proof in their swollen profits, in the increase in value of their stocks and bonds, in the stupendous salaries and bonuses they lavished on themselves.

Those are the men who, in the last few months, have finally been forced to tell at the munition investigation of the United States Senate, at least in part, the sickening story of the manipulation of contracts, of the use of the energy and patriotism of a great Nation for their own despicable ends. These, and many others like them, of whom I have neither the time nor the inclination to speak at this time, were the victors of the World War.

A PROGRAM FOR ANY FUTURE CONFLICT

They took the profits—to us they left the gigantic war debt; the thousands of veterans who took the blows for which these men and these corporations received the pay; the post-war inflation; the bitter memory of futile sacrifices.

All that we must never have again. We shall not permit one part of a Nation to offer the lives of its young men in order that another part may secure wealth. Should war come again, we shall no longer have the youth of the land as the only ones who are being called. We should call every resource, every activity, and above all, the entire wealth, into the service of the common cause. The Government should step in and tell plant owners, financiers, and industrialists just how much they can charge for war materials and how much profit they can make. This is provided for in the McSwain bill which we are now considering. If this bill, amended so as to take away by taxation all excess war profits, is finally adopted by both Houses of Congress and enacted into law, it will mean that no longer will large corporations be permitted to make huge profits out of the suffering and misery of millions of people. The merchants of death will no longer be permitted to keep this blood money.

A PROGRAM FOR PEACE

We can entertain hope that with such a law future wars would be a long time in coming. For although it is too much to say that the abolition of the profits from war will abolish war itself, it will surely serve as the greatest, the most powerful check we can possibly have.

And from that point we can look ahead. Let us devote all our efforts to peace, to a national and international policy that will assure a peace, permanent and lasting, and good times to our Nation and to the other nations of the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CONNERY) there were ayes 17 and noes 86.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McSWAIN: At the end of the bill insert a new section, to be known as "section 8", to read as follows:

"That upon the declaration of war there shall be imposed a tax of 100 percent of all excess war profits that may be earned during said period of war as defined in this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I offer a perfecting amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DONDERO: Page 4, line 8, after the word "corporation", insert the word "willfully."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further perfecting amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DONDERO: On page 4, in line 9, after the word "or", insert the word "willfully."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, all kinds of arguments have been presented on this bill. I do not believe any two men in this Congress are agreed upon what the bill means. As I remarked in the beginning, the chairman of the committee reporting the bill said it was a bill to prevent profiteering in time of war; yet another leading Member of the House said on the floor that it had nothing to do with preventing profiteering in time of war. Now, what in the dickens do you expect a new fellow to understand about the bill and tell his constituents when he goes back home? Let me tell you what I think about it after hearing the full explanation from both sides: I think that the Congress of the United States is dodging its responsibility to the people of America and hiding behind the meshes of the rules of this House.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASSINGALE. No; I am going to finish this statement. If the gentleman will give me more time, I will yield to him.

Mr. McSWAIN. I would be glad to do so, but the time is not in my control.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The gentleman talks about prayers having been offered throughout this Union for a law preventing profiteering in war time. I know it; and I know that the people down in my district are praying people; but they are the penitent kind of people, and they do not pray from the housetops. Here we are with a bill containing a preamble offered to the intelligent people of this Nation as a pretext for giving them nothing.

I do not take any stock in the argument that we ought to support this piece of legislation simply because the Ways and Means Committee might appreciate our attitude.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman now yield for a question?

Mr. MASSINGALE. I may say to the gentleman from South Carolina that when I get through I will yield to him. I think he is a wonderful man, all right. [Laughter.] The fact is they tell me the gentleman is a great soldier. I would like to tell the distinguished Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee that I, too, have a military record; I am an embalmed-beef veteran of the Spanish-American War, and I lived over it. I got that embalmed beef served to me under the President of the left-wingers in this House, yet I have never made any complaint and I have never drawn a nickel from the Government of the United States by reason of that service.

But what have we here? I am not ashamed to go back to my people and tell them I did not support the bill which has in it only one provision worth a penny, that provision which conscripts the young men of this country between the ages of 21 and 45. That is the only point of virility it has in it; and the young fellows from 21 to 45 are the only ones who are going to be prevented from profiteering in time of war by this bill, because you will put them in the trenches, where they cannot profiteer.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NICHOLS: Add a new section, to be known as section 9, as follows:

"If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid the remainder of this act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, we are closing debate on this measures and I want to clarify the situation as it now exists with regard to the purposes this bill is supposed to accomplish. The first purpose is to prevent profiteering. I take it this purpose may now be taken care of under section 8, which was just adopted. The next purpose, that of equalizing the burdens of war, has not been taken care of, because while we are conscripting the young manhood of the country to fight this war we are releasing labor from coming in and doing its part in the war. We are saying to the young manhood of the country between the ages of 21 and 45 that we will put them up for cannon fodder at $1 a day, yet in the same breath we are saying to labor and to those who remain at home that we will let them profiteer as they did in the last war.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. My amendment was adopted, the gentleman understands.

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; that is why I say labor is exempt from the provisions of this bill.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit, my amendment was passed, and my amendment provided that the pay of the soldiers should be equivalent to that of unskilled labor.

Mr. McFARLANE. The gentleman's amendment was defeated yesterday, if I remember correctly.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman's amendment was adopted today.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. An amendment was passed today which conscripts the management of industry, transportation, communications, and commerce.

Mr. McFARLANE. Frankly and candidly, I do not understand the amendments will cover the situation.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. That amendment was passed; the bill has been so amended.

Mr. McFARLANE. Now, let us see about that. At the end of section 3 there was added the provision that does exempt labor. I want labor treated fairly, but I do not believe labor should be exempted from the provisions of this bill any more than capital should be exempted from the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. That amendment which was adopted, and it was a committee amendment, does not take care of labor. You can take your National Guard and your Regular Army to run the railroads of the United States and you can put them into the mills to run the factories.

Mr. McFARLANE. The thing I am interested in is to treat all classes fairly. I want everybody to have the same break on this proposition, and the way the bill is drawn I do not think it brings about that result.

Mr. CONNERY. As I called to the attention of the Members of the House a while ago, under the bill a man may be fined $100,000 and be sentenced to serve a year in jail if he gets an increase of $1 in his wages.

Mr. McFARLANE. I do not so read the bill. Maybe it is that harshly drawn. If it is, it should be amended.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard a lot in the last few days about this being a step in the right direction. I so construe this bill at this time. Since there have been many perfecting amendments placed upon this bill yesterday and today, and particularly since section 8 was added to the bill placing a 100 percent excess war profits tax into the bill, I now feel that the good far outweighs the bad provisions of the bill, and I expect to vote for same. I was glad to introduce today the Nye bill, which has been carefully drawn under the direction of the Senate Munitions Committee, which committee has given very careful study to this question as a result of their hearings conducted investigating this subject the past several months. The debate on this subject the past 2 days, as shown by the RECORD, has centered around the excess profits tax provision of the Nye bill and the other necessary provisions necessary to make effective this legislation on this subject. With the tax and other amendments now in the bill, the necessary mechanics to make these amendments effective may be perfected in the Senate, and I therefore urge you to vote for this bill.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONAGHAN. I would like to know if it would be possible under the rules of the House for me to offer a motion at the proper time before the House votes upon this measure, which, in my estimation, is likely to create a war scare and war propaganda, especially if we leave section 3 in the bill, providing for a draft of men, that we pause for 5 minutes and bow our heads in rightful silent prayer in memory of those who were slaughtered " over there " and never returned from France in the last war, which proved nothing, solved nothing, and destroyed everything in its wake.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that is a parliamentary inquiry.

Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WARREN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5529) to prevent profiteering in time of war, and for other purposes, under the rule reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of no quorum.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that motion for a moment?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I withhold it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to recommit. May I ask whether that is in order at this time?

The SPEAKER. Such a motion is in order after the third reading of the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—TO TAKE PROFITS OUT OF WAR

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to address myself to a consideration of the provisions of H. R. 5529.

No one contends, Mr. Speaker, that this measure as it came to the House from the hands of the committee needs no further amendment in order to accomplish the purposes set forth therein. Your committee is well aware of the fact that the rules and practice of the House of Representatives inhibit the initiation by the committee or the incorporation in the act as submitted by the committee of such certain necessary proposed legislative provisions as it is anticipated will ultimately at your suggestion become a part and parcel of the measure prior to its final enactment.

It may well be borne in mind that for 12 or 13 years both the Democratic and Republican Parties have been charged by their platform pronouncements with the responsibility of enacting legislation to accomplish the result sought to be attained by this bill, namely, to take the profits out of war. A consummation devoutly to be wished, but from a practical standpoint admittedly very difficult of attainment.

This bill, therefore, comes to you confessedly needing amendments to make it practical and workable, and to take it out of the realm of the theoretical and visionary.

In the formulation in time of peace of plans for the mobilization and utilization of the industrial resources of the Nation in time of war such legislation as this is in content and scope cannot be written in detail. Such a bill as this only attempts to lay the foundation which will facilitate and make possible the working out and enactment of laws which shall supply the details, when and at such time as contingencies can be forecast with reasonable accuracy.

In the event of war the President as Commander in Chief will have many problems to solve. The mobilization of material, labor, and capital for the support of the fighting forces; the protection of industry and the civilian population from unnecessary depredation; the control of industrial and commercial relations with neutral and allied nations, and last, perhaps, but not least, the elimination of individual and corporate speculation.

In the hands of the war-time President there is placed by the Constitution, by Congress, and by public opinion a vast responsibility and a corresponding authority. His plans must be practical rather than theoretical, must operate justly and distribute the burdens of war as equably and equitably as possibly practical.

This measure, as I have said, attempts to lay the foundation on which may eventually be raised such a legislative superstructure as will secure for us such adequate and sufficient preparation for and against war as to make us invulnerable against attack, Nation-minded against entering any aggressive warfare, and will keep us out of war.

May I repeat in this presence that which I have often said, namely, that I am neither a militarist nor a pacifist. I am an American, and as such, with every rational and conscientious person the world over, I join in the wish and the hope that there may never be another war. I am not so foolish, however, I hope, as to believe that my hopes will soon be realized or that my wishes will speedily come true. It is the sheerest nonsense today to talk about a world at peace, for there is no peace.

You may dream of the day when wars shall cease; it does no harm, and every effort to bring about a realization of such a dream, so long as it does not strip us of our defenses, develop a condition of unpreparedness, or lay us open to or invite attack, is commendable and deserves our support, but I say to you that while you dream the grim reality stares you in the face that if we are to have universal peace we must be prepared to fight for and maintain it.

Nobody wants war. A pretty broad statement, but I will let it stand. As a general proposition it is true. "As a civilized people we desire peace, but the only peace worth having is obtained by instant readiness to fight when wronged, not by unwillingness to fight at all. Intelligent foresight in preparation and known capacity to stand well in battle are the surest safeguards against war. America will cease to be a great nation whenever her young men cease to present energy, daring, and endurance, as well as the wish and the power to fight the Nation's foes.

"No citizen of a free state should wrong any man, but it is not enough merely to refrain from infringing on the rights of others; he must also be able and willing to stand up for his own rights and those of his country against all comers, and he must be ready at any time to do his full share in resisting either malice domestic or foreign levy." Good old-fashioned, rock-ribbed American doctrine some time jointly expounded by Theodore Roosevelt and Henry Cabot Lodge, if I remember aright. Anyway, the man does not live who can state the American ideal more clearly or emphasize more emphatically the duty which it is ours to perform.

I say again I have no patience with the attitude of those pacifists who for selfish and political purposes seem ready to strip this country of its necessary defenses and ruthlessly throw into the junk heap all of the plans which have been so carefully worked out to insure us a safe, reasonable, and justifiable amount of military preparedness.

If the World War taught them anything, it should have taught them that such action on their part is folly; indeed, a crime against civilization. There is neither justification nor excuse for our ever again being found in a state of unpreparedness for war.

Sick and tired of war as we are, we have not forgotten what the policy of the pacifists and the lack of preparedness cost us in lives and treasure, and we will not forget. We are opposed to war, or anything which looks like another war, but the average citizen is just as bitterly opposed to anything and everything which looks like such a willful lack of preparedness as that with which we were confronted at that date when we ought to have been prepared to have entered and to have then ended the war.

Hear me, when I say that experience has taught that in a republic the due cultivation of proper military discipline among the great mass of the people and a general diffusion of military information always have been, are now, and always will be indispensably necessary for the preservation of this Government.

We dream of the day when swords shall be sheathed forever and our weapons turned into plowshares and pruning hooks, but the road to universal peace is a tortuous path which leads "down the dark future through long generations", involving the Christianization of the world—an end devoutly to be sought and eventually to be obtained—but obviously ages hence.

The American people should not be lulled into any false sense of security by reason of what has been accomplished by the conference on disarmament. We must not take too much for granted. No plan has been promulgated which will change human nature, or bring about the millennium, by contract. No covenant which has ever been made or will ever be entered into between and among nations will prove a perfect panacea for or perfect preventive of war. No league of nations, parliament of the world, or even public opinion itself will always secure a permanent peace. Neither you nor I, our children, grandchildren, nor great-grandchildren will live long enough to see the day when it will be unnecessary to maintain a sufficient force to guarantee our safety and to keep the peace.

Speaking of our dream of the peace that is to be, was it not President Eliot who said that such things are today pleasing, imaginary goals for a distant future just as they have been already for a hundred years? Such public liberties as already exist in the world have been obtained by forcible resistance to oppression; and they must be maintained for generations to come in the same way. It is for the freer nations of the world, including the United States, to maintain them by force until they can be safely maintained without force.

You may not believe in signs, but you are bound to admit that such signs as there are today point to no such fundamental changes in government as to warrant any expectation that human nature has changed one scintilla, or that the dawn of peace is near at hand.

You and I know, as has been well said, that nations are only men in aggregate; they are the aggregation of his crimes and dissipation and depravity, and so long as these constitute the basis of individual impulse so long will they control the acts of nations. When the merchant arbitrates with a customer he is about to cheat; when trusts arbitrate with the people they are about to fleece; when the bulls and bears arbitrate with the lambs they are about to shear; when the thief arbitrates with the man he is about to rob, or the murderer with his victim, and so on throughout the category of crime, then will arbitration be able to realize the utopian dream of the pacifists.

Why is it necessary to argue that the pronouncements of any parliament of the world, international tribunal, league of nations, or conference, by whatever name it may be called, are not worth the paper on which they are written, except for the fact that back of them lies the power of enforcement found in a dominant naval and military force? Why talk about the inviolability of a contract when war impends? The waste-paper basket of the world is filled with "scraps of paper."

We must never forget that it is the respect for our power of enforcement that makes it possible for us to administer law, not the language of the law itself, the parchment on which it is written, or the names of the signatory powers thereto appended.

You may proclaim martial law until you are hoarse and have nothing but your trouble for your pains, unless you have the troops at hand to carry out your orders. It pays to prepare. As between individuals so also between States and nations differences will always arise which are provocative of and can only be decided by a resort to the use of force. The individual and national lawbreaker, robber, thief, rape fiend, and murderer, we will always have with us! Between good and evil there will always be war to the death! The fight is never ending and always new. Why not face the truth? The truth shall make us free!

Everybody knows that no man dares prophesy what may happen in Europe, Asia, or Africa tomorrow. The World War was an awful catastrophe. Are you sure that another does not impend? We are not so far away or so new that we should not take note of the fact that the countries of the Old World are, figuratively speaking, sitting on top of a thin crust of earth, which hides but does not conceal from them, or us, the fact that beneath them there is laid a perfect network of mines and power magazines which fuses already attached. None of them know what action may generate just the necessary friction to cause the terrific explosion which will shake the world's foundations and jar it to its very center.

Statesmen talk at great length and with apparent complacency, but tremble lest they betray some secret or violate some pledge, or say something which may plunge their countries into the maelstrom of war. The problems with which they are confronted are stupendous in magnitude, while the dangers that threaten are altogether too apparent to be imaginary. Even the casual student of international affairs realizes that the relations between the European powers are strained to the utmost tension. Confidence in one another does not exist. Whatever agreements may be entered into will be arrived at with mutual distrust on the part of the contracting parties. They will get what they can by agreement and negotiation and will enforce the satisfaction of their demands, in the last analysis, by a resort to the arbitrament of war.

Do not make the mistake of believing that the last war has been fought. To enforce victory or avert disaster a nation which is fighting for its life will resort to any tactics, it matters not how barbarous, cruel, or unfair. They will do anything to win. It always has been and always will be so. Some of the nations involved in the European imbroglio will have to fight in order to maintain their national unity and integrity. Self-interest always has been and always will be the deciding factor in the settlement of international disputes. Self-preservation is the first law of nature and is the same today as when Napoleon wrecked the monarchies of Europe, and Caesar, having massacred 250,000 Germans in a day, left the melancholy memorandum—"Caesar's legions killed them all."

"Human nature of today", says Hudson Maxim, "will be the human nature of tomorrow, and the human nature of tomorrow will be in all essentials the same as it was in ancient Rome, Persia, and Egypt, and even in the palmy days of sea-sunk Atlantis."

This does not necessarily mean that civilization is a failure, for as has been as well said by President Nicholas Murray Butler, "Several times the history of this world has hung on the point of a spear. Each time the overruling Providence which guides and makes history has seen to it that the solution was toward the greater freedom, the greater progress, the greater liberty, the greater enfranchisement of man.

"If men and nation are engaged in a blind struggle for material gain, for mere conquest, for revenge, for future privileges, then what is going on is in high degree a manifestation of bestiality in man. If, on the other hand, the struggle be one for the establishment on the largest possible scale in the securest possible way of those institutions and opportunities which make man free, then the contest rises to the sublime. In this latter case every contestant on behalf of such a cause is a hero, and everyone who offers his life and his strength and his substance is a sincere lover of his kind."

The fate of civilization has always hung in a balance. There are certain ideals of civilization which cannot be destroyed. Throughout the ages we have fought and striven onward and upward to establish and to maintain justice, mercy, and liberty, and we will ever fight to maintain them, to the end that the largest measure of happiness may be enjoyed by all. But it has been a fight.

Our victory over Germany and her allies has once more demonstrated the fact that might alone does not make right. Right will always triumph in its might. It is unwise, however, not to be prepared.

The progress of humanity throughout the centuries is marked by the bloody battlefields which have made possible our achievements, and so it will ever be. Civilization in itself comprehends a struggle to advance; the opposition it meets must be overcome. The arts of peace will not always prevail. Nations, no more than individuals, will always keep their plighted word. When principle or honor is at stake no man or nation is entitled to live who is not willing to fight to maintain them.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] delivered at a luncheon given under the auspices of the Military Order of the World War at the Penn Athletic Club, Philadelphia, on April 4, 1935.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

I count it a high honor to be invited by the Philadelphia chapter of the Military Order of the World War to discuss national defense, which is so vital to the security of every American, but which has been greviously neglected in the past.

It is an encouraging gesture when 1,000 patriots can find time in these exciting days of American uncertainty to hesitate and pause for a few brief moments to honor the Army by remembering the anniversary of our entrance into the World War. I commend your efforts as noble and praiseworthy. I speak thus because I realize that your presence today comes through pure patriotic motives and nothing else.

If some statesman of national reputation were scheduled to address you, no doubt the hall would be overflowing with those who came to learn his convictions upon current national problems. If some blatant demagogue, with a national reputation, were scheduled to appear, no doubt the hall would be overflowing with those who came to satisfy a whimsical curiosity. But you who are present today came because of your interest in the Army and your love for country. I am not so vain to feel that any man came for the sole purpose of hearing me talk on national defense. I doubt that there is a man in the audience who ever saw or heard of the speaker before. You and I are total strangers. You and I are not bound by any ties of blood or any long terms of friendship, but we are bound to one another through a bond of fellowship which has existed since birth, and which has grown and developed through the important fact that we are Americans. And because we are Americans we meet to demonstrate our devotion to certain fundamentals which we deem indispensable to the future welfare of our country.

It is true, as your chairman has stated, that I have the honor of succeeding the late Henry T. Rainey, former distinguished Speaker of the House, in Congress. Today I am in Congress as a Democratic Representative of the Twentieth District of Illinois; but I come not to this meeting to speak as a partisan upon any political subject, but I come to speak as an American patriot upon a question in which partisanship is unknown and political lines divide and fall like the snowflakes of the storm.

In order to intelligently discuss an adequate national defense as applied to America today, it is necessary to use as a base for all rhetorical adventures the Treaty of Versailles. No one can fail to remember how Woodrow Wilson, the former President of the United States, went to Paris with his 14 points of human idealism. No one can forget the fervent pleas he made that any terms agreed upon around the conference table should be based upon "a peace without victory"; and no one can forget how those pleas were condemned and ridiculed and finally crushed by Old World intrigue and diplomacy. Had the admonitions of Woodrow Wilson been heeded in that tragic hour, had his pleas been accepted at that momentous conference, and had his deep principles upon international morality become the law of the universe, the world economic plague of today would not have been with us.

The Treaty of Versailles carved up Europe in territories and distributed them among European victors, and from that moment the economic spark of retaliation and the national germ of humiliation started laboring side by side in the breasts of the vanquished until today that combination of national enthusiasm has reached such proportions that the peace of the world is verily threatened.

The Germany immediately following the war and the Germany of today are entirely different nations. Adolf Hitler boldly asserts that the new Germany must have a dominant position in the affairs of Europe. He has repudiated the Versailles Treaty in toto and makes demands which have sent waves of fear and resentment throughout the nations of Europe. Among other things, he demands that the neutral zone along the Rhine be eliminated, that the German Army be increased to approximately 600,000, that the air forces be on a parity with England and France, and that Germany have economic union with Austria. He demands all of this by peaceful endeavor, yet, unless this Hitler dream is realized, the nations opposed to this course had better be prepared to take drastic economic and military measures.

In addition to all this, we find that for years Japan has cast a covetous eye upon territories in Manchuria and China, and there are those who even believe that she looks to the east across the Pacific to our own beloved America.

Today Mussolini, the greatest dictator of all times, has an army in Africa in order to subdue the wild tribesmen along the border lines of Ethiopia; and in the German controversy he says bluntly that Italy has a million shining bayonets ready to meet any emergency.

The question of the hour is: Are the nations of the Old World prepared for another war, and will they be able to meet the German challenge? The only factors which may keep them out of war today are the financial and economic difficulties which they are all experiencing. However, with their variety of troubles, they have never lacked for money to equip and maintain powerful armies and navies.

Listen to these startling figures: Great Britain, since the Peace Treaty of Versailles was signed, has always collaborated with other nations in every peace conference. Yet her experience of the past with paper treaties compels her to rely for her safety upon a standing army of 228,362, along with the greatest navy in the world, and in fortresses which line the shores of the world and dot the seas around her possessions. France has participated in all peace conferences since the war, yet we find her relying for her safety on a standing army of 564,608 men and a reserve force of 6,347,200 in addition to a splendid fleet of submarines in their attempt to control the waters under the sea. Italy, a peace participant, relies for her safety upon a standing army of 433,625 militant, fighting men, with a trained reserve force of 5,885,000 men. Japan has never missed a peace conference since the war, but today she relies for her safety upon an active army of 248,000 and a trained reserve of 2,000,000, with a navy that assures supremacy in the western Pacific. Russia, if one can believe those who speak from an authoritative standpoint, is constantly crying for disarmament, and yet the records disclose that she has the greatest army of all, 841,400 in the regular army and 15,163,600 trained reserves. Even Germany, who was limited under the terms of the Versailles Treaty, today has a standing army of 300,000, with a reserve force of 2,200,000 men.

Developing this thought a little further, it is interesting to learn the percentage of the population of these leading nations who directly or indirectly bear arms: Great Britain, 1.34 percent; France, 16.5 percent; Italy, 14.54 percent; Japan, 2.43 percent; Russia, 9.66 percent; Germany, 3.92 percent.

What would the millions who died in the last war to make the world safe for democracy say if they could rise from their beds of immortality and hear the beating of drums and the blowing of trumpets and see the unfurling of flags as the soldier today trains for the death and destruction of tomorrow? Little or no consideration is being given to those dying men who went to their graves believing they were giving their all in the scheme of universal peace, and who said, with dying lips, "If you break faith with us who die, we shall not sleep in Flanders Field, though poppies grow." Let us examine the records to see if America has kept the faith. From 4,000,000 fighting men in 1918, today we have a standing Army of 136,975, with a reserve force of 303,794, a total of .35, or less than one-half of 1 percent, of our entire population bearing arms either directly or indirectly.

These figures should not only satisfy the spirit of the dead but should also be a complete answer to the American pacifist, who sees in the standing Army a huge militaristic instrumentality for the commencing of war. America has never been a Nation of military men and never will be, but world conditions today are conclusive that America cannot remain indifferent to a threatened conflict which might destroy civilization, including the pacifists.

And, as a Member of Congress, I am happy that I had the privilege of voting a few days ago for a bill which increases our Army to 165,000, and 14,000 officers.

Not only have we been extremely moderate in the size of our Army, but let us look to the Navy Department, and examine the actions of American diplomats upon the question of disarmament since the World War. Since the signing of the armistice in November 1918 America has made every conceivable gesture toward a world peace. In 1921, at the Naval Limitation Conference held in Washington, as an example of our good faith we scrapped hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of the finest battleships in the world, while other nations destroyed only blueprints. And during the interim every move made by this Nation was in the interests of a peace of understanding and good will toward all nations of the universe. It was not until 1933, when the present administration came into power, that it was agreed that we should build our Navy to treaty strength as understood by the London and Washington Treaties. For those who fear that our large Navy is an instrumentality of war, you should know that the building of the Navy up to parity is in keeping with those treaties in which the great nations of the world participated. And our final determination to build to treaty strength was taken only after years of patiently waiting to see if other world powers would not listen to the voice of reason on the question of permanent disarmament.

In addition to the Army and the Navy, it is also necessary for a complete national defense to have Congress enact into law legislation which will take the profits out of war. The universal draft act is the cure for the past and present existing evils upon that question. This act is an expression of the views long held by the Military Order of the World War. Although originated by the American Legion, today this important measure has the support of practically every veterans' organization in this country. Conscription of all wealth and materials, as well as men, in every emergency will give to the country a moral defense of equity and justice, which becomes a powerful factor in maintaining the human equilibrium of any great nation. I stoutly maintain that one who makes huge profits in times of war in safety at the expense of those who must go to war to defend their country in time of need is not a patriot as is understood by the people of this Republic.

The Army, the Navy, and a universal draft, as outlined above, presents a splendid program of national defense. With it as a certainty, we have no fear from the enemy without, but it is internal dissension and discord which we must carefully weigh in the balance. Today America is passing through a peaceful revolution which will take many years for complete achievement. We are passing through an economic period, which frequently threatens the structural fibers of America. We are in an economic battle which is more dangerous to the perpetuity of the Nation than the great World War. Communistic activities and other subversive movements are constantly feeding upon the poverty of the Nation. Political phobias and quack doctrines, as the panaceas of America's ills, are being spread throughout the land by designing demagogues.

If these were normal times, little heed would be given to the mouthings of these demagogues, but these are times when the soul and metal of mankind are being seriously tested. These are times in American life when the clarion call of some modern Jacobin is sweet music to the ear of misery and distress. These are times when a discontented Cataline may become a dangerous leader of the mob. These are times when any irresponsible opportunist might reach the top by walking on the backs of those who are hungry and oppressed.

This crisis should cause every patriot to seriously reflect upon the present and future responsibilities of this Nation. What would happen to America and her precious institutions for which our fathers shed their blood and tears if some irresponsible demagogue would reach the seat of the mighty? What would happen to the weak, the poor, and the hungry in this land of the free? Would their burdens be lighter? Would their load be lifted? Would they be more secure and happy in their homes? Would the constitutional guarantee of life, liberty, free speech, and the pursuit of happiness continue unabated? I answer emphatically in the negative.

If the time should ever come when some ego-maniac attains such a position in American Government, I make the prophecy that the America of our fathers will be forgotten and the very ones who supported that type of leader will suffer along with us all as they watch him assume the arrogant power of an unscrupulous dictator. His orders and decrees, merciless as they may be, will be carried out, if necessary, by the bayonets of American soldiers under his command.

America does not need a dictator. America does not need a Hitler, a Stalin, or a Mussolini to make a mockery out of everything that is sacred to a free and independent people.

I have an abiding faith in the American people. My prayer is that every citizen, irrespective of his station in life, will retain his moral energy and his American courage in this great crisis. Just remember that America is young, America is virile, America is courageous. She always conquers when her cause is just. She will not fail in this hour of economic distress throughout the world. With all her troubles and with all her woes, I lift my hands to the heavens above and thank God that I am an American.

PROPAGANDA OF HOLDING COMPANIES OPPOSING PENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, due to the large number of letters being received by Congressmen opposing the enactment of legislation to control and regulate utilities companies and designed to curb unfair dealings practiced in the operation of the so-called "holding companies", I present herewith an exchange of correspondence with investors residing in the State of Idaho:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 14, 1935.

Dr. D. E. CORNWALL,
St. Maries, Idaho.

DEAR DOCTOR: I am in receipt of your letter of March 8, with reference to proposed legislation affecting the status of holding companies. In studying the provisions of the bill in question, I believe that you are unduly alarmed as to the effect that this legislation may have on your investment.

I believe you will agree with me that the Government should exercise some measure of control over the operations of these holding companies to curb unfair business practices.

I appreciate your thoughtfulness in calling the matter to my attention and assure you that it is my desire and intention to protect bona fide investments of the people of my district.

Sincerely yours,

COMPTON I. WHITE.

ST. MARIES, IDAHO, March 28, 1935.

Congressman COMPTON I. WHITE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WHITE: I have your reply of March 14 to my letter of March 8, with reference to the Rayburn-Wheeler bill.

You state that it is your desire and intention to protect bona fide investments of the people of your district. Will you kindly advise me what in your opinion constitutes bona fide investments?

You also state that the Government should exercise some measure of control over the operations of these holding companies to curb unfair business practices. As a matter of fact, aren't there already both Federal and State laws, if they are enforced, by means of which regulation can be effected?

A drastic regulation or confiscation of utility holding companies, granting that there have been unfair business practices, will not penalize those who were guilty of the management through which such unfair practices were perpetrated, but it will penalize the thousands of small investors who because of their small amount of capital purchased common stocks instead of bonds because the common stocks gave them a higher rate of return upon their principal, a thing most desired by investors of small means. Surely you do not want to see the savings of the middle class wiped out, including in its number many aged and infirm, widows, and children.

I remain very much opposed to this proposed legislation, Mr. WHITE. I am unable to see where it imposes any penalties upon anyone except the small investor who bought the securities of these companies in good faith at a time and under conditions which made the investment of his funds in this manner a perfectly safe and sane procedure.

Yours truly,

D. E. CORNWALL, M. D.

BOISE, IDAHO, March 29, 1935.

COMMONWEALTH & SOUTHERN CORPORATION,
100 West Tenth Street, Wilmington, Del.

GENTLEMEN: To show you my opinion of the Rayburn utility bill, in answer to your form letter dated March 21, 1935, I am writing this letter.

In your letter to me above mentioned you suggest that I ask the Senators and Congressmen from my State to fight the bill. In lieu of this suggestion I am mailing them a copy of this letter to advise them of my approval of the bill.

This action of mine is based on selfish motives, in a spirit of vindinctiveness and revenge, I frankly confess.

I hold common stock in your corporation for which I paid $1,400. At the present time it is worth about $65.

I feel sore and that I have been "gypped", and quoting from the copy of the Hearst editorial appearing in the Hearst newspapers March 18 and in the United States News March 11 defending your corporation and other similar ones, I am using some of the words and phrases myself in the opposing manner, or against your corporation.

"Grievances that cry out for redress." I have a grievance in the loss of $1,300 which cries out for redress, for which I know there is no redress.

"Self-defense right and duty of taxpayers." I would like to build a defense for my two boys growing up, that when they arrive at the age when they might be tempted by misrepresentation of similar corporations to buy worthless stock, that it would be impossible for them to do so.

"Time is here for business to speak out." While I confess from results attained that I am a poor business man, I am taking this method of speaking.

"Appeals must be open and aboveboard." Instead of sneaking around your back, or in an underhanded manner attempting to take from you that which you wish to retain, as was done to me, I am "open and above board", in a large way, by mailing you this letter.

"Life savings of many are in jeopardy." This apparently does not apply to the life savings I invested in your stock, as the period of "jeopardy" expired several years ago, but, be that as it may, the editorial continues and states: "When the death sentence has been passed, it is the right of all to stand up and fight", by clever manipulation of stock values by this corporation, I paid for fictitious value, the death sentence on my money was secretly passed and executed, before I had a chance to fight, as suggested.

I am now fighting over a dead horse, not with the fond expectation of recovering, but as suggested in the editorial, "To protect the hundreds of thousands of innocent men, women, and children" from a like loss in the future.

While the above does not cover the subject in detail, and much more could be written, it is felt enough has been said to convey in a small measure the meaning or intent.

Similar thoughts are being expressed verbally, locally, to friends and business associates.

It is believed the holders of common stock of this corporation in general would express corresponding sentiments if called upon and that the hysterical efforts, in attempting to get them to force their Senators and Congressmen to act against the bill in question, will meet with a negative action.

Trusting I have expressed myself in such a manner that there will be no misunderstanding on the part of anyone as to my opinion, I am,

Yours truly,

BRUCE C. LEISER, Boise, Idaho.

It is evident from the facts disclosed in the letter from Mr. Leiser that legislation is necessary to control the business practices that operate to defraud investors in purchasing holding companies' securities.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent has been granted, at the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCSWAIN], and all Members have 3 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 5529.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman tell us what the program is going to be for the first part of next week?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The river and harbor bill will come up for consideration Monday.

Mr. SNELL. That will be brought up under a special rule?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not know. The social-security bill will follow that measure.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman knows that the river and harbor bill is a privileged matter.

Mr. SNELL. I do not know any such thing.

Mr. MCFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MCFARLANE. Why can we not vote on this bill today and finish up the matter?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. J. Res. 117. Joint resolution making appropriations for relief purposes.

JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 117. Joint resolution making appropriations for relief purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MCFARLANE) there were—ayes 128, noes 43.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MCFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on account of a quorum not being present.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is not required to adjourn.

Mr. MCFARLANE and Mr. O'MALLEY demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, April 8, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

6770. Also, petition of the city of New Albany, Ind.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE

MONDAY, APRIL 8, 1935

(Legislative day of Wednesday, Mar. 13, 1935)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Friday, April 5, 1935, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

SIGNING OF AN ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION

The VICE PRESIDENT announced that, pursuant to the order of the Senate, he signed, on Saturday, April 6, 1935, the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 117) making appropriations for relief purposes, said joint resolution having previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and reported by the Committee on Enrolled Bills as having been examined and found truly enrolled, and that it was delivered to the committee to be presented to the President of the United States.

CORRECTION

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on April 5, last Friday, during the consideration of the conference report on the relief joint resolution, while the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] was speaking, I interrupted him as follows:

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield

Mr. MCKELLAR. I know a majority of the House Members favored the amendment, and, as I recall, but one objected to the amendment.

Mr. GLASS. One?

Mr. MCKELLAR. One, as I remember, and that was Mr. OLIVER, if I may use his name.

Representative OLIVER has called my attention to this language, and it is clearly susceptible of two constructions. What I intended to say, and what I thought I did say, was that I knew a majority of the House Members favored the amendment as reported by the conferees, and I recalled but one of them who raised any question, and he not only wanted the Cutting amendment but wanted the committee amendment also.

Mr. OLIVER has written me a letter in which he explains his position with accuracy, and I ask at this point that the letter may be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks in order to do full justice to Mr. OLIVER and also to me, because I did not intend the statement as construed by Mr. OLIVER.

I desire to say that the reason which impelled me to vote for the amendment as reported by the conferees was that the Cutting amendment applied only to the remainder of the present fiscal year; I felt sure that full justice could not be done the unemployed teachers and the unpaid teachers under the Cutting amendment, and for that reason the language adopted by the conferees seemed to me to be better for the teachers and for education than the language which was used in the Cutting amendment. I wanted to make that explanation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 6, 1935.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In order that there can be no possible misunderstanding as to my position in reference to the Cutting amendment, and also the amendment making $300,000,000 available for the assistance of educational persons, I wish to say that I was in hearty accord with the House conferees as to making the $300,000,000 available for the assistance of educational persons, and I am sure you will recall that I also favored the retention of the Cutting amendment. Since the Cutting amendment placed a limitation on the amount that might be expended, as well as a time limit, it was my thought, and this thought, I think, was shared by the other House conferees, that the $300,000,000 should be made available for the assistance of educational persons, so as to refute any possible interpretation that Congress did not favor a continuance of the President's policy for the past 2 years of keeping public schools open, and which schools, without the aid of the Federal Government, would have been forced to close.

I know that my position, as above outlined, was clearly understood by every one of the House conferees.

With renewed assurances of my high esteem and regard, I am,

Yours sincerely,

W. B. OLIVER.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

INVESTIGATION OF GOVERNMENT OF VIRGIN ISLANDS—COMMITTEE SERVICE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letter, which was read:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., April 5, 1935.

Hon. JOHN N. GARNER,
Vice President of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Owing to service on three other Senate committees which are at present conducting investigations, it is impossible for me to devote the time to the Virgin Islands investigation which its importance deserves. I hereby respectfully resign from the committee.

Very respectfully,

BENNETT CHAMP CLARK.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. REYNOLDS to fill the vacancy on the above-mentioned committee.

PUERTO RICAN EMERGENCY RELIEF ADMINISTRATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a cablegram from the Speaker of the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAN JUAN, P. R., April 4, 1935.

Honorable PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

The House of Representatives of Puerto Rico respectfully requests that you make known to that honorable body the following communication. The Honorable Millard E. Tydings, the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico respectfully petitions you to ask congressional investigation of activities of the P. R. E. R. A. It is respectfully suggested that for this purpose the powers granted to the senatorial commission already appointed, under your chairmanship, for investigation in the Virgin Islands be extended to cover investigation of P. R. E. R. A.—the emergency administration extended to Puerto Rico by the national administration with such good wishes is going to result in, and has already resulted in, a complete failure under the direction of Administrator James R. Bourne because of his having permitted, notwithstanding the protests and continuous complaints being received from all the municipalities of the island censuring the political partisan control exercised by the greater part of his associates, directors, and subordinates, that the truly needy affiliated with all the parties of the country be prejudiced by the discontent created among the poor classes because of the constant practice of appointing wealthy persons in violation of the purpose of the Federal Emergency Act by putting into effect practices showing a total lack of knowledge of the factors which constitute the structure of each Puerto Rican family, and a complete ignorance of the emotional and intellectual make-up of our people, and by continually offending the sentiments and the dignity of the representative entities of the country, ignoring the precepts of the Federal act in force in order to experiment with human suffering in order to avoid that the public sentiment of deep protest may be badly interpreted and in order that the people who are desirous of being able to enjoy the advantages of a true rehabilitation with the assistance of that administration may preserve their faith and their confidence therein, the house asks that you give prompt attention to this petition.

MIGUEL A. GARCIA MENDEZ,
Speaker House of Representatives.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 104

Whereas one of the most important of the territorial possessions of the United States of America is Puerto Rico; and

Whereas Puerto Rico is so geographically located that it is capable of competing with foreign countries in the sugar-production market of the world; and

Whereas it is to the advantage of the United States of America to have economically independent states and possessions; and

Whereas curtailment of the production of sugar in Puerto Rico by the Government in the United States tends to create poorer economic conditions in that country; and

Whereas the Vice President of the United States of America, the Honorable John Nance Garner, received from the president of the Senate of Puerto Rico, the Honorable Rafael Martinez Nadal, the following cablegram, dated February 20: "The Senate of Puerto Rico demands that an amendment be introduced to the Jones-Costigan Act providing that the production quota of Puerto Rico be fixed at 1,000,000 tons, by which not only would justice be done to Puerto Rico, by giving it the same treatment as that given to sugar areas of the continent, but also it would cause to disappear the principal reason for the distressing and intolerable economic social condition through which our country is passing as a consequence of the arbitrary limitation of which sugar production in Puerto Rico has been the object to the benefit of Cuba"; and

Whereas the president of the Senate of Puerto Rico, knowing the conditions of his country, feels that if the United States increased the tonnage quota of sugar production for Puerto Rico the present poor economic conditions in Puerto Rico would be lessened and Puerto Rico would be on the road to better times: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Legislature of the State of New York requests that consideration be given to the appeal made by the president of the Senate of Puerto Rico, the Honorable Rafael Martinez Nadal, and that the quota of sugar production in Puerto Rico should be raised to 1,000,000 tons a year, so that that country might compete with foreign countries in the production of sugar for the bettering of the economic conditions in Puerto Rico; and be it further

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the President of these United States of America, the Vice President of these United States of America, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the president of the Senate of Puerto Rico, and to each Member of the Congress of the United States of America.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

House Joint Memorial 1

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent:

Whereas we feel that in no case can we have a return of prosperity unless, and until, the American farmer receives for his commodities a price which will enable him to absorb the products of industry, meet his obligations, continue his operations, and live in a manner becoming to sovereign citizens; and

Whereas we feel that in the utilization of farm products, rather than in a reduction of same, lies the permanent solution of our problem; and

Whereas the annual consumption of gasoline as a motor fuel has increased to an enormous figure; and

Whereas it has been demonstrated that a blended motor fuel will give utmost satisfaction and such blend would create new possibilities for the utilization of farm products: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the house of representatives (the Senate of the State of Idaho concurring) respectfully request and petition the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled to enact into law, a bill known as the "Alcohol-Gasoline bill", which bill provides for the manufacture of a blended motor fuel consisting of about 90 percent gasoline and 10 percent grain and/or potato alcohol to be gained through the process of distilling wheat, corn, and potatoes grown on American farms; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be, by the secretary of the State of Idaho, transmitted to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of Agriculture, to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to the Senators and Representatives from Idaho in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following memorials of the Legislature of the State of Maine, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Memorial to the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled

We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine, in the eighty-seventh legislature assembled, most respectfully present and petition your honorable body as follows:

Whereas it is impossible to charter barges of light draft, barges of this type having nearly disappeared, and necessitating use of barges of deeper draft, and unless the channel in Long Cove waters is improved and dredged out at points, the shipping from this point will be impossible in the future.

Resolved, That we, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine in legislature assembled, do hereby respectfully petition and urge that necessary action shall be taken by the Congress, so that Long Cove Channel in the State of Maine will be dredged so that the channel will be clear from obstruction as far as the docks; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, duly authenticated by the secretary of state, be immediately transmitted by the secretary of state to the proper officers and committees of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, and to each of the Senators and Representatives representing the State of Maine in the United States Congress.

Memorial to the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled

We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine in the eighty-seventh legislative session assembled, most respectfully present and petition your honorable body as follows:

Whereas the port of Portland was formerly one of the leading ports of the country, and

Whereas Federal policies affecting treaties and tariffs have resulted in a tremendous loss of commerce of the port of Portland: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, your memorialists, do hereby respectfully petition and urge that a Federal investigation be made of the interstate and international commerce of the port of Portland, and that adequate legislation be enacted and/or Federal treaty negotiations be made that will assist in regaining for the port of Portland its lost commerce, and to assure the carriage of American commerce through American ports; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, duly authenticated by the secretary of state, be immediately transmitted by the secretary of state to the proper officers and committees of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, the President of the United States and to each of the Representatives and Senators representing the State of Maine in the United States Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Vermont, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas resolutions have been submitted in the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States providing that the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors be directed to review the report contained in House Document No. 149, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, on deep waterway to connect Lake St. Francis on the St. Lawrence River with the Hudson River at Albany by way of Lake Champlain, with a view to determining the advisability and cost of such a connection between the St. Lawrence Waterway and the sheltered waters of the Atlantic coast between Boston, Mass., and Norfolk, Va., and that the Board of Engineers be further directed to make an examination and report with respect to any feasible canal route from the Harbor of Montreal, in the Province of Quebec, Dominion of Canada, south to Lake Champlain; and

Whereas such a deep waterway or canal route into Lake Champlain as is referred to in the above resolution would be of inestimable benefit to industry and agriculture in Vermont and throughout all New England, in materially reducing the cost of transportation of many commodities into and out of Vermont and New England: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives, That the Houses of Congress be urged to pass the said resolutions and to give the most careful consideration to the reports submitted in accordance therewith;

That the Members of the Vermont delegation in Congress be requested to lend their favorable support to the said resolutions, and to endeavor to procure the passage of legislation to provide for the construction of a deep waterway or canal into Lake Champlain along one of the proposed routes; and

That copies of this resolution be sent by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Member of the Vermont delegation in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Georgia, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

Whereas the Federal Government, in a continuation of its recovery policies, is contemplating an extensive public-works program which will result in the construction of many public buildings throughout the United States; and

Whereas the marble, granite, and building-stone industries are of vital importance to this State, and these commodities constitute some of the most valuable resources of the State; and

Whereas these industries have suffered extreme reverses during the past few years as a result of the curtailment of building and construction; and

Whereas these industries, when operating, employ a large number of skilled and unskilled workers in our State, and who are now unemployed, and many on relief; and

Whereas, through an increased use and consumption, many of these industries could again operate and thereby considerably reduce unemployment; and

Whereas the greater portion of the cost of finished marble, ornamental architectural terra cotta, finished granite, and finished building stone is incurred by labor; and

Whereas the quality and durability of these commodities and buildings erected therefrom unquestionably excels the quality and durability of buildings constructed of other materials; and

Whereas, from the standpoint of economy and prudent policy, it is advisable that lasting and durable material be used in the construction of public buildings: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Georgia (the senate concurring), That Congress be respectfully urged and petitioned to enact legislation, or to otherwise take appropriate action, to require and direct that marble, granite, ornamental architectural terra cotta, and natural building stone be used in the construction of public buildings to be erected under the Public Works Administration program; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to send copies of this resolution to the President, Vice President, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and to the Members of Congress from the State of Georgia.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration:

Senate Joint Memorial 19

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Thirty-eighth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, convened in regular session, respectfully represent that—

Whereas in this Nation there is no adequate national system of recording and checking the movements of aliens who are within the Nation, either legally or illegally; and

Whereas a Nation-wide system of identification and registration of all aliens who are within this Nation, or who may be in the future within this Nation, would materially assist and be of great benefit and convenience to the law-enforcement agencies of the Nation and to the Federal authorities charged with the regulation of aliens: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oregon (the house of representatives jointly concurring therein), That we, your memorialists, the Thirty-eighth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, convened in regular session, respectfully petition the Congress of the United States to enact legislation providing for and requiring the registration of all aliens within the United States of America; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Oregon be, and he hereby is, directed to forward a copy of this joint memorial under his certificate and seal to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Member of the Oregon delegation in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the General Court of Massachusetts, favoring the prompt enactment of legislation creating a national compulsory unemployment-insurance plan, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

(See resolutions printed in full when presented today by Mr. WALSH, p. 5207.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Republican county committee of the third assembly district of Queens County, N. Y., favoring an investigation of the Morro Castle disaster, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of several citizens of the States of Florida and Virginia, praying for the enactment of old-age-pension legislation, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Union Labor Club of Illinois, Chicago, Ill., favoring the enactment of stringent anti-sedition legislation prohibiting the advocacy of violent overthrow of the Government, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from the American Federation of Teachers, with offices at Chicago, Ill., praying for continuance of the investigation of the munitions industry, and also an investigation of war propaganda in newspapers, radios, and schools, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of the United States, praying for an investigation of charges filed by the Women's Committee of Louisiana, relative to the qualifications of the Senators from Louisiana [Mr. LONG and Mr. OVERTON], which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of several national committeewomen of the States of Idaho, Maryland, Nebraska, Rhode Island, and Wisconsin, praying for an investigation of charges filed by the Women's Committee of Louisiana, relative to the qualifications of the Senators from Louisiana [Mr. LONG and Mr. OVERTON], which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a resolution adopted by the City Wide Democratic Woman's Club, Baltimore, Md., opposing section 213 of the so-called "Economy Act" relative to the holding of positions in the Federal service, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the City Wide Democratic Woman's Club, Baltimore, Md., favoring the adoption of the so-called "equal-rights amendment" to the Constitution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Salisbury and vicinity, in the State of Maryland, favoring the extension of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER presented memorials of sundry citizens of Clearwater and Barton County, in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation amending the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and also the enactment of the so-called "commodity-exchange bill", which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented papers in the nature of petitions from Lodge No. 1308, International Association of Mechanics, of Wichita, and Straw Board Workers Union, No. 19367, of Hutchinson, both in the State of Kansas, favoring the enactment of the so-called "Wagner labor-disputes bill", which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Courtland, Kans., praying for the enactment of the so-called "Vinson bill", providing for the immediate payment of adjusted-service certificates of World War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of William F. Kearns, of Dorchester, Mass., praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. 2857) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain soldiers who served in the Indian wars from 1817 to 1898, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1927, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented letters in the nature of petitions from General Henry M. Lawton Camp, United Spanish War Veterans, of Springfield, and the Medford Veterans' Council, of Medford, both in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation for the benefit of Spanish-American War pensioners, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WALSH also presented the following resolutions of the General Court of Massachusetts, which were referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolutions memorializing Congress in favor of the passage of national unemployment-insurance legislation

Whereas there prevails in the United States of America a grave condition of economic insecurity, more especially among the working classes; and

Whereas it is apparent to all students of economics that this condition is likely to continue in a greater or lesser degree; and

Whereas the governmental agencies have been forced to assume the responsibility which properly belongs to industry, namely, to provide work and wages for the employable workers of the Nation; and

Whereas millions of employable workers, without fault on their part, are without employment and are thereby forced to undergo the humiliating necessity of relying upon public-welfare agencies or private charities for the necessaries of life; and

Whereas any change made by one State and not joined in by all States would inflict an unfair burden upon the industry of the State making the change: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts favors the immediate enactment by Congress of suitable legislation creating a national compulsory unemployment-insurance plan providing for a fund to be made up of contributions by both employer and employee from which, in times of unemployment, worthy unemployed workers may be adequately paid for a portion, at least, of the periods of their unemployment; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded forthwith by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States and to the Presiding Officers of both branches of the Congress of the United States and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth.

Mr. METCALF presented the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Rhode Island, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Resolution of the Senate of the State of Rhode Island

Whereas the historic frigate Constellation, the oldest fighting ship afloat, has been moored at the dock of the United States Naval Training Station in Newport Harbor for upward of half a century, and has during the whole of that time been an inspiration not only to the young boys who have come here for training but also to the petty officers, warrant officers, and higher ranking officers on duty at this station or attending the classes at the United States Naval War College, as well as the officers and men of the United States Fleet who visited Newport last summer under the command of that distinguished and gallant officer, Admiral Joseph Mason Reeves; and

Whereas during the years that this ship has been in commission at its dock at the training station it has been visited by thousands of patriotic American citizens vitally interested in the welfare of our country and with all which has to do with the Navy of the present as well as the ships representing our first attempt in naval defense; and

Whereas there has been introduced in the Senate of the United States by the Honorable JESSE H. METCALF, United States Senator from the State of Rhode Island, and in the House of Representatives by the Honorable JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr., Congressman from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) for the preservation and restoration of the frigate Constellation as a national museum, and making Newport, R. I., its home port; and

Whereas there has developed an attempt upon the part of the city of Baltimore to obtain from the Secretary of the Navy and the President of the United States authority to change this home port, after the restoration of this sister ship of Old Ironsides, to a berth at Fort McHenry as a naval museum; and

Whereas this ship has for a long time past become an important part of the naval institutions and traditions in and about Newport: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the State of Rhode Island does hereby respectfully protest to the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Navy any change from the present home port of this ancient ship of war; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution, signed by his excellency, Theodore Francis Green, Governor of the State of Rhode Island, attested by the Honorable Louis W. Cappelli, secretary of state, and sealed with the seal of said State, be forwarded to the President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt; the Secretary of the Navy, Hon. Claude A. Swanson; and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, urging them to take all necessary steps to prevent any change in the home port of the Constellation, and preserve to the people of Rhode Island and New England the shrine which they have so proudly cherished for so many years.

Mr. GERRY presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Rhode Island, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

House resolution urging the Congress of the United States to secure the immediate repeal of the cotton-processing tax

Whereas the present cotton-processing tax adds an enormous burden to at least 40 percent of mill pay rolls on the mills, who cannot pass the tax along to the consumer; it adds 8 to 15 percent to the cost of inventories in times of great financial stress; it is unjust and indefensible in that it is in fact a sales tax without the virtue of universal application; it affords little relief to cotton growers, as with mills unable to continue operating under this tax less cotton is consumed; it causes the increased cost of manufactured products due to said tax to fall most heavily on those who can least afford to pay it, namely, the laboring people of this country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the State of Rhode Island urges the Congress of the United States to secure the immediate repeal of the cotton-processing tax; and be it further

Resolved, That the house of representatives congratulates United States Senator PETER G. GERRY and United States Senator JESSE H. METCALF for their part in the endeavor; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted by the recording clerk to the President of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture, and to the Rhode Island Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. GERRY also presented the following resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolution urging Congress of the United States to pass legislation restricting the importation into this country of certain textile articles

Whereas the wages paid the cotton-textile workers in the United State of America are undoubtedly the highest in the world; and

Whereas the increase in imports of cotton textiles is partially responsible for a corresponding curtailment of production here: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island respectfully requests the Congress of the United States to pass legislation which will restrict the importation into this country of any textile article from any country in a greater volume than the average annual volume of importation of that article from such country during the 5 years, 1930–34, inclusive; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he hereby is, directed to send duly certified copies of this resolution to the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. GERRY also presented the following resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Resolution requesting the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Rhode Island to use their best efforts to secure the defeat of bills H. R. 3042 and S. 1632, in its present form

Whereas that part of bill H. R. 3042 would amend section 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act so as to bring about the "destination level" theory of rate making and disturb in a fundamental manner the present satisfactory and experienced methods of setting rates; and

Whereas that part of bill S. 1632 which would establish with the Interstate Commerce Commission minimum-rate powers in connection with water carriers; and

Whereas these would place a serious transportation handicap on Rhode Island cotton manufacturers: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island respectfully requests the Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States from the State of Rhode Island to use their best efforts to secure the defeat of the said bill, H. R. 3042, and the amendment of the said bill, S. 1632, to eliminate the above provision; and be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby authorized and directed to transmit duly certified copies of this resolution to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Rhode Island.

PETITION FROM CITIZENS OF BOULDER, COLO.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, prominent citizens of Boulder, Colo., a fine and progressive community of which the University of Colorado is an important part, recently circulated a petition and held an overflow mass meeting in support of freedom of thought, speech, and press. The petition, which is signed by Attorney M. M. Rinn, of Boulder, a prominent member of the Colorado bar, and 246 other residents of that city, is submitted with the request that the body of the petition be printed in the RECORD and that the entire petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The body of the petition is as follows:

We believe the petition now being circulated in Boulder under the auspices of the Elks to be both unnecessary and dangerous. We believe real, not merely formal, freedom of speech and press to be the best safeguard against violence and force. To substitute the appeal to coercion for the appeal to intelligence is to recognize the first step toward fascism and nazi-ism. So far as crimes against government capable of precise definition are concerned, our laws appear to be now sufficient. The vague proposals of this petition appear calculated for use to suppress any liberal or progressive criticism.

Even the fear of communism professed by the circulators of this petition is clearly not justified by recent elections. A vote of 103,000 out of 40,000,000 in 1932 is not alarming; and their strength does not seem to be growing. That number in a time of wide-spread distress and despair is remarkably small. Any citizen whose memory goes back a few years will recall the witch-hunting and red-baiting campaigns of Mitchell Palmer and Harry Daugherty, Senator Lusk, and others. We are entitled to be critical of the sources of such enterprises. The promoters of such movements are not justified in claiming the sanction of democracy or patriotism or George Washington.

We hope that Americans will not be induced by hysteria to forget that our method of meeting discontent is to remedy the causes, not to repress the discontented. Liberty must include the liberty to think what men consider wrong as well as what men consider right. The costs may be alarming to some, but thoughtful friends of liberal democracy will hold the faith that the profits in the long run are vastly greater.

LABOR DISPUTES BILL

Mr. WAGNER. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a communication I have received from the Council of Shoe Manufacturers, which represents 17 large shoe manufacturers in Greater New York, favoring the so-called "Wagner disputes bill" now pending before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor.

There being no objection, the communication was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COUNCIL OF SHOE MANUFACTURERS
OF GREATER NEW YORK, INC.,
New York, April 3, 1935.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: The 17 shoe manufacturers of this association heartily approve and are in accord with the Wagner disputes bill now pending before the Senate.

We believe that the enactment of this bill will tend to eliminate the strife existing between labor and industry.

Very truly yours,

COUNCIL OF SHOE MANUFACTURERS
OF GREATER NEW YORK, INC.,
By BENJAMIN SCHWARTZ, President.

RIGHT OF ORGANIZATION BY AGRICULTURAL WORKERS

Mr. WAGNER. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a letter I have received from Mr. Norman Thomas on the subject of guaranteeing to agricultural workers the right to organize.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK CITY, April 4, 1935.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I should be very grateful if you can put this letter into the RECORD somewhere, since it is impossible for me to be heard in support of legislation guaranteeing to agricultural workers the right to organize. Such legislation is imperative.

It is a matter of plain fact that the worst conditions in the United States are the conditions among agricultural workers. They have been brought to public attention many times; for example, by the investigations of the National Child Labor Committee into the horrible conditions, especially as affecting children, in the beet-sugar fields. The complete denial of civil liberty and the reign of terror in the Imperial Valley have been the subject of investigation by Government agents. Last summer saw a protracted and heroic strike by the terribly exploited union workers in the fertile fields of Hardin County, Ohio, against their employers. These workers were organized in a Federal local of the A. F. of L. They were the victims of the usual type of oppression, which was called to public attention in the press.

However, the most conclusive proof that there must be Federal action to protect the right of agricultural workers to organize is to be found in the situation in Arkansas. In that State within the last year there has come into being an admirable union of agricultural workers, the Southern Tenant Farmers Union. It includes both white and colored members on a basis of equality. It has been incorporated under the laws of the State. Its immediate demands are entirely reasonable and its methods have been extraordinarily peaceful. Yet that union is at present holding no meetings, on advice of its counsel, who says that it cannot be protected from terroristic attacks. Armed planters have patroled the roads looking for the principal organizers of the union. The president of the union, a former rural school teacher, was driven out of the county by threats of lynching. So, too, was the vice president, a very self-respecting Negro farmer and local preacher. Members of the union have been beaten up with impunity. Some of them have been cast into jail, from which they were ultimately delivered, but only in one or two cases after they had been confined on trumped-up charges for 45 days. Meetings have been forcibly broken up. I myself was driven out of Birdsong, Ark., where we tried to hold a peaceful meeting on property belonging to a colored church. Those who drove us out were an armed mob of planters and their agents. A representative of the sheriff advised me to leave, because he said he could not give us protection. He did not want to give protection. He had earlier in the proceedings acted as a spokesman for the mob. The lawyer for the union is Mr. C. T. Carpenter, one of the outstanding lawyers of the State of Arkansas. He was waited upon by an armed mob one night in his own house. He met them at the door with a pistol in his hand. The mob left, but not without firing shots at the house. A prominent Negro member of the union was obliged to crawl out of his cabin at night when a mob fired 32 shots into it.

What these people in Arkansas are organizing against is the most outrageous exploitation in America. The plantation system of itself is damnable. It combines the worst evils of feudalism and capitalism. The overseers on the plantations go armed. I myself saw and interviewed a family which had just been dispossessed by the roadside largely because the farmer had dared to try to get justice against an overseer, who was also the keeper of the plantation commissary. This man had seduced and kidnaped the sharecropper's 14-year-old daughter. All legal action in the justice of the peace court, where it was begun, was dismissed, apparently on request by the plantation owner. The man who dared to make the complaint was later beaten up on the alleged pretext that he had stolen a couple of eggs. A few days later his family was dumped by the roadside. I could give names, dates, and other particulars.

A continuance of these conditions is preparing the way for a desperate revolt of virtual serfs. Unless the right to organize peacefully can be guaranteed, we shall have a continuance of virtual slavery until the day of revolt. The union and the exploited victims of this system have shown an amazing willingness, or, rather, a deep-seated anxiety, to avoid bloodshed. Is the Government of the United States unable to afford protection to its citizens?

I should be very glad if some committee of Congress would call before it witnesses of all the things which I have briefly summarized.

Believe me, respectfully yours,

NORMAN THOMAS.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BACHMAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1426) providing for the appointment of Harry T. Ainsworth for the purpose of establishing a permanent library at the Walter Reed General Hospital to be known as the Fred C. Ainsworth Endowment Library (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. SHEPPARD, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 59) to create a national memorial military park at and in the vicinity of Kennesaw Mountain, in the State of Georgia, and for other purposes, and it was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

FUNDS OF FEDERAL EMERGENCY RELIEF ADMINISTRATION

Mr. COUZENS. I send to the desk a resolution, which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 115), as follows:

Whereas in the appropriation acts of 1932, 1933, 1934, and 1935, in the National Industrial Recovery Act of 1933, and through allotment of funds from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, there have been placed under the administration of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration total funds as follows: Federal Emergency Relief Administration, $1,745,055,000; Civil Works Administration, $863,965,000; allotment from Reconstruction Finance Corporation, $300,000,000; and

Whereas there is no adequate information had by the Congress as to how these funds have been allotted to the various States, counties, cities, and other subdivisions, and what rules or procedure have been adopted for the expenditure of these funds: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to inquire of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration and to report to the Senate at the earliest date possible—

(a) The distribution of these funds to the several States.

(b) What data was required of the States before allotments were made to the States by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration.

(c) What cooperation or assistance was required of the several States to which appropriations or allotments were made.

(d) What funds were loaned to the several States and what agreement was demanded before the loans were made.

(e) Any other information which would give to the Congress complete information as to the methods of distribution of the funds, the amounts allotted to States, counties, cities, and other subdivisions, the assistance or cooperation required of States, counties, cities, and other subdivisions, the methods by which an accounting was made or required to be made by States, counties, cities, and other subdivisions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have the resolution lie on the table?

Mr. COUZENS. No; I ask to have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REGULATION OF CLOSED BANKS—LETTER FROM COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, on Thursday, April 4, I asked unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter from the Comptroller of the Currency with reference to certain banking situations in the State of Michigan. The Public Printer advises that the material would make two and three-fourths pages of the RECORD; and, in view of the fact that the request for printing must be made after that information is presented to the committee, therefore I renew my request for unanimous consent that the letter of the Comptroller of the Currency and the statement of Representative MCLEOD, of Michigan, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a letter from the Comptroller of the Currency to the Detroit Times in answer to an article appearing in the Detroit Free Press, and I ask that the Free Press article be printed as well.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

APRIL 3, 1935.

DETROIT TIMES,
Detroit, Mich.

GENTLEMEN: My attention has been called to an article published in the Detroit Free Press under date of March 30, 1935, written by Clifford A. Prevost and quoting extensively Representative CLARENCE J. MCLEOD. Congressman MCLEOD has so misrepresented and misstated facts and figures that the article cannot go unanswered.

It is indeed unfortunate that Mr. Prevost was led into an article which does not contain one correct paragraph. The headlines, "Congress to be asked to probe charges of political domination of 1,500 closed national banks", is not correct, and the subheading, "MCLEOD wants choice of receivers explained", is information which is available to everyone. The receivers of 939 of the 1,540 national banks now in receivership were appointed by former Republican Comptrollers of the Currency, and it is rather interesting to note that Congressman MCLEOD did not raise this question while these Comptrollers were in office, but attempts now to embarrass these former Comptrollers of the Currency with his investigation. Congressman MCLEOD is advised that two Republicans were appointed receivers in the Detroit banks—C. O. Thomas as receiver for the First National Bank of Detroit on May 11, 1933, succeeding himself as conservator, and B. C. Schram, on May 11, 1933, as receiver of the Guardian National Bank of Commerce—both appointments being made by the Acting Comptroller of the Currency, Mr. F. G. Awalt, prior to the appointment of J. F. T. O'Connor as Comptroller. Mr. Awalt was appointed Deputy Comptroller of the Currency on the recommendation of Col. J. W. McIntosh, who was then Comptroller.

Mr. Schram was appointed receiver by Hon. D. R. Crissinger, Republican Comptroller; and prior to going to Detroit had successfully served as receiver in 19 important receiverships. Mr. C. O. Thomas was first appointed receiver by Hon. Henry M. Dawes, Republican Comptroller; and prior to going to Detroit had successfully served as receiver in 24 national-bank trusts. When Mr. Thomas was assigned to the Detroit Trust an investigation was made of his record in the Bank of Pittsburgh, in Pittsburgh, Pa., and in this connection the following quotation from an article by James Sweinhart is of interest: "The manner in which a Federal receiver liquidated the slow assets of the Bank of Pittsburgh, in Pittsburgh, Pa., indicates that the fears of many Detroit merchants and manufacturers who are debtors to the First National and Guardian National Banks of Detroit, that they are to be wiped out through liquidation of the local banks, are unfounded. A survey of what went on during the liquidation of the Pittsburgh institution shows that the receiver was reasonable and fair and won the highest esteem and good will even of the debtors of the bank whose notes and mortgages he had to realize on." A salary of $14,000 per annum was fixed for each of these receivers. In August of 1934 Mr. C. O. Thomas received a flattering offer from a large financial institution and resigned as receiver after rendering a magnificent service to the depositors of Detroit. No better evidence could be offered that the salary paid Mr. Thomas was inadequate than the fact that he resigned to receive a much larger salary. Comptroller O'Connor called Mr. B. C. Schram on the telephone and asked him if he would take over the receivership of the First National Bank of Detroit and handle it together with his own receivership, as he was familiar with the Detroit situation. He was further requested to cut the salary in each trust to $8,000 per annum, making a total salary of $16,000 for handling the two institutions, and saving for the depositors $12,000 per annum in salaries of receivers. Mr. Schram agreed and has given eminent satisfaction in his work. It would have been perfectly proper for the Comptroller of the Currency to appoint some outstanding leader of Michigan at a substantial salary to succeed Mr. Thomas, but the Comptroller was interested in conserving the assets for the depositors. No better justifiable opportunity to play politics could be found. It is hoped that this is a sufficient explanation to Mr. McLEOD of the appointment of the receivers in Detroit. It is not necessary to point out that these banks were closed nearly a month before President Roosevelt took office.

The statement, therefore, by Mr. Prevost that Postmaster General James A. Farley had cooperated with Comptroller J. F. T. O'Connor to place politicians in control of closed banks is false. Mr. Farley has never made a single suggestion as to receivers in any part of the United States. Evidently Congressman McLEOD seeks to condemn the Comptroller of the Currency because he retained in office two receivers who had been appointed by Republican Comptrollers.

The article further sets forth a resolution which Congressman McLEOD advised Mr. Prevost he would introduce on Monday. The Congressman did not introduce the resolution quoted in the article but introduced an entirely different resolution. The Congressman misled Mr. Prevost in this particular. The McLeod resolution which was actually introduced does not authorize the committee "to subpena witnesses, administer oaths, and send for such papers as may be necessary to carry out the investigation herein authorized." This was the part of the proposed resolution which would possibly have justified the scare headlines. The McLeod resolution asks for information as to "the methods of selecting and appointing receivers and attorneys for closed national banks", and in answer to this, it may be said that the same policy has been followed for 70 years in the Comptroller's office, except that the present Comptroller has not removed Republicans who have been doing a good job. The resolution which Congressman McLEOD introduced reads as follows: "Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the House of Representatives the following information: The methods of selecting and appointing receivers and attorneys for closed national banks; the costs of receivers' salaries, legal and other expenses involved in the liquidation of each of the closed national banks now in process of liquidation; the amounts due depositors of each such bank at its date of closing; and the amounts paid depositors of each such bank since closing."

Much of this information Congressman McLEOD has already received, and he has never been denied any information that he has requested from the office of the Comptroller of the Currency. Congressman McLEOD would require the Comptroller to add a score or more employees to be paid out of depositors' funds in order to furnish detailed information in all of the more than 1,500 closed banks. The Comptroller has been interested in saving expenses for the depositors, while Congressman McLEOD would freely spend their money in this manner. If Congressman McLEOD would take the trouble to read the Comptroller's annual report, he would find therein accounted for: All collections by receivers, collection and offsets allowed; collections from stock assessments; amounts borrowed from the R. F. C.; dividends paid by receivers to secured and unsecured creditors; distributions by conservators, payments to secured and preferred creditors; offsets allowed and settled; disbursements for protection of assets; receivers' salaries, legal and other expenses; conservators' salaries, legal and other expenses; a table showing the status, progress, and results of liquidation of all national banks placed in hands of receivers from the date of the first national bank failure in 1865 to October 31, the end of the fiscal year in the Comptroller's office; separate tables giving dates of appointment of receivers; capital at date of organization and at date of failure; dividends paid while solvent; total deposits, bills payable, and rediscounts at date of failure; also tables showing assets at date of failure, additional assets acquired subsequent to failure; offsets allowed; disposition of all collections and dividends paid to creditors of all insolvent national banks, this information being given in detail as to each national bank. In addition to this, each receiver makes a quarterly report showing receipts and disbursements in his particular trust, and this report is posted in his bank and is available to every one of the depositors. This quarterly report is divided into four subheadings and gives the depositors the following information:

ASSETS

Assets at date of suspension.
Additional assets acquired since suspension.
Stock assessment (— percent).
Total assets to be accounted for.

Cash in hands of receiver and comptroller.
Total collections accounted for.
(Signed) ———————, Receiver.

The article further states that "O'Connor admitted Wednesday that receivership costs in the Nation are approximately 7 percent of collections." This remarkable showing, which has been approved by everyone, was twisted in the article in order to color the statement. The comptroller's office over a period of 70 years has returned to the depositors approximately 93 cents out of every dollar collected. This leaves 7 cents for the payment of receivers' salaries, legal fees, rent, and all other items of overhead. In the two Detroit receiverships the expenses were less than 2 cents of each dollar collected. No other system of liquidation can compare with this record.

The article then goes on to state that Congressman McLEOD has been collecting data on receiverships with a view to taking the receiverships away from the Comptroller of the Currency and turning them over to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and follows with figures regarding the Bain banks in Chicago, with particular reference to receivers' salaries and attorneys' fees for these banks. Again Mr. McLEOD leads Mr. Prevost into a serious error, as he does not point out that the Bain banks were State banks and not under the jurisdiction of the Comptroller of the Currency nor under the supervision of the Federal Government. Just how the Congressman is going to turn over State receiverships of all State banks in the State of Michigan and in all other States to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is not explained.

Not satisfied with giving misinformation, Congressman McLEOD then resorts to rumors, and says he has heard a rumor that the attorneys' fees in the two large banks in Detroit have run as high as $250,000 each, which would be half a million dollars for both, and then gives this as the reason for abandoning the "rigid policy of secrecy." From the facts already given, it would seem that there was very little secrecy about the facts, and the positively false rumor was never inquired into by Congressman McLEOD, but was given free circulation. The Comptroller stated to the two Congressmen from Michigan on the House Banking and Currency Committee that he would furnish the information with reference to attorneys' fees and that the Congressmen were at liberty to make any use of the information that they saw fit. This will be done.

Congressman McLEOD is quoted as saying that receivers are public servants, paid from funds of the depositors. This is as nearly accurate a statement as anyone who knows the Congressman would expect him to make. The Congressman is quoted further as saying that both depositors and the public have every right to know for what purpose their money is being expended. None of the public's money is being expended, yet the Congressman advises that the public is entitled to know for what purpose its money is being spent.

The Congressman advises that the reason for his desire to have receiverships turned over to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is because that Board is bipartisan, whereas the Comptroller is appointed by the President. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is a large creditor in most of the receivership banks, and Congressman McLEOD would place the Corporation in the embarrassing position of being a trustee for the other creditors, and in some instances the Corporation might be compelled to bring action against itself. The Congressman has suddenly discovered that after 70 years the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency is a partisan office, and yet its policies have not changed in the 70-year period.

Again the Congressman misleads Mr. Prevost when he says "as a result of the threat of Representative PRENTISS M. BROWN to offer an amendment to the administration's banking bill calling for publicity for all receiverships, O'Connor has agreed to make public within a week or 10 days the fees being paid to attorneys for the First National Bank and the Guardian National Bank of Commerce." This is positively a false statement, as Congressman BROWN never made such a suggestion, and, therefore, it could not have been turned into a "threat." The statement regarding Congressman BROWN'S estimate of legal fees is also incorrect, and the statement "O'Connor did not deny that legal fees for this receivership have approximated that sum" is incorrect, as the Comptroller advised the committee that he would give the Congressman the facts.

The Congressman has again misled Mr. Prevost when he says that "fees to lawyers and others chosen by the Comptroller, usually with the advice of Farley and State Democratic national committeemen, for the jobs" have had no publicity. Mr. Farley has never made the slightest suggestion as to the fees of any appointee of the Comptroller's Office. The misleading statement by the Congressman, therefore, is positively vicious.

Congressman McLEOD further misled Mr. Prevost when he said: "In agreeing to disclose the figures for the two banks at Detroit, O'Connor was attempting a compromise to prevent enactment of legislation." No one suggested any legislation; therefore this statement is false.

Congressman McLEOD further failed to state that he obtained the appointment of his law firm, McLeod, Fixel, Abbott & Fixel, of Detroit, Mich., as attorneys for the receivers of the Lincoln Park National Bank, of Lincoln Park, Mich., the Inkster National Bank, of Inkster, Mich., and the First National Bank of Dearborn, Mich. His firm has received up to December 31, 1934, $11,924 and the firm is still acting as attorney for the receivers in these three banks. Congressman McLEOD received these appointments from former Republican Comptrollers of the Currency and his firm has not been removed or disturbed in their work by the present Comptroller of the Currency, notwithstanding the Congressman's unfair criticism of the Comptroller and his receivers during the past 2 years. Frankly, could anything be more nonpartisan than this? Congressman McLEOD had his firm appointed because of his Republican standing, and he now questions the right of any Democratic firm to be appointed in exactly the same manner.

It is indeed unfortunate that public officials attempt to make capital out of the sufferings and distress of our people. If the article was intended by Mr. McLEOD to further unrest and to give encouragement to those who would destroy all forms of representative government, it will in a measure serve that purpose. Newspapermen must naturally get their information from public officials and now and then are entirely misled by them.

Sincerely yours,

J. F. T. O'CONNOR, Comptroller.

CONGRESS TO BE ASKED TO PROBE CHARGES OF POLITICAL DOMINATION OF 1,500 CLOSED NATIONAL BANKS—McLEOD WANTS CHOICE OF RECEIVERS EXPLAINED—WILL DEMAND BARING OF ATTORNEYS' FEES AND SEEK POWER TO SUBPENA WITNESSES

By Clifford A. Prevost

WASHINGTON, March 29.—A Congressional investigation of the method of selecting receivers and attorneys for closed national banks will be demanded in a resolution to be introduced Monday in the House of Representatives.

Announcement that a probe will be demanded of the alleged political domination of more than 1,500 closed national banks was made today by Representative CLARENCE J. McLEOD, of Detroit. It will be the first demand in the last 20 years for an investigation of the office of the Comptroller of the Currency.

The decision to demand the investigation was reached today, because of disclosures that Postmaster General James A. Farley, patronage distributor for the administration, had cooperated with J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller, to place politicians in control of closed banks.

The resolution which McLEOD will introduce in the House Monday reads:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to inquire into the methods of selecting and appointing receivers and attorneys, and into costs of receivers' salaries, legal and other expenses involved in the liquidation of the closed national banks now in process of liquidation, and to report to the House such information relating to the selection and appointment of receivers and attorneys and the sums so paid as receivers' salaries, legal and other expenses incurred in the liquidation of each such bank, together with the amounts due depositors at the dates of closing of each such bank, the amounts paid depositors of each such bank and an estimate of the total sum yet to be expended for liquidation expenses of such banks; and said committee shall have the power to subpena witnesses, administer oaths, and send for such papers as may be necessary to carry out the investigation herein authorized."

O'CONNOR ADMITS COSTS

O'Connor admitted Wednesday that receivership costs in the Nation are approximately 7 percent of collections.

McLEOD said today that the latest estimates of impounded deposits in the national banks under O'Connor's jurisdiction is $800,000,000; and that based upon O'Connor's figures of costs, this would mean that $56,000,000 would go for fees to political appointees.

McLEOD has been gathering data from a score of cities on what is being done through receiverships. He is assembling this data to support his bank pay-off bill, which would take the receiverships away from the Comptroller and turn them over to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The Michigan Representative cited today the figures for the closed Bain banks in Chicago. These were as follows:

Pay rolls and miscellaneous liquidating expenses of receiver. $461,973.35.

Attorneys' fees, $176,000.

Receiver's salary, $108,421.81.

The total cost of this receivership was $746,395.16.

While these expenses were being paid for the receivership, the depositors of the Bain banks were receiving $201,942.70. The liquidation has been proceeding since June 9, 1931.

EMPHASIZE NECESSITY

"The recent rumors that attorneys' fees in liquidating the assets of the two large Detroit banks run as high as $250,000 each serve to emphasize the necessity for abandoning the rigid policy of secrecy which is withholding essential information from depositors and the general public", McLEOD said.

"These receivers and all other liquidating officers are public servants and are paid from the funds of the depositors", he said. "Under these circumstances both the depositors and the public have every right to know for what purpose their money is being expended."

McLEOD said that the opposition to turning over the receiverships to the R. F. C. was purely political. The R. F. C. Board is a bipartisan board, whereas the Comptroller of the Currency is strictly a product of party politics. O'Connor, because of the national banking holiday, has made more political plums to disburse than any other Federal official. He is a close henchman of Farley.

WILL REVEAL FEES

As a result of the threat of Representative PRENTISS M. BROWN to offer an amendment to the administration's banking bill calling for publicity for all receiverships, O'Connor has agreed to make public within a week or 10 days the fees being paid to attorneys for the First National Bank and the Guardian Bank of Commerce. McLEOD'S move today would force publicity for all closed banks.

BROWN told the Banking and Currency Committee that the legal fees for Judge Frank E. Wood, attorney for the receiver of the Guardian National Bank of Commerce, had been $250,000. BROWN said that the information regarding this fee had come to him from a reliable source. O'Connor did not deny that legal fees for this receivership has approximated that sum.

Up to the present time there has been no publicity attendant upon the payment of fees to lawyers and others chosen by the Comptroller, usually with the advice of Farley and the State Democratic National committeemen, for the jobs. In agreeing to disclose the figures for the two banks at Detroit, O'Connor was attempting a compromise to prevent enactment of legislation.

McLEOD'S resolution will come under the classification of "preferential legislation. This means that the Banking Committee must report the resolution back within a week.

BACK-TO-THE-FARM MOVEMENT IN VERMONT

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, the agricultural census of Vermont farms has been completed. It reveals a healthy back-to-the-farm movement in that State. The report shows 2,238 more occupied farms than in 1930, an increase of about 9 percent.

I ask unanimous consent that a newspaper clipping showing the tabulation, county by county, may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the clipping was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

2,238 MORE FARMS IN STATE THAN 5 YEARS AGO, CENSUS SHOWS

RUTLAND, April 4.—Vermont has 2,238 more occupied farms at present than in 1930, Merrill E. Creed, agricultural census director for the State, revealed last night as the work of tabulating the figures gathered by 149 canvassers over a period of 3 months was completed.

The office at room 408 in the Federal building, which Creed and his assistants have been occupying, was closed last night.

The total number of farms consisting of 3 or more acres of tilled land at present is 27,138 in comparison with 24,898 in 1930. The increase, the enumerators believe, is due to a back-to-the-soil movement resulting from the fact that jobs are hard to find in the larger centers and many owners of small farms are again occupying rural premises which they had left when working conditions in the cities were better.

In all except 2 of the 14 counties of the State, Lamoille and Washington, an increase in the number of farms since the last enumeration was made 5 years ago was shown.

Windsor County showed the largest increase in the 5 years, 650. This area and also Windham County, in which there was a gain of 250, and Bennington County, in which the increase was 317, are popular with city people, many of whom have bought abandoned farms for summer homes. In many instances these summer people carry on farming on a small scale and a few operate farms of considerable extent.

A canvass of Rutland County showed 329 more occupied farms than when the last Government count was made.

A comparison of the returns made by the enumerators in 1935 and 1930, by counties, is as follows:

County	1935	1930
Addison	2,208	2,023
Bennington	1,267	950
Caledonia	2,242	2,035
Chittenden	1,936	1,841
Franklin	2,344	2,303
Essex	659	572
Grand Isle	476	431
Lamoille	1,321	1,424
Rutland	2,480	2,151
Orleans	2,393	2,337
Orange	2,461	2,293
Washington	2,148	2,173
Windham	1,915	1,665
Windsor	3,286	2,639
Total	27,136	24,893

STABILIZATION OF COAL INDUSTRY

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Washington Daily News of today, relating to the bituminous-coal industry, and to the bill introduced by me.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News, Apr. 8, 1935]

CHAOS IN COAL

In the Guffey bituminous-coal bill Congress has a rational project for stabilization of one of America's sickest industries.

This measure is a permanent and comprehensive version of the Coal Code. It carries out President Roosevelt's demand for Government supervision over natural resources in behalf of conservation, stabilization, and elimination of "ruinous price cutting and inordinate profits." It approaches the new industrial ideal of partnership between owners, workers, and Government.

The Guffey bill would put the soft-coal industry under a national commission, named by the President, with the consent of the Senate. This body would estimate the national tonnage needed and then apportion production among 21 regional districts. It would fix standard hours and wages and minimum and maximum prices. It would bulwark the workers' right to bargain collectively, select their own checkweighmen, live in other than company houses, buy in other than company stores. A coal labor board would mediate disputes.

Owners are encouraged to participate by the provision for a 25-percent tax on mined coal, all but 1 percent of which would be remitted to cooperating concerns.

An essential feature of the bill is the creation of a huge fund raised through a production tax for Government purchase of coal lands forced out of production and for rehabilitating miners thrown out of their jobs through stabilization.

This bill is not perfect. The Government, we believe, should have more power in carrying out production control. The public interest should be guarded by consumer representation on the Commission. The Commission also should have power to impose mine-safety standards. And eventually coal's competing fuels should come under the same sort of regulation.

The measure's greatest danger lies in its invitation to higher coal prices and its temptation to profiteering. Coal men, however, should not need to be reminded that theirs is not a monopolistic industry. Any undue rise in coal prices will drive consumers to the use of oil, gas, and electricity.

Today coal spells chaos in this country with its mines capable of turning out 100 percent more than the Nation can consume. Some such measure as this is needed to prevent ruin for the operator and destitution for the miner.

POLICIES OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR DICKINSON

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] at a State conference of Republicans at Roanoke, Va., on the 6th instant.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE DEMOCRATIC DONKEY AIN'T WHAT HE USED TO BE

The Democratic donkey has a bad case of social indigestion. How long will it take this donkey to learn that new diets often cause internal disorders; that untried methods cause uncertainty; that habits should not be a subject of sudden change; that experimentations are a matter of great risk and produce grave doubt?

The shortcomings of the new deal recovery plans can no longer be charged to the "brain trust." The members of the present Cabinet were selected by the President personally. There have been no appointees placed in key positions in any of the emergency organizations without the personal sanction of the President. There is only one place to fix the responsibility, and that is on the doorstep of the White House.

How much longer can it be denied that every move now being made results in nothing but more confusion and more disaster? It was so with gold muddling; it is so with the agricultural policy, with the banking program, with the brokerage, with labor, with foreign trade, and with relief policies.

How long will it take before the American people realize that we cannot buy our way with borrowed money; that we cannot tax or inflate our return to prosperity?

It cannot be denied that every detail of our social and business position in this country is worse now than it was in the beginning of 1933. Unemployment has not been relieved; industry is still paralyzed; banks are refusing to make loans to responsible individuals. The Government has entered into a program of inflation where every householder feels the grip of rising prices, with a diminishing value of his salary or his income. Money, Treasury notes, insurance policies, stocks, and bonds have all lost their value as securities. Can anyone doubt that as a whole the sky is growing darker and no man knows what the weather will be tomorrow?

Regardless of all this, the President continues to insist that his power be expanded, and that he be granted discretionary authority to expend $4,880,000,000—more money than any one man can efficiently spend, and more money than any American citizen should ask the authority to control.

Cannot the American people now see that reform is not recovery; that experimentation is not realization; that promises are not performances; and that the whole new deal is largely a grand and glorious exhibition of shadow-boxing with panaceas and pretenses?

STATE RIGHTS

The State of Virginia was developed by the fortitude and efforts of your own people and without direction from the Federal Government. The history of this State is a record of which you can be justly proud. By the initiative of her people Virginia will continue to advance and exceed its former greatness.

Prior to this administration legislation has never been proposed eliminating State rights and obliterating State boundary lines.

John Marshall once said:

"No political dreamer would ever be wild enough to think of breaking down the lines which separate the States and of compounding the American people into one common mass."

On March 3, 1930, President Roosevelt, then Governor of New York, stated that the governing rights of the States are all of those which have not been surrendered by the Constitution or its amendments, and cited that under the eighteenth amendment Congress was given the right to legislate on that particular issue involving State rights. He then continued:

"* * * But this is not the case in the matter of a great number of other vital problems of government, such as the conduct of public utilities, of banks, of insurance, of business, of agriculture, of education, of social welfare, and of a dozen other important features. In these Washington must not be encouraged to interfere."

PUBLIC UTILITIES

Regardless of the views of President Roosevelt in 1930 that the Government should not interfere, what is taking place in the public-utility field of the United States?

In the first place, the Tennessee Valley Authority is entering into direct competition with every public-utility company in that area. This is the greatest social experiment ever attempted by the Federal Government.

Why has it become necessary for the Federal Government to assume the right to set the rate on electric current in a municipality in the State of Virginia or Tennessee or Mississippi? Who should challenge the authority of the public utilities commissions of these respective States to fix rates protective of the rights of their own people? Who should assume the authority to charge to the Federal taxpayer the possible loss on a great social experiment in the production of electric current for distribution and use?

In the second place, the Rayburn-Wheeler bill for the control of public-utility holding companies, if passed in its present form, will immediately wipe out every utility holding company in America. The net effect will be to destroy the investments in the securities of those companies, amounting to billions of dollars. If these companies are compelled to dissolve, there will be no market where the securities can possibly be sold, and there will be dumped upon an unbuying public a mass of securities which cannot be absorbed.

No one denies that there have been some abuses in the development of public utilities; but shall we interfere with the rights of millions of stockholders in order to punish a few careless promoters?

CONTROL OF BUSINESS

Let me again call your attention to the speech by Mr. Roosevelt, as Governor of New York, before the National Democratic Club in New York City in 1930, wherein he emphasized the fact that the Federal Government should not interfere with business.

In spite of his conviction at that date business has been subjected to the most severe strain of Government interference under the National Recovery Act ever known.

What is now happening to the "Blue Eagle"? After a hectic career of 2 years, and facing a period when it should expire by limitation, the "Blue Eagle"—better known as the "blue buzzard"—is asking a new lease on life. In the proposed extension of this law none of the defects of the present act are eliminated.

The new bill fails to cure the vicious policy of delegating legislative power to the President. It retains the authority of the President to nullify the rights of the States over intra-State commerce. It carries the nullification of the antitrust laws, and permits price fixing and production control, the oppression of small enterprises and bureaucratic rule over business.

The effects of the N. R. A. do not need to be reiterated to this audience. Big business units have written the codes; small business units have been suppressed, monopoly has been encouraged, individual initiative discouraged. No business revival can be hoped for so long as business must continue in such a straitjacket.

AGRICULTURE

We were also told in 1930 by Mr. Roosevelt:

"The doctrine of regulation and legislation by 'master minds', in whose judgment and will all the people may gladly and quietly acquiesce, has been too glaringly apparent at Washington during these last 10 years."

Yet, under the system of national planning being carried out by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, the farming interests of this country are controlled by regulations of bureau chiefs. Production is to be balanced with consumption; acreage is allotted, benefit payments are granted, and the farmer is paid rental for permitting his land to grow up in weeds, while the hungry are still hungry and the naked are in need of clothes.

Let me quote from a short poem on the more abundant life of the new deal:

"We lessen the supply of bread and meat
And those who have little, have less to eat;
Both State and Nation tax this supply,
So smaller the portion the poor can buy.

Hence less food we need, and less we grow,
The abundant life in reverse you know!
May God forgive poor stumbling man
Who muddles so His abundant plan."

By a bureaucrat in Washington you are told how much cotton you may plant, how much tobacco you may produce, how much corn you may raise, how many pigs should be farrowed, and how many cattle you may sell. What "master mind" possesseth all this wisdom?

After 2 years of obeying the orders of A. A. A. officials in the acreage-control program, the rice growers find themselves in distress and ask the Federal Government to come to their relief. Congress has just passed legislation authorizing the payment of $2,250,000 out of the Federal Treasury as a direct subsidy to rice growers.

We also find that the processing tax has resulted in the cotton producer losing his export market as well as his domestic market for the only thing he has to sell—cotton. Because of the high price in this country our cotton exports have declined and we are losing an export trade that will be hard to regain.

Also by reason of the increase in the price of cotton in this country the domestic textile mills are no longer able to compete with foreign competitors. Because of the allotment contracts, the additional cost of the processing tax and the labor codes in the factory, cotton mills are gradually being forced into bankruptcy or liquidation. All of this is contributable to interference from Washington by the "master minds."

NATIONAL ECONOMIC COUNCIL

There is now being proposed by the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, a National Economic Council, to be appointed by the President, the members of which are to have the right to consider and recommend economic laws. It is suggested by Secretary Wallace that these laws shall be submitted by referendum to the people, and if approved, the Supreme Court cannot hold them unconstitutional.

Here we have a suggestion from a member of the Cabinet that Congress shall be relieved of passing Federal legislation; that the judiciary shall be relieved of reviewing it. All authority will be placed in this council; and, upon approval of referendum, their findings will become the law of the land. Such a suggestion is repugnant to the American system of government.

What Secretary Wallace really means is that constitutional safeguards should be abolished so far as they tend to hamper the experiments under the new deal.

The American Constitution was designed to prevent just such a procedure. Congress was given power to enact legislation.

No emergency should permit Congress to go beyond the safeguards of the Constitution. The fundamental rights of the people are jealously guarded by this sacred document. These rights include the whole range of personal and political liberties. Such liberties are the very foundation of democracy.

It was the belief of the founders that our fundamental law should not be altered in accordance with every wave of popular enthusiasm—with every whim and prejudice or passion that might be stirred by effective demagogues. That is why the Constitution was built as a framework, within which the will of the people should act, subject to specific limitations, these limitations to be interpreted by the Court.

The suggestion made by Secretary Wallace would destroy this framework.

It is a direct attack upon the fundamental soundness of our system of government. When we forsake American fundamentals, there is no hope for stability in the future.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Again let me quote from the speech by Mr. Roosevelt:

"* * * it was clear to the framers of our Constitution that the greatest possible liberty of self-government must be given to each State, and that any national administration attempting to make all laws for the whole Nation * * * would inevitably result * * * in a dissolution of the Union itself."

Regardless of this statement of policy by Mr. Roosevelt as Governor, under the public-works and relief programs, the wise men in Washington are now forwarding to the legislatures of the States legislation which they insist must be passed before the States can share in the distribution of Federal money.

This legislation permits States to construct public buildings, to engage in the erection and operation of public-utility plants, and enter other forms of endeavor which are clearly matters of local control and should not be subjected to interference from Washington.

The administration has just spent $3,300,000,000 on a public-works program. Much of the money has been wasted. Much of it has been put into public buildings the maintenance of which will be an expense on the locality and the taxpayers of that locality for years to come. This is direct interference with local matters by the wise men of Washingon.

FARM AND HOME REFINANCING

Much has been said about saving the farm homes of the country by Government refinancing of farm mortgages. What really has taken place? There has not been a material reduction in the amount of the loans that the farmer has to pay. We find that his burden is as heavy as it was before. On the other hand, the insurance companies have been able to transfer their poorest loans from their files to the Federal Land Bank System, and the farmer still has a second mortgage on his farm given to the Commercial Credit Corporation. As a matter of fact, the refinancing of farm mortgages has been largely for the benefit of the insurance companies.

With reference to saving homes, what has taken place? The large guaranty and mortgage companies have been saved. The home owner still has the loan against his home. In most instances the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has simply taken from the files of the mortgage companies their poorest loans and put them in the Government files.

The Federal Government, by extending and expanding these nonprofitable expenditures, many of which will never be repaid, can expect no results other than emphasized and exaggerated distress.

CAMPAIGN PLEDGES

In reviewing the Democratic pledges made in the campaign of 1932 we find that Roosevelt the candidate does not agree with Roosevelt the President. During the campaign Candidate Roosevelt pledged a program of economy in government. He stated:

"I shall approach the problem of carrying out the plain precept of our party, which is to reduce the cost of the current Federal Government operations by 25 percent.

"The people of America demand a reduction of Federal expenditures * * * it can be done by abolishing many useless commissions, bureaus, and functions, and * * * by consolidating many activities of the Government."

Two and a half years after this pledge was made to the American people what is the situation in the Government? No war-time period has ever seen the expansion of Government functions as has been permitted under the Roosevelt administration. One hundred and twenty thousand additional employees have been added to the pay rolls; Government bureaus have been multiplied manyfold.

In criticizing the method of the past administration for financing the Government deficit, Candidate Roosevelt said: "* * * our Government simply absorbed that much of the lending capacity of banks and by so much impaired the credit available for business."

In the year to which he referred the total amount of Government obligations held by banks was $7,300,000,000. Today, according to the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the distinguished senior Senator from this State, the amount is $15,348,000,000. As a matter of fact, our banks are now only rediscount agencies for Government securities.

In 1932 Candidate Roosevelt warned that an accumulated deficit of $5,000,000,000 would be a menace to the stability of the Government and an "insuperable bar to recovery." Yet, with the passage of the $5,000,000,000 work-relief bill, the accumulated deficit will be $14,000,000,000, and we are told that this will restore prosperity in a year. And the governor of the Federal Reserve Board blithely tells a House Committee that he has no fear of a 40-billion dollar debt.

By a direct quotation from a speech by Candidate Roosevelt, I shall cite just where the present spending program is leading us. I quote:

"Now, the credit of the family depends chiefly on whether that family is living within its income. And this is so of the Nation. If the Nation is living within its income, its credit is good. * * * But if, like a spendthrift, it throws discretion to the winds, is willing to make no sacrifice at all in spending, * * * and continues to pile up deficits, it is on the road to bankruptcy."

Verily, Candidate Roosevelt is a total stranger to President Roosevelt.

These illustrations show the trend under the present Democratic administration. This philosophy of Government is entirely different from that of Thomas Jefferson. These developments entirely reverse the Democratic policies of Grover Cleveland. Even under war conditions, Woodrow Wilson never sought the authority over the affairs of Government that is vested in President Roosevelt. Beyond doubt, the Democratic donkey ain't what he used to be.

REPUBLICAN RESPONSIBILITY

But what is the responsibility of the Republican Party? The duty of the Republican Party is apparent. The collapse that will follow the present course should be pointed out. It is the duty of Republicans everywhere to become adamant. Our organizations should meet oftener. We should expand our influences. We should contact the press. We should make our views known. Our opposition must become more vocal. The theory that we should sit supinely by and permit a continuation of the present course is wrong. It is the duty of every Republican to assume his or her share of this opposition.

The Democratic administration is doing so many things that should not be done, and failing to do so many things that should be done, that the program of the Republican Party will have to be adjusted accordingly. No mechanic knows the parts or the tools required to repair an auto when it is running over a cliff. He must wait until it lands, and then examine the wreck.

It is the belief of the Republican Party that, instead of chasing rainbows, instead of following panaceas, instead of attempting shortcut economic remedies, individuals must steel themselves to meet conditions they are compelled to face. It is for business to readjust itself to where it can survive under existing conditions. No other cure will be long effective.

The Republican Party deplores the revolutionary changes that are being brought about in our governmental structure. These changes have to do with basic fundamentals and are inconsistent with the thought and habits of the American people. When it is suggested that an economic council can take the place of Congress so far as legislation is concerned; when it is suggested that our courts can be subrogated by referendum to the people, then we realize that the changes are basic.

The Republican Party believes that Congress should again assume its legislative authority; that government by Executive orders should terminate; that a system of sane taxation that will protect all interests and punish none should be invoked; that a program to balance the Federal budget should be formulated. It is only by living within our income and spending less than we make that the Government can hope to survive. Thrift must take the place of extravagance.

The Republican Party is opposed to the use of funds from the Federal Treasury for campaign purposes. Time and time again during the last campaign, those on relief or receiving Government aid were admonished by those in charge that if they voted the Republican ticket, all relief would be withdrawn.

The Democratic Party is proposing to regulate everything through a bureau in Washington. This program is corrupting to free institutions. The Republican Party believes that things should regulate themselves by conflict of interests between free men.

The Republican Party is not ready to concede that for 300 years we have been wrong in aiming at a fuller realization of individual liberties and individual rights. We are not ready to confess that we should turn back to paternalism, to bureaucratic control, and to Executive orders.

The Republican Party is opposed to monopoly and the trend under the present National Recovery Act permitting business men to formulate monopolies and raise prices and drive out small competitors—all at the expense of the consuming public. The Republican Party is opposed to the extension of the N. R. A.

CONCLUSION

When the spending spree is ended, when crystal gazing ceases to be attractive, when it is found that most panaceas are a myth, then the ideals of the Republican Party, its constructive policies, its dependable leadership will again be in favor.

When the weaknesses of the program of the present administration are exposed it will be an easy matter to suggest a substitute program. Such a program should include a return to fundamentals—not to the old order, but to a revised new order that recognizes the danger signs of the past.

Behind a program of this kind the Republican Party can be united. In a program of this kind the country will take new hope. An effective program formulated along these lines will be attractive to the voters in the future. The next choice in America will be at the ballot box.

The new-deal experimentations have caused uncertainty in the minds of all. Only by free and open discussion through Republican organizations can the true facts become known. The Republican organizations of the State of Virginia are to be complimented for their interest and activity along these lines.

"Awake, America, shake off your sloth and rise!
Reclaim your freedom before the last spark dies.
Remember your heritage, prized through all the years,
Won by your fathers' blood, blessed by your mothers' tears."

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOODS, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein, to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

The amendment offered by Mr. BAILEY is as follows:

In section 711 (a), on page 45, line 7, it is proposed to insert a colon after the word "found" and to add the following:

"Provided, however, That not more than one seizure action shall be instituted in cases of alleged misbranding, except upon order to show cause, and then upon a showing by the Secretary that such article is misbranded in manner or degree as to render such article imminently dangerous to health, or that such alleged misbranding has been the basis of a prior judgment in favor of the United States in a criminal prosecution or libel for condemnation proceeding respecting such article under this act: And Provided further, That said single seizure action shall, on motion, be removed for trial to a jurisdiction of reasonable proximity to the residence of the claimant of such article."

In section 401 (a) (1), on page 13, it is proposed to strike out all of lines 19 and 20.

In section 402, on page 16, it is proposed to insert a new subsection between lines 2 and 3, to be designated as (b), and to read as follows:

"If it is dangerous to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising thereof."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I desire only to explain the amendment. There appear to be three amendments, but, in fact, they are one, as the three accomplish one purpose.

The first amendment simply strikes out lines 19 and 20 on page 13 and inserts the same lines in the bill on page 16 between lines 2 and 3. The lines referred to read as follows:

If it is dangerous to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising thereof.

The effect, Mr. President, is to transpose that portion of the bill relating to labeling and advertising from the adulteration section to the misbranding section which, I take it, is perfectly proper and which the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has agreed is not improper.

In connection with the transfer, the third amendment in the group inserts a new section in the misbranding clause, which reads as follows:

On page 45, line 7, after the word "found", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, however, That not more than one seizure action shall be instituted in cases of alleged misbranding, except upon order to show cause, and then upon a showing by the Secretary that such article is misbranded in manner or degree as to render such article imminently dangerous to health, or that such alleged misbranding has been the basis of a prior judgment in favor of the United States in a criminal prosecution or libel for condemnation proceeding respecting such article under this act: And provided further, That said single seizure action shall, on motion, be removed for trial to a jurisdiction of reasonable proximity to the residence of the claimant of such article."

Mr. President, I do not intend to speak at length, because I have already spoken on the subject. All I wish to point out is that the amendment has simply the effect of allowing one seizure in any case of alleged misbranding and allowing also multiple seizures upon an order to show cause. That is wholly for the purpose of giving the producer or manufacturer of an article, which is advertised or misbranded in a way that the Department of Agriculture might condemn as dangerous to health, an opportunity to be heard. I take it that is wholly in accord with all historic precedents of due process of law. Upon a hearing to show cause and upon a hearing and showing that such article is misbranded in such degree as to be dangerous to health, there may be the multiple seizure.

What is the trouble about the multiple seizure? The multiple seizure of these goods is a seizure throughout the United States. The Department of Agriculture can find the facts and, upon that finding, go into every drug store in the United States, in every State in the Union, and of its own motion and upon its own findings and without a hearing, seize the goods of a producer to such an extent as will destory his business forever, and he never have had a hearing.

The amendment provides a hearing. I think for some 400 or 500 years the English-speaking people, at any rate, have proceeded upon the theory that no man may be deprived of his life or his liberty or property—and that means no man's business may be destroyed—without due process of law. Due process of law always means a hearing.

I wish now to reply for a moment to my honored friend the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds to another point, may I ask him a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Referring to the power for multiple seizures, would not the same principle apply also to the proceedings under section 304? Would it not include not only drugs but food?

Mr. BAILEY. This provision is in the misbranding section and would apply only to misbranding or misadvertising, if I may use the word, of drugs. It relates to drugs, but is in the misbranding section.

Mr. BORAH. Yes, I understand; but I am wondering what we shall do under section 304 if the Agricultural Department shall not be satisfied with the ingredients which the fruit grower may use in spraying.

Mr. BAILEY. Section 304 relates to foods, and it relates, I may say to the senior Senator from Idaho, to the adulteration aspects of the measure.

Mr. BORAH. Suppose a fruit grower should spray his fruit with a substance which the Department of Agriculture thought was injurious to health?

Mr. BAILEY. Then, under the terms of the bill they could put him out of business.

Mr. COPELAND. That is not a complete answer.

Mr. BORAH. The difficulty with section 304 in connection with the subject the Senator is discussing is that there is no rule or guide by which the fruit grower may be governed in spraying fruits. There was under the old law, under which he knew what he could do. Under the bill he is subjected wholly to rules and regulations which may be issued.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not think my amendment cures that defect as my amendment relates to the misbranding and misadvertising of what we call "drugs."

I wish to reply very briefly to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. I heard him on Friday afternoon make a great protest here about patent medicines and he made a statement about there being representatives of patent medicines in the galleries. I have nothing to do with that. I think that has nothing to do with the merits of the bill. As I understand it, the patent-medicine idea passed out of the country 25 or 30 years ago. We now have what we call proprietary articles, and of those there are two types.

One set of them is sold by way of advertising to the physicians and are called "ethical articles." The manufacturers simply send their circulars or their traveling representatives to the offices of the doctors and persuade the doctors that their products are good articles for the doctors to prescribe.

Then there is another set which is advertised in the papers and advertised over the radio. While I should not like to be personal, these products are not held in any disgrace because they are advertised over the radio. They are still proprietary articles. I think the senior Senator from New York will agree that even himself has spoken favorably of these radio-advertised or newspaper-advertised articles, such as Fleischmann's yeast or Phillips' milk of magnesia or Bayer's aspirin. My point is that they take on no obloquy and nothing of the word "vile", which the senior Senator from New York used, by reason of the fact they are advertised in magazines.

It happened that last evening I picked up a magazine called "Time" and found therein an advertisement of Phillips' milk of magnesia and one or two other products. Here is my point. If the man who produces Phillips' milk of magnesia happens to be so unfortunate as to publish an advertisement which the Department here may condemn, every bottle of his goods throughout the United States may be seized and the whole business disgraced overnight. That is not right. A perfectly innocent article, so far as I know, might be treated in that way. I do not profess to know anything about these matters, but my point is that the fact that one is advertised to the physicians and the other is advertised to the public does not justify the use of the word "vile" with respect to the one which is advertised to the public.

The fact that there are articles of curative, or professed curative value, produced in America which may not be what we should like them to be, does not justify a course of action which enables the Department of Agriculture of its own motion, and arbitrarily, to take action which will destroy the business of an innocent man.

We still live in America. This is the United States. This is a republic, and it is dedicated to freedom. Its hope of recovery still lies in freedom and the revival of private enterprise. If it were a monarchy, if the doctrines of freedom had never obtained here, or if the arbitrary power of the executive department of the Government were relied on here as it is in other countries, we might be careless about this matter; but America never can be careless about the rights of its citizens. My amendment provides that when any man is called in question concerning a product that he may have advertised the Department of Agriculture, having satisfied themselves or suspected that it is injurious to health, may seize one of his articles. Having seized that they issue upon him an order to show cause; they give him a day in court in order that he may be heard as to his rights, and in order that this Government may not be an arbitrary government, but a free government.

The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] said that if this amendment should be adopted, and also if we should adopt another amendment referring this advertising to the Federal Trade Commission, he would lose all interest in the proposed legislation. That, I agree, would be a lamentable thing; but what is the justification for the statement, and how does it affect the substance of this matter? How does it relate to the merits of this matter? That is not an argument as to the rights of men, but as to the predilections of the senior Senator from New York. Why should a man lose interest in this proposed legislation, why should one be disposed to condemn the whole program of improvement in the law contemplated here, merely because we give the American citizen a day in court, merely because we leave the advertising features of this bill to the Federal Trade Commission, which has had charge of advertising from its beginning?

I do not see that it follows. I do not see any injustice in the proposal I have incorporated in this amendment. I think it would improve the bill and put it on a firm and just foundation. I cannot see how it would harm anybody.

Let us assume that the Department does find a vile proprietary article. All it has to do is to make one seizure, issue its notice to show cause, and, after the producer of that vile article has had his hearing and his day, proceed to seize in multiple seizures and protect the public.

Take the other side. Assume that the man at the head of the Department of Agriculture makes a mistake, has a misconception as to the effect of the advertising, and that the article itself is not what he conceives it to be, then with one stroke of his hand he can destroy a great business.

Now, let us take, finally, the other view. We are going to decide here whether American citizens shall be compelled to submit their advertising to the Department of Agriculture before they place it in the newspapers of the country. That is going a bowshot farther than we have attempted to do at this session, at any rate. Imagine the situation of the man preparing his advertising and having to make new advertising from day to day being compelled, by the fear that some arbitrary officer may conceive his advertising to be injurious to health, either to go to the Department and have the advertising passed upon and approved or to send it forth and take the risk of destruction by arbitrary power!

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Where does the Senator find in the bill a provision that the advertiser must submit his advertising to the Department?

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator asks me where I find in the bill a provision that the advertiser must submit his advertising. I take it that there is no Senator here who has to answer that question. It is not written in the bill, but it is implied in the bill, and it is a necessity under the bill. If my advertising may be construed by the Department to be injurious to health, and if I have any sense at all, I will not run the risk of the Department's arbitrary action. I will see it first. Men of prudence will necessarily act prudently; and now it is argued here, because that is not written in the bill, that it is not there!

A great many things that are not written into the law are implied by the necessities of the law; and I insist that if I were advertising a proprietary article of utter innocence in America, rather than run the risk of someone in the Department of Agriculture finding that my advertising is dangerous and seizing all my goods and destroying my business, I would at least have the prudence to go down and fall upon my knees before the head of the Department and beg him for leave to approve the advertisement before I staked my livelihood and my business upon it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. What would be the situation regarding the same matter if the jurisdiction respecting advertising were vested in the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. BAILEY. I may say to the Senator that if it were vested in the Federal Trade Commission, I should expect it to be vested precisely in these terms.

Mr. ROBINSON. That was my thought. Why would it not be true, then, that one would equally be compelled to go to the Federal Trade Commission in order to avoid the same results there which might occur in the Department of Agriculture? I am asking for information.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am afraid my great and good friend has misunderstood the nature of my amendment. My amendment does not relate to the Trade Commission or to the Department. My amendment provides a day in court and a hearing, whether the matter should be before the Trade Commission or before the Department of Agriculture. I was making my reference to the Department of Agriculture because that is the Department now named in the bill; but if the Trade Commission were named in the bill, I should offer the same amendment and I should make the same demand. So there is no difference there.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no prejudices about the Department of Agriculture—none in the world.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator's contention is that in whatever tribunal the jurisdiction respecting advertisement is lodged there should be the right of hearing?

Mr. BAILEY. That is correct; one seizure without hearing, but a multiple seizure, which means destruction, only after an order to show cause. That states clearly the object of the amendment.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. Returning to the argument just made by the Senator that under the provisions of the bill it will be necessary for any manufacturer, before he desires to advertise his article, to go down to the Department of Agriculture and get their approval of the form of the advertising—a point which I think is excellently well taken—I desire to call attention, however, to the fact that as the bill now stands, even after the manufacturer has gone to the Food and Drug Administration in the Department of Agriculture and received approval of his advertising, he is still liable to multiple seizure and to having his business in any particular locality destroyed at the whim of any chief of station.

My reason for making that statement is that at the bottom of page 45 of the bill it is provided that—

> The article shall be liable to seizure by process pursuant to the libel; but if a chief of station or other employee of the Administration, duly designated by the Secretary, has probable cause to believe from facts found by him and duly reported to the Secretary that such article is so adulterated as to be imminently dangerous to health, then, and in such case only, the article shall be liable to seizure by such chief of station or employee, who shall promptly report the facts to the proper United States attorney.

So that even after the Department might have approved the advertising, if any chief of station or other employee, under the bill as proposed, happened to be listening on the radio and heard a statement made of which he did not approve he could simply wire the Secretary of Agriculture and then proceed, without further process, to make multiple seizures.

Mr. BAILEY. I shall take my seat after one or two further words.

I am interested in the health of the people of our country. I am interested in pure foods and pure drugs. I will go as far with this bill as I can go. I will go as far in drawing a better bill as I can go. I am equally interested, however, in human rights. I am interested in the rights of free men in America. I am deeply interested in those rights, because those rights relate to the character of this Republic.

If there is one thing that I am sworn here to maintain, if there is one thing that will justify my course here, if there is one thing that will give me satisfaction in the service here, it will be the realization that I have sought at all times and with all interests to preserve the character of the Republic.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Before the Senator sits down, let me say, as I understand his amendment, it would not have the effect of encouraging the use of impure drugs or foods, but it would simply provide a method by which the person charged could be heard.

Mr. BAILEY. And that is with respect to misbranding and advertising. So far as the section relating to adulteration is concerned, we do not touch it.

Mr. BORAH. If, after a hearing, it were adjudged that the drug was impure, it would be excluded anyway?

Mr. BAILEY. That is correct. If it is impure or adulterated, it may be seized in the multiple seizures, and this amendment would not affect that procedure.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is there now no provision in the bill authorizing hearings?

Mr. BAILEY. None in the world, in this case. It is absolutely arbitrary.

Mr. ROBINSON. The judgment of the agent or of the station chief would be final?

Mr. BAILEY. It would be final. Let me say to the Senator, it is final in this case. Once there has been a multiple seizure throughout America, all the court trials in the world would not remedy the wrong. The man would be disgraced; his wares would be discredited.

Mr. BORAH. The same party making the seizure passes judgment, practically?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly. It has to be reported. We inserted an amendment in the committee that the party making the seizure would have to report to the Secretary; but the Department of Agriculture determines the course, and that without hearing. I think that is the point the Senator has in mind.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BAILEY. I will yield the floor.

Mr. GERRY. I wanted to ask the Senator a question for information before he yielded the floor.

In regard to this multiple-seizure question, how would the Senator handle a situation where an article contained poisonous material? Such a case occurred some years ago; people were killed, and it was important to seize the entire supply of the article as quickly as possible.

Mr. BAILEY. If the article was adulterated, my amendment would not affect it. But assume it is not; are we to provide a law whereby no end of innocent men in the United States may be destroyed in order that we may get one?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in connection with the question asked by the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BAILEY. I was about to finish. We can take the man who handles the poisonous article, make one seizure, issue the order upon him to show cause, and then make the multiple seizures, and all that could be done very rapidly. Is not that analagous to the present law? If a man commits murder, we do not condemn him without a trial; we do not destroy him or electrocute him until a jury has said he is guilty. He has his right to go into court.

Mr. GERRY. The information I am seeking as to the Senator's amendment is this: As I understand, in a case such as I have cited, where a patent medicine, as I recall, contained denatured alcohol, the use of which resulted in the death of quite a number of people, under the Senator's amendment all the shipments of that article could be seized practically in one seizure?

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator asks whether all of it could be seized. All of it that was not scattered over the country could be seized, but, after that, there would have to be multiple seizures in order to get it. That refers to the case of a poisonous article. I think that would come under adulteration, and, if so, multiple seizure may be had. But assume it should not; there could be one seizure, then they could issue an order to show cause, and upon the failure of the man to make a showing to the satisfaction of the party making the seizure, everything he had could be seized.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Under the amendment, if there were an endless quantity of this poisonous alcohol around the country, the Government could seize only one sample of it in one place, and do nothing until the court acted.

Mr. BAILEY. And then have an order to show cause, and proceed assuming that it is not adulterated and is put forth as medicine.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. It would be difficult to approve the amendment if a correct interpretation of it would permit poisonous articles to be sold pending adjudication on a single seizure. Assuming that there are a hundred places in the United States where a poisonous article is being sold, is it the Senator's contention that in order to secure to the seller or the manufacturer his rights he should be permitted to go on selling the poisonous article until a court had adjudicated the question and decided that he should not be permitted to do so? That would be very destructive. Hundreds of people might be killed.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me say to the Senator, before he reaches his conclusion too rapidly, that the amendment relates to misbranding and advertising. It does not relate to the contents of the bottle or the package; it relates to the advertising put in the paper. It is the advertising which is construed, not the contents of the bottle. I hope I have made my distinction clear, and I thank the Senator for having called my attention to the matter. It is the misbranding and the misleading advertising construed to be in the nature of adulteration, and therefore as injurious to health, that my amendment concerns. If the article is poisonous, I take it there would be no trouble in getting rid of it without any new law.

Mr. ROBINSON. The conclusion which the Senator says was hastily reached was based on a premise which may or may not be erroneous; but the premise was that, under the amendment which the Senator now proposes, if a poisonous article were being sold, the seller or manufacturer could go on selling it until a court had adjudicated that it was poisonous. If that be true, then I think my conclusion is correct, that the amendment could not be approved.

Mr. BAILEY. I was protesting against the Senator reaching a conclusion on that premise. That is not the correct premise. The premise is that misbranding and misadvertising are adulteration, and therefore injurious to health. It does not relate to the contents.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understood the Senator, in answer to the question of the Senator from Rhode Island, to make the contention that in all justice but a single seizure should be made, even though the commodity might be poisonous and destructive of life or health. That was my understanding of the Senator's answer.

Mr. BAILEY. I beg the Senator's pardon. If I gave that impression, I was not intending to do so. I was assuming that we had made it perfectly clear that the amendment which I have offered relates to the advertising and the misbranding, not to the contents, and not to the nature of the article. Probably in that assumption I overlooked the fact that there might have been an impression made to the contrary, but I had that in mind all the time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Carolina will answer another question, I understood the Senator to make that statement in connection with the other statement; but, assuming that an article is poisonous, and known to be poisonous by the medical profession, and by others who have knowledge of such matters, and that it is misbranded, and stated by the misbranding to be wholesome and not poisonous, under the Senator's amendment, in such a case, assuming the facts as I have stated them, would he insist that the seller or the manufacturer should have the right to go on selling the poisonous commodity until there had been a court adjudication in a single seizure that he had no right to do so?

Mr. BAILEY. I would say not, and I assure the Senator my amendment does not remotely suggest anything of the sort. The bill abundantly provides for multiple seizures in cases of any poisonous or deleterious substances. If the Senator will refer to page 4 of the bill——

Mr. ROBINSON. Which print is the Senator using? I find myself constantly confused by the different prints.

Mr. BAILEY. I was referring to page 4, chapter 3, section 301, but that relates to food. I refer the Senator to page 13, under the provision "Adulterated Drugs", where it is provided:

> A drug shall be deemed to be adulterated * * * if it consists in whole or in part of any filthy, putrid, or decomposed substance; or if it has been prepared, packed, or held under insanitary conditions whereby it may have been contaminated with filth, or whereby it may have been rendered injurious to health; or if its container is composed of any poisonous or deleterious substance which may render it injurious to health.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will not the Senator give the reference again?

Mr. BAILEY. That is found on page 13, chapter 4, under "Adulterated drugs."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, why not hitch up this transfer with his original amendment?

Mr. BAILEY. I have left out this language, I will say to the Senator, because I am assuming that it is transposed as intended by my amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. But the Senator wants to make the transfer of misbranding to another section.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. So that in that way the same "ginger jake" boy would be protected.

Mr. BAILEY. In order to obviate any doubt about that subject, I think the language is sufficient here under section 401; but if the Senator from New York, and the Senate, and my friend the Senator from Arkansas wish to have it read in this way, "A drug shall be deemed to be adulterated if it is poisonous or is dangerous to health", I do not think anybody could take exception to that. My exception is to the use of the words "dangerous to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising thereof."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. All drugs, practically, are poisonous and dangerous to health unless properly used.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I should hate to have a dispute of fact with a physician who makes a statement that all drugs are poisonous and dangerous to health. It is inconceivable to me that "all drugs are poisonous and dangerous to health." I will not debate that question. I do not profess to know a great deal about drugs, but I do know that when I grew up, at least, it was required that if a drug was poisonous, the word "poisonous" should be written on the label and that the skull and crossbones should appear on the bottle or container. It was rarely that I saw one of that sort, and I saw plenty of others. So I think the Senator is indulging there in exaggeration.

However, I am going to suggest to the Senator from Arkansas, in order to obviate the difficulty which appears to his mind, that if he wishes to leave in the language on page 13 in section 401, I will so change my amendment as not to strike out all that language, but leave on page 13 in line 17 the words, "If it is poisonous or dangerous to health." That meets the necessities of the case. That still protects the advertiser. That still puts misbranding in advertising, under the misbranding and advertising idea, in the misbranding clause, and leaves the producer to the point of having his goods seized once in that case, and multiple seizures upon notice. With this new amendment, under the request of the Senator from Arkansas, and the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island, the result will be, that if the material is dangerous to health or poisonous, that it will remain in the section relating to adulteration and still be subject to multiple seizure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am wondering if the questions which are being discussed on the floor, and so ably discussed, if I may say so, were discussed in committee, and if they were passed on in committee before the bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, a simple statement may be made about that.

I would not reflect upon the committee or upon the chairman under any consideration. The matter came up first this year, I think, early in February, and there was demand for hearing on the ground that the bill was a new bill. I suggested that we ought to have hearings. The senior Senator from New York, the chairman of the committee, said we had had the bill before us in one form or another for 2 years, and he rather thought we could dispense with hearings. I stated that the bill was in new form, but had assumed quite a different character, and American citizens desired to be heard, and I thought it were best to respect the right of petition.

The hearings were held. After the hearings, and before they were printed, the Senator from New York took pains to send to members of the committee the proof sheets of the hearings, with a letter stating that the bill would come up within a few days. At the next meeting of the committee, which was, I should say, within 3 or 4 or 5 days thereafter——

Mr. COPELAND. One week.

Mr. BAILEY. One week. I will make it 1 week, just as the Senator states. At that time I went over to the committee room and there were two bills before the committee. One was marked with blue marks, and the other with red. There had evidently been quite a change. I was unprepared to compare the two bills. The committee met at 10 o'clock. The Senate met at 12. I asked at that time that the bill, being 49 pages long, should be considered by sections, as I understand bills are usually considered. The Senator from New York said he did not think that was necessary, and he asked the committee generally if there were objections to the bill, and what they were. I made some, but I must confess it was difficult for me to make suggestions without any notice at all. I had to be reading the bill wherever I could, and it consisted of 49 full pages. We had only 2 hours, and we were reading and discussing and amending all at once. So I made a motion that the measure lie over for a week in order that we might consider it, since the committee was not going to consider it by sections, in order that we might amend it. We took a vote, and the committee voted, I think, 9 to 6 against letting it lie over.

That is a state of that phase of the case. Certainly, so far as I am concerned, I did have the opportunity to go over the bill in its most recent form, and it had been decidedly changed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is notable that the committee did adopt or recommend a great many amendments.

Mr. BAILEY. I may say to the Senator that we went through the bill very hurriedly and put them in where we could, not by sections, but as things occurred to us.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator will recall that the great majority of the committee amendments reported to the Senate since the bill has been under consideration were never considered by the committee at all. They have been added by the Senator from New York as committee amendments since the bill has been on the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am a little interested in trying to ascertain which bill we have before us. Is this the so-called "Tugwell bill" which was before the Senate at the last session of the Congress? If it is not the Tugwell bill, what changes have been made? The Senator said a moment ago there were two bills before the committee, a red bill and a blue bill, and I desire to know whether this is the red bill or the blue bill, and what changes have been made, if any, if this is not the Tugwell bill, from the Tugwell bill to the present bill?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if I may answer the Senator I think this is the tenth print of the bill. I will ask the senior Senator from New York if I am correct in that statement?

Mr. COPELAND. Essentially so.

Mr. BAILEY. The tenth print. The matter has gone over the past 2 years, and there has been quite an evolution in the bill. I understand that the original bill was known as the "Tugwell bill", which shifted the burden of proof, the bill to which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] referred the other day; but, with all these changes, very few were made in the committee. They were just made by comparison. As I understood the chairman of the committee, the Senator from New York, he said he got all the bills together here in the month of February and took up one after another, and got one section from one and one section from another. He was trying to get a composite bill. So I will say to the Senator from Utah that this bill is not the Tugwell bill, but it has something of the Tugwell idea in it. It has been very greatly modified.

All I desire to do with the bill is to get it in proper shape to be adapted to the character of the country and do the work with respect to pure foods and pure drugs.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator referred in his address a few days ago, and likewise in the minority report which has been filed, to the so-called "Wiley law", which was enacted many years ago. I was wondering whether, in the consideration of this question, the Wiley law was taken up and the suggestion made, it having served the country so well for so many years, but there having been some changes as the result of medical advancement, that amendment should be made to it? What reason was assigned in the committee for destroying that law, tearing it up by the roots, and proposing an entirely new bill? Why did not the committee amend the existing law?

Mr. BAILEY. I may say to the Senator that that was suggested by myself in the committee. Why the committee did not take that view it would be rather difficult for me to state, but I shall try to be fair about it.

The committee had been working on the matter for quite a length of time. The Senator from New York had been giving a great deal of attention to it. They had started with the Tugwell bill, and did not wish to abandon their idea. We all had due notice that in the House was the Mead bill, which is an evolution of the old Wiley law, but we did not consider that. That bill is still before the House. We shall have to deal with it before we get through with this proposed legislation. The bill before us may pass the Senate—I do not know—but if it shall, it will run into the Mead bill in the House, which is based on the Wiley Law.

I stated in my remarks the other day that I would infinitely prefer that we should have an evolution of the Wiley law, a development bringing it down to date. I think that would be the proper way to proceed; but it is too late for me now to do that. I am dealing with this bill as it is.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Did the Senator in the committee ever hear any reason whatever assigned as to the ground upon which it was necessary or desirable to abandon the structure of the old Wiley law, cut off the whole mass of decisions over a period of nearly 30 years, throw out of adjustment the laws of 46 States based on the Wiley law, and erect an entirely new structure?

Mr. BAILEY. No; I heard no reason assigned. I take it that Senators were of a different view, and that is all one can say about it. Very few of us know the reason why the other man thinks anything, and I do not inquire into it; every man has his own reasons.

Before taking my seat, I am going to change the first amendment proposed, and I should like to have the attention of my friend the senior Senator from Arkansas. Going back to page 13, under the heading "Adulterated drugs", I am not going to ask that all the language be stricken out, but will ask that it read in this way:

A drug shall be deemed to be adulterated if it is dangerous to health or poisonous.

And then strike out the words "under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising thereof."

That, I think, will meet the demand made by the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I may ask leave to modify my amendment just to that extent.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, before the Senator does that, let me say that I have listened to his discussion with a great deal of interest, and I should like to call his attention to the fact that, in my judgment, if the amendment which he now proposes should be accepted in that form it would make it an adulteration to sell any kind of drug that had a poison in it. Frequently a drug which is poisonous for some purposes is helpful for other purposes.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that, but we are now under the doctrine of the senior Senator from New York, who describes himself as the "stepfather and not the father" of this proposed legislation, that all drugs are poisonous. I did not know that that was so; I am willing, though, to put in the word "poisonous."

Mr. BLACK. I was calling the Senator's attention to the matter for the reason that frequently drugs are sold for external application which are not poisonous for that purpose but which, if taken internally, are poisonous.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator agree with me that there are a great many drugs taken internally which are not poisonous? Is Fleishmann's yeast poisonous, or is milk of magnesia poisonous?

Mr. BLACK. I think there are some drugs that are not poisonous, unless, of course, one takes too much of them.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from New York says all of them are poisonous. That was news to me, but he is a doctor, and I am not.

Mr. BLACK. What I was interested in was that a definition of an adulterated drug is being proposed; and if the amendment were left in the form in which the Senator has last provided, simply stating that a drug is adulterated if it is poisonous, and the amendment should not go any further than that all drugs which are poisonous would be adulterated; and I am sure the Senator does not want the adulteration feature to go to that extent.

Mr. BAILEY. What I was trying to do was to meet the demands of the senior Senator from Arkansas. If he is content with the words "if it is dangerous to health", I am content with those words, but I was making it as strong as possible in order to meet his demand.

Mr. BLACK. In connection with that, I might call the Senator's attention to the fact that his amendment, as he has stated, refers to misbranding only.

Mr. BAILEY. And to advertising.

Mr. BLACK. I do not see the word "advertising" in it.

Mr. BAILEY. It is transferred to the paragraph relating to labeling or advertising which are described as misbranding.

Mr. BLACK. Therefore, the Senator's amendment would apply only to that portion of the bill which begins on page 15, section 402, having to do with misbranding?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; that is all.

Mr. BLACK. So that if the Senator's amendment should be adopted, it would still be possible to have a multiple seizure if the drug were adulterated as described. As now described, it says, "If it is dangerous to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising thereof."

Mr. BAILEY. I am proposing to strike out the words "under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising thereof."

Mr. BLACK. I am trying to call the Senator's attention to the fact that, with the greatest sympathy for the amendment which he has presented, in my judgment, if we should amend section 401, it would not cover the situation raised by the Senator from Arkansas, and, in my judgment, would weaken his amendment, for the reason that it is now provided that it is an adulteration for a drug to have anything in it that "is dangerous to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising thereof." Therefore, as I understand, the amendment would not make it possible for "ginger jake", for instance, to be sold without the possibility of multiple seizure.

Mr. BAILEY. No; it would not.

Mr. BLACK. And so it is not necessary to strike from subdivision (a) of section 401 the provision to which the Senator refers in order to meet the suggestions raised by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BAILEY. I have been of that opinion all the time, but was making a concession in the interest of satisfying the minds of Senators who were rather inclined to be doubtful about it.

Mr. BLACK. I will state to the Senator that I would not under any circumstances make it possible for the hands of the officers to be paralyzed, and I am sure the Senator would not, in the case of a terrible drug such as that; but on page 13, section 401, there is a protection in the way of the adulteration clause, so that the issue, so far as the Senator's amendment is concerned, narrows down to one with reference to misbranded articles—shall there be only one seizure or a multiple seizure? With reference to poisonous or adulterated articles, there can be multiple seizures without resort to the courts.

Mr. BAILEY. I will ask the Senator from Arkansas if he is satisfied with the explanation furnished by the Senator from Alabama? That is my view of the amendment, and I am willing to make the concession.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am not prepared to express an opinion as to the effect of the language now in the bill. My questions directed to the Senator from North Carolina were based upon the statements which he made in reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], in which I understood him to say that, even though the commodity were poisonous, there should be a single seizure, and not a multiple seizure, until after the court proceedings provided for by his amendment were held. That is what prompted me to interrupt him.

Mr. BAILEY. That was not the impression that I intended to make upon the Senator. I do not know how the language was, but I was thinking all the time of the advertising and misbranding and labeling of the article instead of the seizure.

I take it that is where the confusion arose; but I think we have cleared it now, and that there is nothing in my amendment which will prevent the immediate multiple seizure of poisonous articles or articles that are deemed injurious to health.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. GORE. It is on that very point that I wish to be perfectly certain and clear, and my question relates to procedure and administration. I have particularly in mind the jamaica ginger which occasioned the form of paralysis known as "gingeritis" or "jakitis", which was manufactured in Massachusetts and sold in a number of States and communities in different States. It occasions a very severe form of paralysis, a form, I believe, incurable. A number of my own constituents, including some of the best people of the State, fell victims to that drug.

Mr. President, I agree with the general principles laid down by the Senator from North Carolina; I think that every citizen, or for that matter I think that every person, whether a citizen or not, ought to have his day in court before he is condemned, and that no one should be deprived of life, liberty, or property without a hearing. But I have taken it for granted that that principle lies at the very foundation of our jurisprudence.

Under the Senator's amendment would there be ways and means for a summary procedure to seize and condemn and withhold from commerce such drugs as the form of Jamaica ginger to which I have referred?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; I think the words "if it is dangerous to health" absolutely cover it.

Mr. GORE. I merely wanted to be sure of it, because it was a terrible tragedy to a number of citizens of my State and they had no recourse; they were victims of an injury without recourse. If we cannot remedy a past tragedy we should do everything possible to prevent its recurrence in the future.

Mr. BAILEY. There is no question at all, I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma, but that that type of drug would be subject to multiple seizure.

Mr. GORE. I drew that inference, but I wanted to hear the Senator say so for the RECORD.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I call the Senator's attention particularly to section 711, on page 45, which refers more specifically to the problem that is now submitted to the Senate. I read it:

> The article shall be liable to seizure by process pursuant to the libel—

Now listen—

> but if a chief of station or other employee of the Administration duly designated by the Secretary has probable cause to believe from the facts found by him and duly reported to the Secretary that such article is so adulterated as to be imminently dangerous to health, then, and in such case only, the article shall be liable to seizure by such chief—

And so forth.

It seems to me perfectly obvious that in the case of the dangerous adulteration there can be seizure, and that the situation is not remotely affected by the Senator's amendment. My conception of the Senator's amendment is that it deals solely with misbranding and with advertising, which is in the field of opinion rather than in the field of physical facts.

Mr. BAILEY. At the same time, and in the interest of fairness, it appears, even in that light, that the "imminently dangerous to health" clause is related to the words "so adulterated." Now I wish to make that perfectly clear. If a drug is imminently dangerous to health it should be subject to seizure whether adulterated or not.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. BAILEY. We can by amendment strike out the word "adulterated", leave in the words "is imminently dangerous to health", and still accomplish the purpose.

I am willing to go to any length about that. I believe, on the whole, it will be best for my amendment to strike out the words, "If it is dangerous to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising", and to make the amendment on the page referred to by the Senator from Michigan, page 45 and the top of page 46, read:

> Has probable cause to believe, from facts found by him and duly reported to the Secretary, that such article, whether adulterated or not, is imminently dangerous to health.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. That provision further requires that the report shall be made to the United States attorney, who is to file a libel for condemnation. In the meantime a great many people may have been killed.

Mr. BAILEY. I think the Senator has misread that provision. If he will look at the bottom of page 45 he will find there a plain declaration that "the article shall be liable to seizure by process pursuant to the libel." It can be seized universally under the libel.

Mr. FLETCHER. But on page 46 it is provided that the Secretary "shall promptly report the facts to the proper United States attorney and such United States attorney shall file a libel of information for condemnation of the article so seized." What we are trying to avoid is delay in action with respect to an article known to be poisonous.

Mr. BAILEY. If, on page 13, we should leave the wording "a drug shall be deemed to be adulterated if it is dangerous to health", would not that meet every demand the Senator has in mind?

Mr. FLETCHER. I am inclined to think that would improve it.

Mr. BAILEY. I am perfectly willing to stand on that proposition. Notwithstanding the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] said that it weakens the amendment, I am willing to stand on that and assure the Senator from New York, and the world, that I am not here trying to protect the purveyors of poisons in America. I am here trying to protect against misadvertising and misbranding.

Mr. COPELAND. Would not the Senator accomplish what he has in mind if, at the end of line 3, he should strike out the word "so" and, in line 4, the words "adulterated as to be", so it would read that "such article is imminently dangerous to health"?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; and if the Senator will let us adopt that amendment and then accept mine, I shall be satisfied.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator mean that I accept his long amendment?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall first have to argue about that.

Mr. BAILEY. I am perfectly willing to amend the language on page 46 to include in the multiple seizure powers of the bill any article imminently dangerous to health. I ask now, having agreed to that, only that the Senate adopt the amendment which protects the producer against labeling and advertising as being an adulteration and therefore imminently dangerous to health. That makes the issue perfectly clear.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think the position just suggested by the able Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] is one which should be adhered to by the Senator, namely, to stand by the amendment which he has tendered without seeking to deal with the question of adulteration, with the physical thing, but to deal only with the advertising, and then, when it comes to the question of dealing with the adulteration of food or of drugs, if there seems to be any weakness in the existing provisions as a result of which there might not be a multiple seizure, deal with that concrete subject in such manner as will meet the objections which may be urged?

Mr. BAILEY. That, of course, coupled with the amendment which the Senator from New York suggested in lines 3 and 4, on page 46, would accomplish the very purpose I have in mind.

Mr. KING. As I understand the Senator's position, he differentiates between advertising and misbranding, on the one hand, and the sale itself of the corporate thing, the food or poisonous drug, and contends that if some official away off in a remote part of the country should determine there was misbranding he might immediately seize the product not only in the town in which he lives, but make multiple seizures throughout the United States.

The Senator's amendment is entirely proper, I believe, because I would feel that there ought to be a day in court. I can easily distinguish between that situation and a situation dealing purely with the concrete thing, to wit, the poisonous food or the poisonous drug. I should prefer to vote for the Senator's amendment if he tenders it, and as I understand it I shall vote for it; but, if he mixes it up with adulteration of food, I am not so sure where we will land.

Mr. BAILEY. This does not mix misbranding and labeling and advertising with adulteration. We simply leave the description in the adulteration clause, "poisonous or injurious to health", and that is because the multiple-seizure feature of the bill is based on adulteration. No foundation is laid outside of adulteration for multiple seizure. If we want to seize a drug that is injurious to health and that is not adulterated, there must be some provision made in the bill. That is the point raised by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Let me say to the author of the bill if he would be willing to have the change made as suggested by him and then let us adopt the amendment proposed by me, the whole thing would be covered. The advertising and labeling would be protected. The multiple seizure as to advertising and labeling would be eliminated, but the multiple seizure as to injurious articles would be preserved.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And any possible imminent hazard to public health still would be completely protected.

Mr. BAILEY. Absolutely.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may we have the amendment stated in the form in which it is now presented by the Senator from North Carolina?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment has not been presented at the desk. It has been discussed among Senators, but the Chair does not know whether there has been agreement upon the amendment among the various Senators who have been discussing it.

Mr. BAILEY. We started with three amendments, but there have been many suggestions in the course of the colloquy. At the present moment I am waiting to hear from the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] before offering the final form. I think we may get together, though we may not. While he is speaking I shall undertake to adjust the matter so as to prevent the sale of poisonous or injurious articles by way of enabling the powers that be to make multiple seizures and at the same time to eliminate from the multiple seizure labeling or advertising.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And that is a matter of opinion.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes. That is what I have in mind can be easily accomplished.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, let me invite the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to section 708 of the bill, the section which provides penalties and defines certain prohibited acts. That is on page 38 of the print I have.

Mr. BAILEY. I have it before me.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of section 708 prohibits the introduction into interstate commerce of an adulterated drug.

Mr. COPELAND. From which print of the bill is the Senator reading?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am reading from the print dated March 13. I am referring to section 708 headed "Prohibited acts and penalties."

Mr. COPELAND. I have it. It is on page 37 of the original print of the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The circumstance to which I desire to invite the Senator's attention is that this section prohibits the introduction into interstate commerce of adulterated drugs. Subsection 2 also prohibits the adulteration of a drug or a cosmetic. It occurs to me that we must exercise the greatest discretion in defining an adulterated drug, because if we do not we may find ourselves in the position of banning all drugs from interstate commerce. Certainly, if we insert in the definition a phrase which makes all drugs poisonous or which makes all poisonous drugs adulterated, then we will find ourselves in another quandary.

Mr. BAILEY. I am obliged to the Senator from Wyoming for his support of the doctrine of the senior Senator from New York, that all drugs are poisonous, which would end the whole controversy; but I do not subscribe to that doctrine, which is an entirely new one to me.

Mr. President, I have finished. I shall be glad to yield the floor. I think the Senator from New York desires to discuss the bill; and I am going to listen to him with a view, as I said just now, to adjusting my amendment so as to permit multiple seizures in cases of articles injurious to health or poisonous, with some sort of proper description of "poisonous", and at the same time eliminating from the doctrine of multiple seizures the idea of advertising or misbranding.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the debate which has occurred in connection with the pending measure has led me to the conclusion that it has many defects and should receive further consideration at the hands of the committee from which it came. That fact is emphasized by the statement which is made by the Senator from North Carolina as to the proceedings in the committee when this bill, as well as another measure, were presented.

It is needless to say that the measure is one of considerable importance and contains provisions which deserve most serious consideration. There are provisions in the bill affecting property rights as well as personal rights—provisions, as I read the bill—abridging the rights of citizens and, indeed, impairing constitutional rights.

I have heard no satisfactory explanation for an abandonment of the food and drug act enacted in 1906, commonly known as the "Wiley law." The bill before us ignores the act just referred to, and proceeds upon the theory—if I properly interpret it—that there has been no legislation for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated, misbranded, or poisonous foods, drugs, or medicines, or dealing with germane and relevant matters.

I do not understand why the so-called "Wiley law" was not accepted by the committee as a foundation upon which to build, if further legislation was required. That measure is comprehensive, it has served the people well, and has withstood the assaults made upon it.

Perhaps it should be amended or, at least, supplemented, because, since the time of its enactment, there have been developments in the fields of medicine and the preservation of food which may call for Federal legislation. But, as indicated, the Food and Drug Act of 1906 is understood by the people, by the manufacturers, vendors of drugs and foods, and many of its provisions have been interpreted by the courts, and it has withstood, as I have indicated, whatever assaults have been made upon it.

It seems to me that the proper course to have been pursued was to take the 1906 act and ascertain what, if any, changes should be made to meet existing conditions and to provide for future developments. I do not regard it as a sound policy to ignore existing laws which have stood the test for years, and have resulted in important benefits and advantages, and to launch new legislation predicated upon the theory that a new field is to be explored. That view is expressed in a letter which I received a day or two ago from one of my constituents. He writes me as follows:

> We really believe that too much stress has been laid on the new Pure Food and Drug Act, and that the same objective could be accomplished by the amendment of the present Food and Drug Act to include various sections of the drug and food industry which have developed in a substantial way since the original act was passed in 1906. There is no question but that the legal decisions on the present act are of great value, both to the public and to the drug industry; and the passage of an entirely new act would eliminate the benefits of all the decisions which economically represent the expenditure of a great deal of money by all concerned.

I have made inquiry during the debate as to the reason for the failure of the committee to proceed upon the basis of the act of 1906. In my opinion, no satisfactory reply has been made.

There have been many measures of importance enacted—some of them creating departments and Federal agencies. From time to time Congress has supplemented or amended the acts under which they were created and under which they function, and it has seldom been the case that the acts creating the organizations and agencies referred to have been ignored or repudiated because changed conditions required some modification of the original acts, or amendments to the same.

The so-called "Wiley Act" would have afforded an adequate and sound base upon which to rest any additional legislation which developments in the field of medicine have shown to be necessary.

As I am informed, at the last session of Congress the bill known as the "Tugwell bill" was submitted from one of the executive departments. That measure had many drastic provisions, some of which it was claimed were revolutionary, oppressive, and unconstitutional. Many criticisms were leveled against the bill, and it became apparent that unless greatly modified it would not receive the approval of Congress. That bill, as I am informed, took but little, if any, cognizance of the act of 1906, and seemed to have been prepared upon the theory that there was no law dealing with food and drug problems.

A review of legislation enacted by Congress during the past few years will, I believe, reveal the fact that Congress has too often abdicated its function of originating legislation and has accepted bills which have been prepared by the executive departments of the Government; indeed, I think it will be conceded that the most aggressive and powerful advocates of some proposed legislation have been the representatives of the executive departments. And it is well known that much of the legislation of Congress has multiplied executive agencies and materially increased the number of Federal employees.

In my opinion, the executive departments have had too much to do with legislation and have exerted too great an influence over the legislative branches of our Government. There has been too much of a commingling of legislative and the executive authority, as a result of which, as I have indicated, important legislation has been too much impressed with the stamp of executive initiation and authority.

In my opinion, Congress has been too amenable to executive direction in the matter of legislation, and the result has been, as I have stated, that executive agencies have been unduly multiplied and their power improperly magnified.

I assume, therefore, that when there came from the Department of Agriculture the so-called "Tugwell bill", the committee—and I am not criticizing it—felt that the obligation rested upon it and upon Congress to not only give it consideration but to regard it as the foundation for any legislation that was to be enacted dealing with the subject. Accordingly, as I glean from the discussion which has taken place, attempts were made to modify or amend the Tugwell bill, and the measure now before us is that bill with some modifications more or less important.

If the able Senator from New York had said that he was the father of this bill I should have been disposed to accord to it a greater degree of favor but when he states that he is only its stepfather, I confess that the degree of my confidence in the measure is considerably shaken.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I have understood that many a stepfather loves his stepchild.

Mr. KING. No doubt, but I do not think the Senator from New York loves this stepchild very much, or if he loves it I am certain he does not extend to it the affection that a father would give to his own child. I feel constrained to believe that, with the Tugwellian provisions in the bill, the Senator is rather glad to disclaim paternity and to assume only the rather objectionable role of stepfather.

Mr. President, referring to the thought which I was attempting to express a few moments ago, if additional legislation were required dealing with the railroads of our country, Congress would not brush away and wholly ignore the Interstate Commerce Act, with the amendments thereto. The original act provided for certain control over this great interstate instrumentality. The framework of the original act still exists. Changing conditions called for supplemental legislation, and Congress added to or amended the original act.

Other illustrations might be referred to indicating the sound and wise course which has been followed by the legislative branch of the Government, and which course, I submit, should have been followed in dealing with the subject now before us.

Mr. President, in my opinion this bill should be recommitted and another measure reported carrying such amendments of the act of 1906 as the situation requires. And in the event that the bill is recommitted, it seems to me that the committee should consider the propriety of committing to an agency of the Government other than the Agricultural Department the administration of the act. It is true that under the Wiley Act the Department of Agriculture was charged with the duty of administering the act, but it seems to me that that Department is not the one which should have the responsibility of administering a law dealing with foods, drugs, and cosmetics.

The Federal Government has built up a strong and efficient Public Health Service. Within that organization are to be found doctors and men skilled in medicine and who have a knowledge of drugs and foods and cosmetics. Certainly, this organization, for which millions are annually expended and which is Nation-wide in its activities, is better prepared to administer the proposed act than any other Federal agency.

Mr. President, an examination of the bill before us will reveal its bureaucratic and autocratic features, and will, I believe, justify its recommittal, to the end that a better and sounder measure may be brought to the floor of the Senate for consideration.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator now proposes to change the measure and to place the act under the administration of the Public Health Service?

Mr. KING. That is the suggestion which I have made. As I have stated, I believe that the so-called "Wiley Act" should be the basis for any legislation enacted dealing with the subject under consideration; but I believe, with the growth and importance of the Public Health Service, the administration of the Pure Food and Drugs Act should be placed in the hands of the Public Health Service and not in the hands of a department that was set up for the purpose of aiding the farmers in meeting the agricultural problems with which they are concerned.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. In connection with the Senator's suggestion about amending the Wiley Act, consideration has been given to that matter, and it seems quite reasonable; but the Senator will remember that the Wiley Act, as he has stated, was under the administration of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. KING. Yes; I have so stated; but because the administration of the act was placed in the hands of the Agricultural Department, there is no reason why that Department should forever have the responsibility of administering the law.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2881) authorizing the adjustment of contracts for the sale of timber on the national forests, and for other purposes.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOODS, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein, to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and for other purposes, the pending question being the amendment offered by Mr. BAILEY.

Mr. COPELAND obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Hatch	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Coolidge	Hayden	Reynolds
Austin	Copeland	Johnson	Robinson
Bachman	Costigan	King	Russell
Bailey	Couzens	La Follette	Schall
Bankhead	Cutting	Lewis	Schwellenbach
Barbour	Dickinson	Logan	Sheppard
Barkley	Dieterich	Lonergan	Smith
Bilbo	Donahey	McGill	Steiwer
Black	Duffy	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Fletcher	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Borah	Frazier	Metcalf	Townsend
Brown	George	Minton	Trammell
Bulkley	Gerry	Murphy	Truman
Bulow	Gibson	Murray	Tydings
Burke	Glass	Neely	Vandenberg

Byrnes	Guffey	Nye	Wagner
Capper	Hale	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Carey	Harrison	Pittman	Wheeler
Clark	Hastings	Pope	White

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I regret that there are not more of the Senators in the Chamber, because I shall try, in my feeble way, to tell why I feel forced to resist the amendment offered by the able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

I confess again what I have said so many times, that I become painfully self-conscious when I attempt to impose upon the Senate views of mine which have been gathered through long years of experience, first as a physician, and then as a public-health official, administering to the largest unit of consumers in the United States. Not only is it the largest unit of consumers, but also, through the wholesalers, it is the center of the industries affected by the pending bill. It was my duty to learn a good deal about these problems. So I feel that I have some knowledge, and I hope it may be helpful.

I know the lawyers of this body contribute greatly to the debates on all matters involving law, and if I can contribute even a modicum of information by what I shall have to say, I desire to make that contribution, even though it is a matter of some personal embarrassment to pose as an "expert."

I was comforted just now by a telegram which I received from Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, in which she states:

> We are all cheering for you. More power to you.
> Cordially,
> MRS. HARVEY W. WILEY.

Mrs. Wiley has taken up and is bearing the torch carried by her eminent and beloved husband. She is emphasizing, through the education of the public, the need for such protection in the matter of health as the pending measure would afford to the people of the United States.

I said Friday evening, and I wish to repeat, that I do not want any Senator to be under the impression that I was bluffing when I said that I would rather have the bill killed than submit to the adoption of two or three of the pending amendments. I make that statement, first, because the amendment offered by the able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] would take away from the Department of Agriculture authority which it now has under the present law. The existing law provides in section 10 of the Federal Food and Drugs Act—

> That any article of food, drug, or liquor that is adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of this act, and is being transported from one State, Territory, District, or insular possession to another for sale * * * shall be liable to be proceeded against in any district court of the United States within the district where the same is found, and seized for confiscation.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. The old Wiley law, from which the Senator is reading, says nothing whatever about adulteration by way of advertisement. I know the Senator says that is an extension of the prescription, and that sort of thing; but he is making the point that my amendment would weaken the law. My amendment relates to a feature in the pending bill which is not in the old law at all. I think the letter before us shows that to be so.

Mr. COPELAND. First, Mr. President, referring to what the Senator said about advertising, no one questions that the Department should determine the quality of the product. No one questions that the Department should determine what its label shall be. No one questions that the circular which is wrapped around the bottle of patent medicine within the carton should be passed upon by the Department. What in the world is advertising but an extension of the label, an extension of the label advertising which has been formally prepared by the manufacturer?

The Senator from North Carolina is a loyal and devoted American who has dedicated his life to American rights, human rights, and property rights, who has determined for himself that America, to quote his language, "cannot be careless about the rights of its citizens"; and with that statement I agree. When it comes to a matter of commerce involving articles of production or manufacture which have no relation whatever to health, I am willing to have the processes of the law so clearly defined that no American producer, manufacturer, or vendor shall have his rights endangered and limited by a legislative procedure.

But if I may say so, in all fairness and in good spirit, we are dealing with a larger problem. The bill pending relates to public health and to individual health. If I had to choose between a provision which seemed to impose some burden upon industry and legislation which demands that the health of the public be protected, there is not any doubt about where I would stand. I want the citizens of this country—men, women, and children—protected against the possibility of their purchase and use of drugs which may impair health and even take life.

The measure before us is a public-health measure. It is unbecoming for me to attempt to talk about legal questions, but I will say that the States have kept for themselves what is known as the "police power", and under the police power they can do most extraordinary things. When I was commissioner of health in New York I used to wonder how in the world it was that in giving a charter for the city of New York the legislature was willing to give such tremendous power to the commissioner of health as that charter gives. In case of imminent peril to health or life in New York City, the health commissioner can rope off a section of the city; he can tear down buildings; he can burn buildings; he can stop the running of the street cars. He can set aside almost every so-called "vested right" in order that the health and lives of the citizens may be protected.

I know that what we call the "police power" does not reside in the Federal Government, but, nevertheless, an old hero 30 years ago started a fight to give in reality the police power to the Federal Government as regards the protection of the public health. He did it by proposing a drastic law to regulate the sale of food and drugs.

I can recall the newspaper accounts at the time of the great fight which Dr. Wiley was having to secure the enactment of such a law. It had been my duty to know more or less about it historically because of my own activity in public health. But I understand now better than I ever did before what it means to try to secure the passage of a bill which has to do with the protection of human health and human life when some vile patent medicine influence interposes and says it must not be done.

I absolve every Senator. There is no Senator here who represents any interest such as I am speaking of, and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is the last man I should accuse of that, so I am not speaking about him. But I have here the "special bulletin" which was sent out from this city on April 6, directed "To the trade", telling them how necessary it is that certain things should be done here. The Senator from North Carolina is ignorant of this. I know he could not know about it. I read from the bulletin:

Senator BAILEY, of North Carolina, has filed a minority report, copy of which is enclosed, and we approve of the conclusions reached by Senator BAILEY. Hence our wire asking you to wire your Senators requesting them to be present in the Senate and approve the Bailey minority report.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to see that bulletin. I wish to assure the Senator and the Senate that all of this is news to me.

Mr. COPELAND. May I read another quotation from it before the Senator takes the paper, and then I will turn it over to him?

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator will bear witness that I was in committee in connection with these matters for some days and never heard of Mr. Frank A. Blair, or the Proprietary Association. It is all news to me. I do not see how that affects the merits of the amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I want to say for the Senator from North Carolina that, of course, he is entirely innocent of having any part in or knowledge of this thing. But I am calling the attention of the Senate to the fact that there was sent out such a circular, which says—

By all means support Senator BAILEY's amendment.

Also, I quote:

Senator CLARK, of Missouri——

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator let me interrupt him?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. All of that is news to me, and I have had only one letter on this subject, which was from the president of the North Carolina Press Association, Mr. Ramsey, of Asheville. My amendment is aimed at human rights which I have undertaken to protect by agreeing with the Senator here to protect the public against the use or the sale of any article which would be poisonous or injurious to the health. I do not see how in the light of the amendment which he suggested and I agreed to accept, he can continue to talk, or how he can make any effort here to indicate that my amendment would tend to enable manufacturers of vile patent medicines to impose upon the public. I do not see how it follows, I do not see how it is even relevant, in the light of the fact that I have told the Senator that I would strike out the words of limitation, leaving it where there may be multiple seizures of any article which is imminently dangerous to health. If the writer of that paragraph or that letter, whoever it be, is engaged in any business which is calculated to be eminently dangerous to health, I do not think he could possibly support the position which I am taking.

Mr. COPELAND. I absolve the Senator absolutely. Also I want the RECORD to show that I did not reveal the name of the writer. I did not want to reveal his name, because he is a friend of mine and I am very fond of him; except in this one matter I think he is usually about 100 percent right. In this particular thing he is 5,000,000 percent wrong, if there could be that degree of wrongness.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I never heard of the gentleman before, and I did not mean to reflect on him, but I did think from what the Senator said he was one of the vilest men on the face of the earth, and I was happy that I never heard of him. Now, however, I find that he is a very eminent man and a very close friend of the Senator, who has not announced his name. I do not understand such things.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator has had his say, and I am glad he has. This letter goes on to say:

Senator CLARK, of Missouri, served notice on the Senate on Thursday and again on Friday that he would move to recommit the bill, sending it back to the Commerce Committee, where he said it would probably stay not less than 10 days, during which time the members of the committee would be afforded an opportunity to discuss the provision of this measure, which has been characterized as unsatisfactory, unsound, unconstitutional, etc.

You have been asked to wire your Senators to vote for recommittal of S. 5, Calendar No. 375, as proposed by Senator BENNETT CHAMP CLARK.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. It is evident, Mr. President, that there has been a good deal of propaganda on both sides of the proposition of recommittal. For instance, I received at one time yesterday, I think, 9 telegrams from 9 separate places in the State of Missouri, phrased in identical language, asking me to vote against my own motion to recommit; and some of those who acted upon the propaganda which the Senator indicates has been put out on the other side were so unintelligent as to take the trouble to spend money to send me a telegram asking me to vote for my own motion to recommit. So it is about as broad as it is long, so far as I am able to observe.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator is entirely right. I received this sheaf of postal cards this morning, probably a hundred cards from persons who said they did not have money enough to pay for telegrams but sent the postal cards to me urging me to defeat the Clark and Bailey amendments, so I suppose the Senator is right.

Mr. CLARK. Unquestionably there has been a great deal of money spent for propaganda on both sides.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I will have to interrupt again if the Senator will permit me to.

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I have not received any of those postal cards, but I believe I can safely say that if that sort of stuff came to my office my secretary would not deliver it to me. I do not get that sort of stuff. I think the Senator has received the propaganda.

Mr. COPELAND. It is very interesting to me that I had a telegram this morning from the president of the North Carolina Federation of Women's Clubs, who urges this measure be put through, as it should be.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not get a communication from her, either.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator has not looked over his mail this morning. I notice the other day he said he had not received the proof sheets of the hearings until several days after they were put in his office. I know Senators are hard pressed and receive a great deal of mail. In a couple of days the Senator will get down to the telegram from the president of the North Carolina Federation of Women's Clubs, an organization which has officially indorsed the bill.

I wish to continue with the letter which I was quoting. I read further from it:

The Senate recessed on Friday evening, April 5, until Monday, April 8, at 12 o'clock. If you have not already done so, please wire your Senators at once requesting that they study the minority report by Senator BAILEY and approve the motion of Senator CLARK to recommit the bill for further consideration.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator who signed that letter?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from North Carolina has already brought that out.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to ask the Senator who signed it.

Mr. COPELAND. I will hand the letter to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me say to the Senator from Missouri that it is signed by a man named Blair, of whom I have never heard.

Mr. CLARK. Neither have I.

Mr. BAILEY. But he is a very fine friend of the Senator who now has the floor, and to his high character that Senator has just testified.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to ask him if the man who signed this letter, which evidently is a sort of trade letter, the signer of which I have never heard of before but who the Senator says is an intimate personal friend of his, is one of the "vile propagandists" to whom the Senator has been referring? Is he one of those to whom the Senator applied the term "vile" so frequently during the last week?

Mr. COPELAND. I was speaking of the manufacturers. I said that the interests back of the movement seeking to defeat the bill are, many of them, manufacturers of vile patent medicines.

Mr. CLARK. I ask the Senator again, if the writer of this letter, which he brings in to back up his statement, and who, he says, is an intimate friend of his, is he one of the representatives of the "vile" patent-medicine manufacturers?

Mr. COPELAND. He is the executive officer of a group of men of whom in this connection I do not approve.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator has used the term "vile" about men of whom I know nothing and care nothing. I ask him if this is not one of the "vile" men to whom he has been referring?

Mr. COPELAND. In the Senator's time let him protect himself as he thinks it desirable.

I am very much interested in all the features, and particularly in one feature in the minority report. I compliment the Senator from North Carolina; I think he has written a very excellent report, and I find myself in harmony with most of it. He brought out some figures which to me are extremely valuable, and they ought to be in the RECORD.

The undersigned—

Meaning the signers of the minority report—

The undersigned call attention to the fact that a great deal is involved in the way of commerce. We are informed that the value of manufactured food and kindred products in the year 1931, according to our census reports, at wholesale prices was $8,247,000,000.

Billions is a figure we can now comprehend. Until recently we have not been familiar with billions. Eight and a quarter billions practically represent the food sales. The minority report goes on to say—

That the value of cosmetics, perfumes, and toilet articles was $158,000,000; that the value of drugs was $373,000,000, of which amount proprietary medicines account for $254,000,000.

Those figures add up to about $9,000,000,000. I know one cannot prove much by statistics, but I do not find any food manufacturers here opposing this bill.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Food manufacturers at the hearing last year were opposing the bill, were they not?

Mr. COPELAND. Last year?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, sir.

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, yes.

Mr. CLARK. Until the Senator from New York in a private agreement settled with the representative of the food manufacturers, Mr. Dunn, whereupon he appeared in favor of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. And he has done a good job since, I will say.

Mr. CLARK. I am not critical of the effort, but when the Senator calls attention to the fact that the food manufacturers are not here protesting against the bill, I think it is only fair to call attention to the fact that the food manufacturers have been settled with.

Mr. COPELAND. Then my food manufacturers are satisfied, but the Senator's proprietary medicine people are not. Is that the point?

Mr. CLARK. I have no proprietary medicine people, and I do not charge that the Senator from New York represents any food people. I say that people who appeared before the committee a year ago, led by Mr. Dunn, protesting against the bill, were, in the meantime, satisfied by the Senator from New York, which is an explanation of the fact that they are not now protesting against the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. I take it, then, that the Senator's group has not been satisfied by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CLARK. I repeat that I have no group, and I have no interest, and I resent the conduct of the Senator from New York in getting up here and by inuendo and intimation trying to make it appear that Senators on this floor who oppose some of the outrageous provisions of this bill, or some of the cloudy provisions of the bill, are representing any special interest.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well, I express my apology to the Senator for what I may have said. May I ask him now if any proprietary interests approached the Senator with a view to urging him to make radical changes in the bill?

Mr. CLARK. I may say to the Senator from New York I have discussed with representatives of nearly every sort of an interest that can be imagined, as I suppose every other Senator has, matters which they find concern their interests.

Mr. COPELAND. Has the Senator approached the chairman of the committee with a view to a radical amendment about a certain part of the bill?

Mr. CLARK. I did not approach the chairman of the committee with reference to a radical amendment about a part of the bill. I suggested to him that certain of my constituents questioned the propriety of specifically including antiseptics in the bill any more than any other class of drugs should be included, and the Senator from New York agreed with me and stated that he has always been opposed to including antiseptics in the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator did, then, approach the chairman of the committee with a view to a change of that sort?

Mr. CLARK. I certainly did; and there was no impropriety in two members of the committee discussing changes in the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. I have not suggested that there was any impropriety.

Mr. CLARK. What I object to is the Senator from New York undertaking to speak of any class or group as being the Senator from Missouri's.

Mr. COPELAND. I was saying, when we got into this harmless altercation, that I will go as far as will the Senator from North Carolina or any other Senator in attempting to protect the vested rights and all the rights of the American people up to the point of an invasion of their health. When we get to that point, I think that dollars go into the discard, and I believe I voice the sentiment of the entire Senate when I say that, if the health of our people can be adversely affected by any legislation or by the lack of legislation, it is the desire of the Senate to see to it that we have legislation which will give adequate protection, if it is possible to secure such legislation.

Now, I wish to speak specifically about the pending group of amendments offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. In order that the Senator may speak with the entire matter before him, I having stated to him in the colloquy a while ago that I would agree to strike out the language he suggested on page 46, I ask him to let me offer at this stage an amendment striking out on page 46 lines 3 and 4, the words " so adulterated as to be," and then having the seizure sections read to the effect that the Secretary may seize such article if it is imminently dangerous to health regardless of adulteration.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, I have no objection at all to that.

Mr. BAILEY. I simply want the Senator to discuss the amendment with that suggestion before him. I do not want it to come in afterward.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from North Carolina a question, with the permission of the Senator from New York?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from North Carolina is referring, I take it, to page 13, is he not?

Mr. BAILEY. No; to page 46, to the new amendment under the seizure clause.

Mr. GERRY. Has the Senator a new amendment on that subject?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; I have just offered one to make it complete so as to meet the point the Senator from Rhode Island raised. It appears that seizure, under the language on page 46, relates exclusively to adulteration. I am proposing to change it so that seizure will relate to articles dangerous to health, regardless of adulteration.

Mr. GERRY. Will the Senator send his amendment to the desk, so that it may be read?

Mr. COPELAND. As I understand the Senator, he also has another amendment?

Mr. BAILEY. I shall let that provision of the bill remain just as it is, because what I have now proposed might meet the situation.

Mr. COPELAND. On page 13 the Senator wanted to change subparagraph (a) of section 401 so as to read " if it is dangerous to health or poisonous."

Mr. BAILEY. If it is imminently dangerous to health, to be sure, it is poisonous.

Mr. COPELAND. About that amendment I want to be clear. The Senator's amendment to section 401, as he stated it, now reads " if it is dangerous to health or poisonous."

Mr. BAILEY. No; no amendment has been offered to that effect. It was simply a discussion to meet the situation which the Senator from New York himself suggested to me, on page 46, to strike out the words " so adulterated as to be " and leave it so it would read " that such article is imminently dangerous to health ", and so forth.

Mr. COPELAND. That is all right.

Mr. BAILEY. That would relieve us of the necessity of changing the other three amendments in any degree.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator then would withdraw the other amendments?

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no. I said it would relieve us of the necessity of changing them.

Mr. COPELAND. Then I think it is understood the Senator has now introduced a fourth amendment which he links with the other three.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; that is correct. I offered the last one at the suggestion of the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls to the attention of the Senator from North Carolina that the amendment he now offers is an amendment to a committee amendment which has already been adopted by the Senate. It may be offered by unanimous consent or by reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

Mr. BAILEY. All I was doing at this stage was to notify the Senator from New York so that he might discuss the matter in the light of that proposal. I take it he will not object to broadening the powers of seizure set forth on page 46.

Mr. COPELAND. I desire now to discuss, if I may, the Senator's amendment on page 45, line 7, and I should like to have the clerk state the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45, line 7, after the word " found ", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided, however, That not more than one seizure action shall be instituted in cases of alleged misbranding, except upon order to show cause, and then upon a showing by the Secretary that such article is misbranded in manner or degree as to render such article imminently dangerous to health, or that such alleged misbranding has been the basis of a prior judgment in favor of the United States in a criminal prosecution or libel for condemnation proceeding respecting such article under this act: And provided further, That said single seizure action shall, on motion, be removed for trial to a jurisdiction of reasonable proximity to the residence of the claimant of such article.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina in his desire to be just—and he always has such a desire—thinks there is an invasion of private American rights by permitting the Department to make multiple seizures in case of misbranding. Have I stated it correctly?

Mr. BAILEY. Misbranding being defined in terms of advertising.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. The Senator from North Carolina did not give a complete answer this morning to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], whose question, as I view it, goes to the heart of the whole program. The Senator from Rhode Island asked what would happen in the case of the sale of poisonous alcohol, what we call denatured alcohol, which is not always properly denatured, which has gone into the making of whisky and brandy, if I am correctly advised. This is a subject so far away from my knowledge that I cannot speak with authority. However, we know there are many instances of the poisoning of American citizens as a result of the sale of alcoholic beverages which contained a mixture of denatured alcohol which was not fully denatured.

Taking the illustration which was presented by the Senator from Rhode Island, under the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina that a bottle of whisky properly labeled in the State of Rhode Island could be seized if it was found to contain poisonous ingredients.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator is satisfied that that is a fair statement in the light of the amendment which I have offered in his presence within the last 5 minutes and which was suggested by himself, then I shall be content. I shall not dispute it. I have offered an amendment which allows multiple seizure of anything that is imminently dangerous to health, and notified the Senator prior to his argument, and asked him to consider it along with the other three amendments.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well; I shall use another example.

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to say about the product the Senator called " whisky " that I do not consider that to be a drug to start with, and anyway that could always be seized under the police power, and I have no doubt has been seized all over the country. I do not think that is analogous at all. I want to discuss the matter in the light of the facts relating to advertising and misbranding being interpreted as dangerous to health. That is what I have in mind. Of course, alcohol may be dangerous to health, but advertising of it would not be.

Mr. COPELAND. Would the advertising of a brand of whisky known to contain poisonous ingredients be proper?

Mr. BAILEY. No; I do not think that would be proper.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, what about our friend "ginger jake"?

Mr. BAILEY. There will be no difficulty about that under the laws of any State in the Union. There would have been no difficulty about that under the common law of 500 years ago. We are not legislating to do things that have already been done.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator want to beg the question as regards "ginger jake" which was labeled "jamaica ginger"?

Mr. BAILEY. I had never heard of "ginger jake" until the Senator mentioned it the other day. I do not know a thing about "ginger jake." I do not profess to know anything about it. I never before heard of "ginger jake."

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] a few moments ago spoke feelingly about "ginger jake" and what it has done to his people.

Mr. BAILEY. Why should not "ginger jake" be seized under the provisions of section 711?

Mr. COPELAND. As amended, it possibly could be; and I shall concede it for the moment.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Is it not a fact that "ginger jake" would be outlawed because it contains a poison? It is not necessary to talk about advertising "ginger jake." Would not "ginger jake", if it contains poison, be subject to multiple seizure under the poison section?

Mr. COPELAND. Very well; let us concede that to be so. But I am going to take an article which falls directly under the amendment, even under the interpretation placed upon it by both the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], as well as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. In my hand I have a "remedy", the most important horse liniment in the world. am not going to advertise the name of it, because that would not be quite proper. This horse liniment has nothing in it but turpentine and eggs and ammonia.

It is not dangerous to health. If one were so disposed, I suppose he could drink as much as he would take, if he felt so disposed, without danger to his health; but I call attention to this horse medicine, which is not branded according to the Senator's definition. It is not dangerous to health. It is just a fraud; just a humbug.

Mr. BAILEY. May I ask the Senator if it is adulterated?

Mr. COPELAND. No; it is not adulterated. That is, it is not dangerous to health. It contains the purest eggs and the purest turpentine and the purest ammonia. It is not aulterated; but, now, let us see what can be done with it. According to the brand, this will cure tuberculosis, pneumonia, laryngitis, bronchitis, pleurisy, influenza, la grippe, asthma, coughs, colds, catarrh, rheumatism, lumbago, neuritis, neuralgia, locomotor ataxia, and blood poison.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is it good for inflation? [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. It is good for all the economic ills of the country. Now, what are we going to do with that under the Senator's amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator says that product is perfectly harmless. Under my amendment it could be seized at once.

Mr. COPELAND. One article.

Mr. BAILEY. And it could be exposed in the courts without the slightest difficulty, and it could be taken off the market. I thought the whole theory of the Senator's multiple seizure was based on injuriousness to health. He has produced here something that would not hurt anybody. It would defraud them. If it does defraud them, there is a law of false pretenses throughout America. There is a law for fraud. There are plenty of remedies there.

It did not enter my mind that the Senator was addressing himself to perfectly harmless medicines, or so-called "medicines", that do nobody any injury. I believe he will admit that the whole multiple-seizure theory is based on the injuriousness of the article; yet he comes here with a perfectly innocent one, as he says, and then he asks what we will do about multiple seizure. He himself has not asked for multiple seizure of that sort of article.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from North Carolina says this so-called "medicine" is not harmful.

Mr. BAILEY. No; I did not say it. I beg the Senator's pardon. The Senator from New York said it was not harmful, and I will take his word for it.

Mr. COPELAND. I say it is not harmful, but it is merely a fraud, and the Senator says it can be taken care of in that way. But let me give just a little leaf out of the book of medical experience.

Suppose my grandchild had pneumonia, and my farmer's wife said, "I know just what to do. I have a remedy." She does not know it is a horse liniment, but she says, "I have a remedy for pneumonia." I do not need to tell the Senator what an invasion of the health of an individual it would be if, at the time this child had pneumonia in a household not informed about such matters, this stuff should be used. It is not harmful in itself; it is not adulterated; but at a time when the patient needs real treatment, she gets some of this horse liniment.

That is not all. There is something about tuberculosis of such a nature that in that disease "hope springs eternal in the human breast." I suppose it is God's providence that it should be so. In the old days, certainly, it was a hopeless disease; and all the time the poor victim thought she was going to get well when everybody else knew she was going to die. But suppose in this modern age, when we have learned what to do in tuberculosis, when we have learned what to do with the incipient case and even the secondary case, a kindly intentioned neighbor brings to the poor patient some horse liniment. The neighbor says, "This will cure you"; and so the patient depends upon the horse liniment until she passes into the stage of the disease where it is hopeless, where death is inevitable: What would it be necessary to do in this case under the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Can the Senator tell me of any medicine whatever which would cure pneumonia?

Mr. COPELAND. I think I know remedies which are helpful in pneumonia.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator know of any remedy which he can guarantee or represent as curing pneumonia?

Mr. COPELAND. No; but I know some that are better than horse liniment.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, if this one is harmless and the other one will do no good, if neither does any good and neither does any harm, where is the difficulty?

Mr. COPELAND. Very well; I will brush pneumonia out of the way and take tuberculosis.

Mr. BAILEY. No; the Senator will not take tuberculosis, because he has a bill here which absolutely excludes tuberculosis. I suggest that the Senator take another illustration.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well; I will take rheumatism. Of course I ought to say, before I get to it, that if the bill should be defeated there would not be anything in the law to protect the public in the case of tuberculosis, but I suppose seizures will go on.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I hate to interrupt the Senator, but I am not trying to defeat the bill, and I have undertaken several times to make that clear. I shall not interrupt again, but I shall greatly appreciate it if the Senator will not interpret my attitude as one of seeking to defeat the bill. The fact is, I told the Senator privately that I was going to vote for the bill, and I think he knows that. I am trying to amend it; I am hoping to improve it; but I am certainly not trying to defeat the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. We will take rheumatism. The modern idea about rheumatism is that it is due to some localized infection in the body. That infection may be in the teeth or the tonsils or the nasal sinuses or the gall bladder or somewhere else. Rheumatism is due to a localized infection. One of the symptoms, one of the evidences that this poison has gotten into the system, is that there may be pain in the joints or in the muscles. It is bad enough to have rheumatism if it stops there; it is bad enough to have the effect of the absorption of pus and germs from a localized infection if it stops in the joints and muscles.

I just happen to think that I had a telegram on Saturday from Arkansas, reading as follows:

> Kindly give best treatment for septic endocarditis, acute, for patient 17 years of age, a girl, whose beginning of the disease was influenza. She has been very ill now for 6 weeks, with fever running from practically normal to as high as 105. Rheumatism has also set up. Local doctors have apparently reached their row's end. Please let me have direct reply at earliest possible convenience.

This is purely spontaneous; I have not thought of this; but this little girl had first a localized infection. Germs that get into the system may set up an inflammation of the lining of the heart, with pus formation in the heart, and speedy death. Suppose that poor little child down in Arkansas—perhaps it is not a good illustration, because the poor child is so sick that her case looks pretty doubtful anyhow—but suppose for her influenza she had horse liniment and nothing else. What she did have did not help her, I suspect. But in cases of rheumatism, certainly the patient who has that trouble needs medical attention, perhaps surgical attention, and the longer he goes on using horse liniment the nearer he is to his grave.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is this horse liniment now sold in commerce?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; under a different label at the moment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Could this horse liniment under this label be sold at the present time in commerce in spite of the Wiley Act?

Mr. COPELAND. It was sold for years in that way in spite of the act.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator will see what I am trying to get at. Is it not a fact that the Department has authority now under the existing law to stop the precise thing about which he is talking?

Mr. COPELAND. It now exercises authority which the Department has very serious doubt about really possessing. That, may I say, is one of the reasons why this bill is here.

If the Senator will bear with me just a moment, while I have it in my mind, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], a little while ago, asked why we did not amend the old Wiley Act. As a matter of fact, the Mead bill in the House sets out to do that, but when it gets through it rewrites the whole act. There have been found so many loopholes, so many vile things that have crept through these openings, that the Department has by violence assumed authority to say, "You must change that branding"; but it has not the power to do so under the law as it exists at present.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, suppose the bill were enacted as it is proposed to be amended by the Senator from North Carolina, in cases of this character I take it the entire hazard could be ended in the course of a week or 10 days by application to the court. Is that correct?

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Why not?

Mr. COPELAND. This is not imminently dangerous to health.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I mean even when one seizure has been made and a prima facie case has been created, why would it not be possible under the measure to get an adjudication promptly and accomplish the net result the Senator is seeking. In other words, is not the only difference the difference of the comparatively few days required for adjudication in a matter which is not imminently dangerous to public health? Do I misstate the Senator?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator, like myself, is a layman, and he is apparently confident of the speedy action of the courts. But in one way or another ways are found to postpone and to further postpone action. That is the reason why, when we come to the next amendment, which will be offered by the Senator from Missouri, I shall show how long it takes to get a cease-and-desist order.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. Did the Senator say that the Department of Agriculture had seized the concoction to which he has been referring violently, and without authority of law?

Mr. COPELAND. It forced the manufacturer of this article to change his label.

Mr. BAILEY. Just to change his label?

Mr. COPELAND. Arbitrarily, without authority of law.

Mr. BAILEY. Without authority of law?

Mr. COPELAND. I think so.

Mr. BAILEY. If that is the case, if the Department has that power in the United States, I do not see any reason for passing any measure at all. We might as well turn the whole thing over to them.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire now to refer to another article. I hold in my hand a sample of a product which, it is advertised, will "scientifically correct obesity", that is, it is a "scientifically correct fat-reducing preparation." Before tomorrow morning I will have half a dozen letters asking me what this is—although I do not see any fat women in the gallery. There is no doubt that this drug will reduce fat. It will burn the flesh off the bones.

There is on the box an imperative label about how to take it. In the advertising, or in the radio appeals, it can be said, "Disregard the label. Take two capsules instead of one."

There is no doubt that the statement on the package that this will reduce fat is true. There is a declarative definition of procedure on the box. It is labeled properly according to law. The Government cannot take that preparation off the market. Yet I have here a letter from a man who lives in Wisconsin who paid $5 for a box of this stuff, and his wife was dead within 20 days.

Senators, in order to protect a vested right, or to keep some one manufacturer from being prevented from placing on the market a preparation or two, is it possible we can propose to put into the pending bill language so broad that not more than one seizure action may be instituted in cases of alleged misbranding except upon order to show cause?

Mr. President, I want the bill so written that those who enforce it may go anywhere and make as many seizures as they deem necessary to make certain that the American people will be protected from the dangers of drugs which are sold under the present law and represented as safe to use.

I cannot say anything more. If the pending amendment shall be agreed to, and then on top of that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri shall be agreed to, I shall be satisfied to continue under the existing law until there shall come a Congress which will give us the protection to which the American people are entitled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Black	Carey	Donahey
Austin	Bone	Clark	Duffy
Bachman	Borah	Connally	Fletcher
Bailey	Brown	Copeland	Frazier
Bankhead	Bulkley	Costigan	George
Barbour	Bulow	Couzens	Gerry
Barkley	Burke	Cutting	Gibson
Bilbo	Byrnes	Dieterich	Gore

Guffey	McKellar	Pope	Thomas, Utah
Hale	McNary	Radcliffe	Townsend
Hastings	Metcalf	Reynolds	Trammell
Hatch	Minton	Robinson	Truman
Hayden	Murphy	Russell	Tydings
Johnson	Murray	Schall	Vandenberg
King	Neely	Schwellenbach	Wagner
La Follette	Norris	Sheppard	Wheeler
Logan	Nye	Smith	White
Lonergan	O'Mahoney	Steiwer
McGill	Pittman	Thomas, Okla.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. COPELAND. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair ask the Senator from North Carolina whether he has changed the form of any of his amendments?

Mr. BAILEY. No, Mr. President; but I have offered a fourth amendment, which is before the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. Not of this group?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; I have offered it with this group.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. Was the order for the yeas and nays entered by the Chair?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order was not entered.

Mr. McNARY. That order is the first thing to be decided upon, and thereafter inquiry may be made concerning the amendments.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asks the Senator from North Carolina if he proposes an amendment in addition to the three which it was agreed should be considered together?

Mr. BAILEY. I offered a fourth amendment, but am informed by the Senator from New York that in order that the fourth amendment may be considered a motion to reconsider the vote by which an amendment was heretofore adopted will have to be made.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the Senate adopted the amendment, on page 45, beginning with line 7 and ending on page 46, line 11, may be reconsidered, with the view of adding the amendment now offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, I offer the fourth amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent, the four amendments may be considered together.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement. I think it is agreed that since the fourth amendment is in, there is provided abundant power of multiple seizures of any article of commerce of the nature of a drug which is injurious to health. Therefore, the other three amendments have simply the effect of extricating the advertising idea and labeling from the theory of adulteration. Have I made that clear? If I have not made it clear I shall be glad to answer any inquiry from any Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina strike out the words, "so adulterated as to be imminently"?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, Mr. President; if the Senator wishes me to add the word "imminently", I will do so. I add the word "imminently" to my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 46, line 3, after the words "that such article is", it is proposed to strike out the words "so adulterated as to be imminently", so as to read:

that such article is dangerous to health.

Mr. COPELAND. Now I ask that the other amendment be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the other amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 45, line 7, after the word "found", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided, however, That not more than one seizure action shall be instituted in cases of alleged misbranding, except upon order to show cause, and then upon a showing by the Secretary that such article is misbranded in manner or degree as to render such article imminently dangerous to health, or that such alleged misbranding has been the basis of a prior judgment in favor of the United States in a criminal prosecution or libel for condemnation proceeding respecting such article under this act: And provided further, That said single seizure action shall, on motion, be removed for trial to a jurisdiction of reasonable proximity to the residence of the claimant of such article.

On page 13, it is proposed to strike out all of lines 19 and 20; and on page 16, between lines 2 and 3, to insert a new subsection to be designated as "(b)", and to read as follows:

If it is dangerous to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising thereof.

Mr. COPELAND. I inquire where the last amendment was to be inserted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 16, between lines 2 and 3, it is proposed to insert a new subsection to be designated "(b)", and to read as follows:

(b) If it is dangerous to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising thereof.

And then, on page 13, it is proposed to strike out all of lines 19 and 20.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, does the Senator transfer all the language in lines 19 and 20, on page 13, to page 16, at the end of the second line?

Mr. BAILEY. It is proposed to transpose that language from the adulteration section to the misbranding section.

Mr. COPELAND. I so understand; and I hope the amendments will be rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] considered as one amendment. On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LOGAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CUTTING. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. Not knowing how he would vote on this amendment, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON. I announce the absence of my colleague the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] on account of illness.

I also announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] are unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] with the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN]; and

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

I am not advised how any of these Senators would vote if present.

I also announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

I also announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote will be recapitulated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to recapitulate the vote and reached the name of Mr. COPELAND.

Mr. COPELAND. I wish to change my vote from "nay" to "yea."

The result was announced—yeas, 44, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—44

Adams	Carey	Hatch	Reynolds
Austin	Clark	King	Russell
Bachman	Connally	Logan	Schall
Bailey	Copeland	Lonergan	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Donahey	McGill	Smith
Barbour	Duffy	McKellar	Steiwer
Bone	George	Metcalf	Trammell
Borah	Gore	Minton	Truman
Bulkley	Guffey	O'Mahoney	Tydings
Burke	Hale	Pittman	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hastings	Radcliffe	White

NAYS—29

Barkley	Fletcher	Murphy	Thomas, Okla.
Bilbo	Frazier	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Black	Gerry	Neely	Townsend
Brown	Gibson	Norris	Wagner
Bulow	Hayden	Nye	Wheeler
Costigan	Johnson	Pope
Couzens	La Follette	Robinson

Capper	Glass	McAdoo	Van Nuys
Caraway	Harrison	McCarran	Walsh
Coolidge	Keyes	Moore
Cutting	Lewis	Norbeck

So Mr. BAILEY's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the so-called "Bailey amendment" was adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Commerce with instructions to report it back on or before Monday, April 15, 1935.

Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate unduly, for we have been talking about the subject matter of this motion ever since the consideration of the bill was started. The failure this morning, the complete inability of Senators who are more familiar than most of the Senators in this body, because they have served on the committee, to agree on what the amendments mean seems to make it perfectly clear that the bill should go back to the committee to be considered paragraph by paragraph, section by section, word by word, in order that Senators may understand what the bill means and what its various provisions are for.

That position, Mr. President, is further sustained by the discussion we had here the other day on the section of the bill which declares a crutch or an electrical apparatus for conditioning air in a chamber or a physician's scale to be drugs; and by the discussion that took place the other day on the section of the bill which provides, as it now stands, that after a regulation by the Secretary of Agriculture shall have been declared invalid by the courts the Secretary of Agriculture shall have authority, without notice, without hearing, and without review, to promulgate the very same regulation, if he pleases, as a temporary regulation for a period of 6 months.

There are other provisions subject to just criticism which have been inserted in the measure, I am certain, without proper consideration. With the proviso that the bill shall be reported back not later than 1 week from today, it seems to me that it is not only in the public interest but in the interest of saving of time of the Senate and of expediting the ultimate passage of legislation on this subject that the bill should go back to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the vote just taken is an index of the attitude of the Senate toward the great problem of the public health, it makes little difference whether the bill is recommitted or returned to the calendar. I should prefer to have it returned to the calendar, because if there are amendments desired which could be worked out during the next week or two, there might be ultimate agreement. We have spent all of last week—the entire week—and today of this week, discussing amendments to this bill. If the bill shall be recommitted everything we have done here so far will have been wasted.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, I will yield to the Senator, certainly.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator does not have to yield if he does not want to.

Mr. COPELAND. I know I do not, but I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK. I will speak in my own time.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I know perfectly well that to recommit the bill means to do over again what we have done. I changed my vote from "nay" to "yea" on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] so that at the proper time I might move a reconsideration of the action just taken on that amendment, because I am convinced that the full import of that action is not realized. Many Senators were not present to listen to the debate. I do not blame them for that; they are busy with other matters; but they were not here during much of the debate, and they do not realize the significance of what has been done. If the bill should ultimately pass with the amendment incorporated in it, the country, so far as the public health is concerned, would be left very much worse off than it is today, and to recommit the bill, I think, would merely mean to defeat it for the session.

Every Senator is busy; we are busy in the Senate Committee on Commerce. There is pending before that committee a proposal of the President to establish subsidies; there is pending there the investigation of the Morro Castle disaster. The committee will soon, within 2 or 3 days, in all probability, have the river and harbor bill before it. So the Committee on Commerce must necessarily be occupied for several weeks with various activities.

I should a great deal rather, if there is a parliamentary way to do it, have the bill go back to the calendar, where it would seem to me the purpose of those who desire to have it recommitted would be served by its postponement for a while, giving time for calm consideration of such amendments as might be desired. To my mind, it would be a much more orderly procedure. I do not think any Senator here is dissatisfied with the amendments which have been added to the bill or to the perfection of the bill so far as we have gone with it. There are fundamental questions involved as to where advertising shall be controlled, but that is a matter which, in the last analysis, Congress will have to settle. So far as the minor points are concerned, matters which have to do with the perfection of the bill, we have now taken action. So I do not wish to see the bill recommitted, but I am perfectly willing to have it go back to the calendar, to be dealt with at a time when it is convenient for the Senate to deal with it. But to send it back with all the amendments we have made would be to make nothing out of what we have accomplished, and, I think, would be a great mistake.

Mr. CLARK obtained the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Missouri will permit the Chair to interrupt him for a moment as to a matter of parliamentary procedure, the Chair will state that, at the request of the Senator from New York, unanimous consent was given to reconsider the vote by which certain committee amendments were adopted so that the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina would be in order. The committee amendments having been amended, without objection, the committee amendments, as amended, are agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I desire to detain the Senate merely for a moment or two. It seems to me that the argument of the Senator from New York on the motion to recommit is as specious as were many of the other arguments he has made on this bill. The alternative proposed by the Senator from New York to the motion to recommit would be to have the bill go back to the calendar, that is, he would have it fall right back into the slough of despond from which some of us would like to rescue it by sending it back to the committee and, for the first time, having it considered in the proper method. As an alternative to sending it back to the committee, and giving it initial consideration, the Senator from New York proposes to put it back on the calendar and resort to private conferences between him and other Members of the Senate or other interested parties on the question of amendments. That process has been going on for 2 years, and the results of that method of consideration are shown in the numerous errors and the very wide difference of opinion amongst those who are interested in the bill as to what it means.

I submit, Mr. President, that time will be conserved and the interests of legislation on this subject will really be forwarded by allowing the bill to go back to the committee, to be taken up in accordance with the ordinary methods usually followed in the case of important bills, paragraph by paragraph and section by section and word by word in consultation with the experts, in order that the meaning of terms may be agreed on, in order that broad questions of policy involved may, at least, be determined by a vote of the committee, with some opportunity afforded to the members of the committee to know what they are talking about. Then the bill can be brought back to the Senate not later than 1 week from today and considered in an orderly manner.

The Senator from New York has referred to the fact that if the bill should go back to the committee, the labor involved in adopting committee amendments in the Senate will be lost. As a matter of fact, just a few weeks ago, after a most important measure had been before the Senate for consideration more than 3 weeks, the majority leader solemnly rose in his place and moved that the joint resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, which motion was adopted unanimously.

I am informed by leading members of the Committee on Appropriations that when the joint resolution got back to the committee exactly 3½ minutes were required for the readoption, as committee amendments, of the amendments which had been incorporated in the bill on the floor, with the single exception of one amendment, which was the principle subject of controversy. If my memory serves me correctly, not more than 1 or 2 hours were consumed in the adoption of all the amendments which had been reported from the committee as committee amendments when the bill was again reported back to the Senate.

As a matter of fact, during the whole week the present bill has been under consideration not more than 2 hours were consumed in the adoption of committee amendments, which, as I said this morning, were amendments offered by the Senator from New York and not one of which had actually been considered in the committee. I submit again that no time would be wasted, but that the passage of the bill would actually be expedited by recommitting it to the committee.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I understood the Senator from Missouri to say that the bill had not been considered in the committee paragraph by paragraph.

Mr. CLARK. It never has been.

Mr. FRAZIER. Why not? I cannot understand why a bill so long before the committee has not been considered paragraph by paragraph so that members of the committee would understand what it means. It seems to me, if it has not been so considered, it should be.

Mr. CLARK. That is the purpose of the motion to recommit.

Mr. ROBINSON obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I understand the parliamentary situation to be that if the bill shall be recommitted, it will go back to the committee in the original form in which it was introduced in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. McNARY. If the bill should go to the calendar, it would go to the calendar in its status quo containing the amendments which have been adopted up to this time in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it should go back to the committee, it would go in the form in which the bill was originally introduced unless the Senate should instruct to the contrary.

Mr. McNARY. Upon the adoption of the motion to recommit, the bill would go back to the committee in the same condition in which it was brought to the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the same condition in which it was originally introduced.

Mr. McNARY. I think there is no question about that.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] has submitted an inquiry to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] as to why the bill was not considered provision by provision and what might be called "hearings" had before the committee. As a member of the subcommittee 2 years ago, I recall that this measure came up, and hearings were had for 3 or 4 days, when literally dozens of people interested were heard. Later on I retired from the subcommittee, not having the time to serve, and a new subcommittee was appointed, and again witnesses were heard.

In the meantime the author of the bill, the chairman of the committee, the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] had given days and weeks to the consideration of the bill, listening to supporters and critics, listening to all who had suggestions to make, and doing everything possible to meet every criticism that might be offered. I say this for the Senator in charge of the bill. I know of no one who has worked more diligently, more faithfully, and more intelligently to carry out what he thought to be the general public view of this very important measure.

As to consideration before the committee, I have been a committeeman for a good many years and a faithful attendant on committees. The bill now before us was heard and considered, I will say to the Senator from North Dakota, in the usual way. It is not often that a bill is taken up and read sentence by sentence or provision by provision, unless someone requests particularly that such a course be followed. In this instance there was a quorum present when the bill came up for consideration, questions were asked, amendments were proposed, inquiries made, and the bill was studied in the usual thoughtful and diligent way.

I know the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is always fair; but I think, in fairness to the chairman of the committee, the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], it should be said that every opportunity was afforded to those who are opposed to the bill to be heard. Every opportunity was afforded to members of the committee, of which I am the ranking Republican member, to ask questions and propose amendments and in every way carefully to study the bill. I think anyone who leaves even an implication that the bill was not considered in the usual way is not treating the subject matter fairly.

I thank the Senator from Arkansas kindly for yielding to me.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. It is entirely true a quorum of the committee was present when the bill was ordered reported. It was a new draft of the bill, which had never been before the committee until the day on which it was reported. It was reported with just such casual and cursory discussion as it was possible to have without taking the bill up in the orderly and customary manner, which I insist should have been done. It was actually reported out of the committee by the votes of at least two Senators who had not been present at any committee meeting since I have been a member of the committee, nearly 2½ years, and by the vote of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], who, if my recollection serves me correctly, had not been present in committee for something over a year.

The only matter in which I am interested involves no reflection on any Senator; but I again submit that it is proper, in view of the very complicated subject matter, to recommit the bill for a brief period for orderly consideration.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to ask the able and distinguished Senator from Missouri if it is not true that the committee sat for more than 2 hours in executive session to consider the bill before it was reported?

Mr. CLARK. That is perfectly correct, but no opportunity was given to take up the bill in order. There was some rather desultory argument and conversation between two Senators. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] then stated to the committee that it had been impossible to examine the bill in detail, and his motion to postpone the report was voted down by a vote of 9 to 6.

Mr. GIBSON. Is it not true that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] offered amendments upon which votes were taken?

Mr. CLARK. Yes; he offered one or two amendments.

Mr. GIBSON. Is it not true that the bill was pretty thoroughly considered?

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that, in my opinion, the bill has never been thoroughly considered in the committee. It has been before the committee a long time, but upon every suggestion for regular consideration of the bill the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the chairman of the committee, passed on to a matter of private conference.

Mr. GIBSON. When the bill was first before the subcommittee more than 100 witnesses were heard, and when it came again before a subcommittee at least 80 witnesses were heard.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator mean when the original Tugwell bill was before the subcommittee? I do not know how many witnesses appeared before the subcommittee on the original so-called "Tugwell bill", the bill which the chairman of the committee stated he had introduced without knowing what was in it, and that he was appalled when he found out what was in it. I know long hearings were had by the full committee on a different bill which the Senator from New York had introduced, and at this session of the Congress hearings were held by a subcommittee, of which the Senator from Vermont and I were both members, on still another bill which the Senator from New York introduced, and about 2 weeks ago the committee reported a still different bill which the Senator from New York had introduced.

Mr. GIBSON. That bill was the result of hearings which were held by the subcommittee of which the Senator from Missouri and I were members, was it not?

Mr. CLARK. Yes; but I invite the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the fact that there was no consideration of any amendments or any discussion of the provisions of the bill whatever in the subcommittee. The subcommittee was appointed by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], solely for the purpose of holding hearings, and certainly there was never any action by the subcommittee. The first intimation I had that hearings had been held or had been printed was to receive some galley proofs from the Senator from New York with a copy of another bill which he intended to introduce, and which I received from him, although I was chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. GIBSON. The subcommittee was not charged with the duty of making a report or recommendations; but is it not true that we heard 67 witnesses, and that no one was refused a hearing?

Mr. CLARK. We heard a very large number of witnesses. I do not know how many we heard. I never counted them.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, having yielded to all who have asked me to do so, let me take just a minute to express my view of this motion.

Considering the history of the bill, it does not seem to me that the motion to recommit should be approved.

This bill, in different forms, has been pending before the Senate for about 2 years. It has been revised many times; and it will be recalled that on one occasion, after the bill had been considered for some time, a motion to recommit was made, and the bill was sent back to the committee.

Mr. COPELAND. No, Mr. President; the bill was introduced in June 1933, and it came to the Senate so late in the session that there was not time for its consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON. It was considered in the Senate for a time; that is correct. Then the Senate proceeded with the consideration of other matters, and the bill automatically went back to the committee.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, what happened was that the bill was taken up for consideration in the Senate on the day before a special order was to go into effect for the consideration of the bill authorizing the President to make reciprocal trade agreements; and the food and drug bill was automatically superseded on the next day by that special order.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is true. The Senate proceeded to the consideration of another measure, and the food and drug bill finally went back to the committee. It went to the calendar first, but at the end of the session it went back to the committee, so it has been in and out of committee for about 2 years.

I make no complaint about that, because unquestionably there are many controversial subject matters in the bill; but it does seem that after having proceeded so far as we have, and disposed of all amendments, we should either finally dispose of the measure or merely give a further opportunity for the composition of differences which are very marked and notable.

I do not find it consistent with my judgment to spend practically a week in considering legislation, dispose of all amendments that are offered, and then automatically strip the bill of all those amendments by sending it back to committee.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Did not the Senator do that very thing in the case of the work-relief joint resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; but the Senator from Missouri knows the reason for the action taken in that case. If he does not, I will now state it to him.

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator that I was entirely in sympathy with that action.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; but I shall now state, for the Senator's information, the reason why the work-relief joint resolution was recommitted.

We had disposed of a large number of amendments. When the Senate agreed to an amendment which every Senator understood would work a rejection of the joint resolution through Executive veto, I made the motion to recommit for the purpose of giving the committee and the Senate a further opportunity to eliminate the provision which we knew would accomplish the defeat of the proposed legislation.

That condition does not exist in this case, and, in my judgment, there is no occasion for the recommittal of the bill. In all fairness to the members of the committee, it does not seem to me it can be maintained that this bill has been recklessly or improvidently reported to the Senate. The evidence shows, insofar as the Senate has been made acquainted with it in the discussions here, that every opportunity was afforded to members of the committee to offer amendments in the committee. That is the customary procedure. Any member of the committee having jurisdiction of the bill could have proposed his amendments before the committee. That not being done in some instances, we take it for granted that the opportunity has been given and exercised on the floor of the Senate, and we have completed the consideration of the amendments. Now, we are asked to undo, by a single motion, all that has been done, and to go back where we were 2 years ago, and start all over again.

For myself, I do not find it consistent to support the motion.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], in charge of the bill, to say that if it could be so arranged he would be glad to have the bill postponed for a time.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes, Mr. President; I should be very happy to have that course taken. I feel that today we are hardly in the mood to deal justly or fairly or calmly with many of the amendments, particularly with some really vital amendments. I should be perfectly willing to have the bill go back to the calendar, and then take it up at some suitable time when we have all had a chance to talk about it, perhaps even to talk it over in the committee. We have the bill in at least 95-percent good form at the present time, and I think it would be a pity to send it back and then have to go over it again.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when the bill came before the Senate I became interested, particularly because of those interested in growing fruits and vegetables in my section of the country; but I ascertained that they were telegraphing me about one bill, and that we had before us another bill. It has been very difficult for me to know precisely what they have in mind; and I should like either to have this bill go back to the committee, or to have it postponed until we can ascertain something about the views of those who are interested in it from a practical standpoint. I do not want more delay than is necessary to act intelligently on the facts as they apply to the bill. I do not wish to send it back to the committee if that can be avoided, and it seems to me it can be avoided by taking a little more time.

THIRTY-HOUR WEEK FOR LABOR

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to make a suggestion for the attention of the Senator from New York and the Senator from Missouri, particularly in the light of the statement just made by the Senator from Idaho.

The District of Columbia appropriation bill is ready for consideration. I suggest that the Senator who is to be in charge of that bill move to proceed to its consideration. That will displace the unfinished business, and we can return to it whenever we are ready to do so.

Mr. BLACK and Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, may I ask whether or not I now have the floor in my own right?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has.

Mr. BLACK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 87, Calendar No. 381, known as "the 30-hour-week bill."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not think the Senate is ready at this time to take up that bill. In the event the motion is voted down, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] will move to proceed with the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. BLACK. I may state that if the Senate shall vote to take up this bill I will agree to lay it aside temporarily for the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 87.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I had hoped the Senator from Alabama would not have the Senate take up this bill until after the completion of our hearings with regard to the N. R. A. It seems to me that if the N. R. A. is to be renewed in some form or other the question of hours ought to be considered at that time, rather than by taking up a separate bill. I had hoped, therefore, that the Senator from Alabama would do what I supposed he was going to do, namely, discuss the matter with respect to a renewal of the N. R. A.

Mr. BLACK. In reply to the Senator's statement, I will say that, in my judgment, the 30-hour-week bill should be passed whether a renewal of the N. R. A. is considered or not. The 30-hour-week bill will provide a general reduction of hours, and it is my belief that without a general reduction of hours in all industries we shall not receive the benefit that we should. I further believe that it is not fair to some industries to be compelled to compete with others working much longer hours; and I hope the Senate will agree to consider the bill at this time.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Does a motion to take up another bill take precedence over my motion to recommit?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the opinion of the Chair.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 87. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it, and the motion is rejected.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I shall ask for the yeas and nays. Before doing so, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	Hayden	Reynolds
Ashurst	Connally	Johnson	Robinson
Austin	Coolidge	King	Russell
Bachman	Costigan	La Follette	Schall
Bailey	Couzens	Logan	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Cutting	Lonergan	Sheppard
Barbour	Dickinson	McGill	Smith
Barkley	Dieterich	McKellar	Steiwer
Bilbo	Donahey	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Black	Duffy	Metcalf	Thomas, Utah
Bone	Fletcher	Minton	Townsend
Borah	Frazier	Murphy	Trammell
Brown	George	Murray	Truman
Bulkley	Gerry	Neely	Vandenberg
Bulow	Gibson	Norris	Wagner
Burke	Gore	Nye	Walsh
Byrd	Guffey	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Byrnes	Hale	Pittman	White
Capper	Harrison	Pope
Carey	Hatch	Radcliffe

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, has a yea-and-nay vote been ordered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have not been ordered.

Mr. COUZENS. I desire to say a few words in connection with the 30-hour-week bill before the Senate shall vote whether or not to take it up.

When this measure was before the Senate sometime ago, and before the N. I. R. A. bill was enacted into law, I voted for the 30-hour-week bill, but I shall not vote to pass it or to take it up until the Finance Committee of the Senate shall have concluded its investigation into the operations of the N. I. R. A. and decided whether there shall be a renewal of the N. I. R. A.

The Committee on Finance has been holding extensive hearings with respect to how N. I. R. A. has affected certain industries. Statements have been made to the effect that there is a shortage of skilled labor in some sections and not in others. A great deal of information has been collected since the 30-hour-week bill previously passed the Senate.

I think, out of courtesy to the Committee on Finance, which is investigating the operations of the N. I. R. A., which, in itself, has very close relation to the hours of work, that we should not proceed with the 30-hour-week bill at this time. I hope the Senate will not take it up until the Finance Committee shall have concluded its investigation and made recommendations with respect to the renewal of N. I. R. A.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I do not care to go into a discussion of the merits of the bill at this time. I could, of course, remind the Senate that we are still feeding 20,000,000 people; that the only way to put them to work in private industry, seemingly, is through the adoption of shorter hours. I shall not go into the merits, however, at this time, except to state that if there is any scarcity of labor in any line of business, there is a scarcity in very few lines; and if there should be a scarcity of labor, it would be somewhat of a repetition of the days when labor received a fair wage and the country was moving forward.

Several Senators have stated to me that there is an idea in the Chamber that a vote to take up the 30-hour-week bill at this time means a vote against the pure food and drug bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall be delighted to have some other bill taken up which will result in returning to the calendar the bill of which I am in charge; so no one is justified in voting against taking up the Senator's bill on the ground that such a vote would hurt the Senator from New York.

Mr. BLACK. In order that we may clear the matter up, I understand that the Senator from New York states here on the floor that a vote to take up the 30-hour-week bill is not a vote against the pure food and drug bill, but is in line with what the Senator wants done.

Mr. COPELAND. As I see it, without criticizing any Senator, it would be in the public interest to take up some other bill.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, did not the Senate vote on the question of proceeding to the consideration of the bill referred to by the Senator from Alabama, and did not the Chair declare the result of the vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair being of opinion that the noes were overwhelmingly in the majority, declared that the noes had it, and that the motion was rejected.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I had the floor, and was seeking at the time to ask for a yea-and-nay vote. I did not hear the Chair make any such statement. I have not heard anyone else suggest that the Chair made any such statement.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in view of the statement just made by the Senator from Alabama, I will not make a point of order against his request, but I will state that I agree with the Senator from Michigan that this is not an opportune time to proceed to the consideration of the 30-hour-week bill. I do not believe the Senate should attempt to dispose of that measure at this juncture.

The Sentator from Alabama has referred to the fact that the Senator from New York, in order to make some adjustments, wishes to get away for a time from the food and drug bill. I had already indicated, before the Senator from Alabama took the floor, that the desire of the Senator from New York would be conformed to by our proceeding to the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill should the Senator in charge of that bill make the motion.

Mr. President, I know that there are difficulties associated with the consideration of the 30-hour-week bill at this time, and I believe that the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan is a sound one, a wise one. The Committee on Finance, as I understand, has been working on the subject matter of the extension of the N. R. A., which is somewhat related to the 30-hour-week question, and is working with great diligence. It seems to me that an opportunity should be afforded to consider these questions in relation with each other, the 30-hour-week bill and the N. R. A., and I express the hope that the Senate will not take up the 30-hour-week bill at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 87, which the clerk will state by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 87) to prevent the shipment in interstate commerce of certain articles and commodities, in connection with which persons are employed more than 5 days per week or 6 hours per day, and prescribing certain conditions with respect to purchases and loans by the United States, and codes, agreements, and licenses under the National Industrial Recovery Act.

Mr. BLACK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on a previous roll call, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CUTTING. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON. I announce the absence of my colleague, the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] on account of illness.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] with the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO].

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN].

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON].

I am not advised how any of these Senators, if present, would vote on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 56, as follows:

YEAS—21

Adams	Capper	Neely	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Costigan	Norris	Trammell
Bilbo	Frazier	Nye	Wheeler
Black	La Follette	Pope
Bone	Murphy	Reynolds
Borah	Murray	Schall

NAYS—56

Ashurst	Connally	Harrison	Radcliffe
Austin	Coolidge	Hatch	Robinson
Bachman	Couzens	Hayden	Russell
Bailey	Dickinson	Johnson	Sheppard
Barbour	Dieterich	King	Smith
Barkley	Donahey	Logan	Steiwer
Brown	Duffy	Lonergan	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Fletcher	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	George	McKellar	Townsend
Burke	Gerry	McNary	Truman
Byrd	Gibson	Metcalf	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Gore	Minton	Wagner
Carey	Guffey	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Clark	Hale	Pittman	White

NOT VOTING—18

Caraway	Hastings	McAdoo	Shipstead
Copeland	Keyes	McCarran	Tydings
Cutting	Lewis	Moore	Van Nuys
Davis	Long	Norbeck
Glass	Maloney	Overton

So Mr. BLACK's motion was rejected.

Mr. BARKLEY subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to state that, insofar as I am concerned, my vote on the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] is not to be taken as an indication of my attitude on the merits of the bill. I am sure every Senator here has the same attitude. However, I merely voted against taking it up at this time and displacing other legislation. When the bill comes up for consideration on its merits I shall consider it on its merits.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to say that my position is similar to that of the Senator from Kentucky. I have a great deal of sympathy with the bill presented by the Senator from Alabama but, in my judgment, this is not the time to bring it up.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 3973, the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3973) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will read the bill.

The chief clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 7, after the words "in addition", to strike out "$5,700,000" and insert "$8,317,500", so as to read:

That in order to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, any revenue (not including the proportionate share of the United States in any revenue arising as the result of the expenditure of appropriations made for the fiscal year 1924 and prior fiscal years) now required by law to be credited to the District of Columbia and the United States in the same proportion that each contributed to the activity or source from whence such revenue was derived shall be credited wholly to the District of Columbia, and, in addition, $8,317,500 is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be advanced July 1, 1935, and all of the remainder out of the combined revenues of the District of Columbia, namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "General expenses—Executive office", on page 4, line 2, after the word "services", to strike out "$35,390" and insert "$37,390"; and in line 3, after the words "in all", to strike out "$35,690" and insert "$37,690", so as to read:

Plumbing inspection division: For personal services, $37,390; two members of plumbing board at $150 each; in all, $37,690.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Alcoholic Beverage Control Board", on page 5, at the end of line 9, to strike out "$37,650" and insert "$40,150", so as to read:

For personal services, street-car and bus transportation, telephone service, not exceeding $500 for the purchase of samples, and other necessary contingent and miscellaneous expenses, $40,150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 22, to increase the appropriation for personal services in the office of superintendent of weights, measures, and markets from $46,600 to $53,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of Superintendent of Weights, Measures, and Markets", on page 5, line 24, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$500" and insert "$1,000", and on page 6, line 9, after the word "vehicle", to strike out "$8,542" and insert "$9,042", so as to read:

For contingent expenses, and maintenance and repairs to markets, including not to exceed $1,000 for purchase of commodities and for personal services in connection with investigation and detection of sales of short weight and measure, maintenance and repair of nonpassenger-carrying motor vehicles, not to exceed $141 (to be immediately available as an additional amount for the purchase and exchange of one nonpassenger-carrying motor vehicle for which $530 was provided in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1935, and not to exceed $671 for the purchase and exchange of one nonpassenger-carrying motor vehicle, $9,042.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether there is in the bill an appropriation for the purpose of taking care of the tubercular children in the District.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. How much was the appropriation?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The committee was most liberal in making appropriation for that purpose, providing for it all the money the Bureau of the Budget approved.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask if the Committee on the District of Columbia, or any subcommittee thereof, has made any special or particular investigation of the question of taking care of the tubercular children of the District of Columbia, and if the committee is satisfied with the manner in which such work is being carried on?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am advised by the clerk of the committee that the Senate committee gave the District not only what the Budget approved but all the Commissioners asked for in the first instance. On page 66 the House gave the District $65,000 for salaries, and the Senate committee increased that to $89,890. In the second item, for support, which includes fuel, provisions, and so forth, the Senate committee increased the item from $45,000 to $78,110. In the last item, for the purchase of furniture and equipment, the amount was increased from $30,000 to $40,000.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. For the first time since I have been a member of this committee, I have the feeling that we really have done something for tubercular children and others of the District. We have the money here to open the new tuberculosis wing at Gallinger Hospital. There was no provision made by the House for that purpose. The building was finished and equipped, but there was no personnel provided, but we have inserted that provision in the bill.

More than that, the various hospitals where patients so afflicted are taken care of have been aided. More than that, the new and very efficient health officer of the District came before us and pointed out the necessity of having more District workers and doctors and nurses in connection with the tuberculosis clinic. So I think I may say, confirmatory of what the Senator in charge of the bill has said, that the tuberculosis problem has been dealt with more generously and effectively than ever before, and I should say we have gone quite as far as we could or should go at this time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not want to be concluded by anything that the Senator from New York says upon that subject. I will say, however, that my attention was called to some facts and conditions which I do not care to state, because I do not have them authentically given, which indicated to me and to the people who were speaking to me that the expenditures along this line, in many respects, have not been carried on with intelligence. Did the District of Columbia make arrangements for the purchase of large hospital grounds outside the city?

Mr. COPELAND. That was the Children's Hospital; yes.

Mr. BORAH. For tubercular children?

Mr. COPELAND. For tubercular children; but there is also, the Senator will bear in mind, the tuberculosis hospital at Gallinger for adults.

Mr. BORAH. I am speaking now particularly with reference to the investigation which was made for the purchase of a tubercular children's hospital outside the city. Has the Senator investigated that matter?

Mr. COPELAND. I cannot say that I have. We have the testimony of Mrs. Grant and the Commissioner of Public Welfare and of others who are interested in the problem, and certainly we found no evidence in their testimony that there was any failure to proceed along proper lines.

It has not been brought to my attention that there is any such failure. If the Senator has anything specific, I should be glad to know what it is because of my interest in the problem.

Mr. BORAH. I have not anything specific of my own knowledge. I have only the information which has been conveyed to me. If the Senator from New York and the Senator in charge of the bill have satisfied themselves and are content, I shall not push the matter further. It was my desire only to call it to their attention.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, speaking for myself alone, I find it wholly impossible for me to make such investigation of District affairs as would be necessary to enable me to pass upon these questions, and exercise what judgment I have. Speaking for myself, I am trying to help the District Commissioners to manage the affairs of the city as they think they should be managed. If they are not the proper ones to govern the city, then a mistake has been made somewhere.

When the Commissioners, after consideration of the entire resources of the city, its revenues and needs, and based upon that information, make request of the Budget for a certain sum of money to take care of existing conditions, and then the Senate committee gives the amount of money the Budget asks, I think the Senate is doing what it should do to assist the Commissioners in operating the District. Speaking for myself, that is the policy I am pursuing. In this particular case we did give the Commissioners the amount of money they requested of the Budget in the first instance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 5, line 24, and page 6, line 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 6, at the end of line 16, to increase the appropriation for personal services in the municipal architect's office from $46,920 to $48,720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Utilities Commission", on page 7, line 3, after the word "services", to strike out "$69,000" and insert "$94,000", so as to read:

For two commissioners, people's counsel, and for other personal services, $94,000, of which amount not to exceed $5,000 may be used for the employment of expert services by contract or otherwise and without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, at the end of line 22, to increase the appropriation for personal services in the department of insurance from $20,820 to $24,620.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, at the end of line 5, to increase the appropriation for personal services in the office of the recorder of deeds from $93,060 to $104,580.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Recorder of deeds", on page 10, line 14, after the word "expenses", to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$12,500", so as to read:

For miscellaneous and contingent expenses, including telephone service, printing, binding, rebinding, repairing, and preservation of records; typewriters, towels, towel service, furniture and equipment and repairs thereto; books of reference, law books and periodicals, street-car tokens, postage; not exceeding $100 for rest room for sick and injured employees and the equipment of and medical supplies for said rest room, and all other necessary incidental expenses, $12,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, at the end of line 15, to increase the appropriation for rent of offices of the recorder of deeds from $10,000 to $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingent and miscellaneous expenses", on page 10, line 22, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$2,000"; and on page 11, line 6, after the word "offices" and the semicolon, to strike out "$26,000" and insert "$32,000", so as to read:

For checks, books, law books, books of reference, periodicals, newspapers, stationery; surveying instruments and implements; drawing materials; binding, rebinding, repairing, and preservation of records; ice; repairs to pound and vehicles; traveling expenses not to exceed $2,000, including payment of dues and traveling expenses in attending conventions when authorized by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; expenses authorized by law in connection with the removal of dangerous or unsafe and insanitary buildings, including payment of a fee of $6 per diem to each member of board of survey, other than the inspector of buildings, while actually employed on surveys of dangerous or unsafe buildings; and other general necessary expenses of District offices; $32,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 13, after the word "printing", to strike out "and/or" and insert "and"; in line 16, after the name "District of Columbia", to insert a comma and "or by the purchasing officer and the auditor for the District of Columbia acting for such Commissioners"; and in line 17 to strike out the colon and the proviso "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for expenditure unless such printing and binding is done at the Government Printing Office", so as to read:

For printing and binding, $43,000: Provided, That no part of the appropriations contained in this act shall be available for expenditure for printing and binding unless the need for such expenditure shall have been specifically approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia or by the purchasing officer and the auditor for the District of Columbia acting for such Commissioners.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, referring to the amendment just stated, the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], Chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, asked me to make an inquiry about it. The provision to which I particularly refer is "that no part of this appropriation shall be available for expenditure unless such printing and binding is done at the Government Printing Office." That proviso was adopted by the House of Representatives, and the Senate Committee on Appropriations proposes to strike it out. May I inquire why that change was suggested?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the following facts were presented to the committee: The District of Columbia has what it calls a "printing establishment." I think it is largely a mimeographing outfit, but a large amount of printing is done by it. If this language were retained in the bill, the District would have to dispense with that so-called "printing establishment." We were advised in the committee that if the language were not stricken out we should have to add $20,000 to cover the necessary expense of the printing which is now done by this so-called "printing establishment" of the District.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I have here a statement from the Public Printer which directly challenges that view. Let me read just an extract from the letter:

The Comptroller General found, after an investigation of the District plant and the records kept in connection therewith, that there was no basis in fact for the statement that it would cost the District more to have its work done at the Government Printing Office; for, as a matter of fact, the records kept by the District did not contain all the elements of cost entering into the completed job. The prices quoted as representing the cost to the District of producing certain jobs—and which were compared by the witness with Government Printing Office prices to the apparent detriment of the Government Printing Office—had no relationship to the actual cost of producing the job; instead of being based on cost the figures quoted by the witness were, to a large extent, taken from an old confidential price list gotten out by the Government Printing Office for the information of its officials only. The Comptroller General brought out the further fact that even though the costs were determinable no comparisons would be in order as the work was of a different class—that referred to by the District being merely a duplication by multilith, or offset process, of jobs that had been previously set up in type and printed in the regular way. The original composition—or typesetting, proofreading, etc.—is the expensive part of the job, and, of course, is a necessary operation preceding any duplication by offset or other process.

Apparently the District has been doing a certain amount of duplicating work and trying to show that it was done cheaper than could be done at the Government Printing Office; but the facts submitted to the committee do not appear to be complete. The Public Printer, therefore, questions the accuracy of the statement that there would be a saving to the District of $20,000 if the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, my attention was called to the amendment by the Public Printer, and I spoke to the Senator from Arizona about it, apprehending that I might be out of the Chamber when the matter came up, and requesting that he look after it.

I ask to have the letter to me and the letter from which the Senator from Arizona quoted inserted in the RECORD in full.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters are as follows:

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 4, 1935.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Chairman Joint Committee on Printing,
Care of United States Senate Post Office,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In accordance with the instructions of the Public Printer, I am enclosing herewith a copy of his letter to Senator COPELAND, which was discussed with you yesterday.

Senator COPELAND, in his letter of March 18, called the Public Printer's attention to certain statements made before the Committee on Appropriations, during the hearings on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, by Mr. Gelbman, who is in charge of the printing work for the District of Columbia. Briefly, Mr. Gelbman advised the committee (1) that he had effected quite a saving by doing much of the District's printing work in a print shop which he had set up in the District Building, as the cost of producing the work there was much cheaper than it was at the Government Printing Office; and (2) that the Government Printing Office prices were much higher than commercial prices. He attributed the alleged high cost of printing at the Government Printing Office chiefly to the fact that the Government Printing Office was equipped with obsolete machinery. The letter to Senator COPELAND shows the incorrectness of these statements.

As an apparent result of Gelbman's unrefuted testimony, the Senate Appropriations Committee struck out the following proviso that had been inserted by the House in the District of Columbia appropriation bill (H. R. 3973):

"Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for expenditure unless such printing and binding is done at the Government Printing Office."

A copy of the Senate report is attached.

If the action of the committee in deleting the above proviso is allowed to stand in the Senate, it may be that the House will instruct its conferees to insist that the matter be restored to the bill.

If you desire any additional information I will be glad to furnish it.

Respectfully,

R. H. HERRELL,
Superintendent of Accounts and Budget Officer.

APRIL 2, 1935.

Hon. ROYAL S. COPELAND,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. COPELAND: I want to take this opportunity to thank you for your letter of March 18, 1935, calling to my attention certain statements made by a witness who appeared before the committee holding hearings on the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia, and for your comments and suggestions in connection therewith.

I believe you would be interested to know that after this District of Columbia witness made practically the same charges, but in more detail, during the hearings on the District bill in the House, Congressman LOUIS LUDLOW, chairman of the legislative subcommittee, asked the Comptroller General and the Public Printer for their comments on his testimony. [The Comptroller General found, after an investigation of the District plant and the records kept in connection therewith, that there was no basis in fact for the statement that it would cost the District more to have its work done at the Government Printing Office, for as a matter of fact the records kept by the District did not contain all the elements of cost entering into the completed job. The prices quoted as representing the cost to the District of producing certain jobs—and which were compared by the witness with Government Printing Office prices to the apparent detriment of the Government Printing Office—had no relationship to the actual cost of producing the job; instead of being based on cost the figures quoted by the witness were, to a large extent, taken from an old confidential price list gotten out by the Government Printing Office for the information of its officials only. The Comptroller General brought out the further fact that even though the costs were determinable, no comparisons would be in order as the work was of a different class—that referred to by the District being merely the duplication by the multilith (or offset process) of jobs that had been previously set up in type and printed in the regular way. The original composition, or typesetting, proofreading, etc., is the expensive part of the job and, of course, is a necessary operation preceding any duplication by offset or other process.]

In my reply to Congressman LUDLOW's request for comments on the testimony of this witness, I did not refer to his comparison of Government Printing Office and District of Columbia prices for the duplicating work in question, as I considered that thoroughly covered by the Comptroller General as indicated above, and therefore confined my comments to his general allegation that Government Printing Office prices were much higher than commercial prices. A few paragraphs of my report are quoted below as follows:

"It would seem that for years there has been an effort to discredit the Government Printing Office prices by very general statements of excessive costs. Frequent check-ups by this Office have shown that such statements are not justified, as Government Printing Office prices are not generally higher than the prices published by reputable associations of master printers; whether or not the commercial printer follows these published scales is a matter for his decision at the time he is requested to bid on a job, and is governed by the condition in his particular shop at that time. For this reason no general statement that prices charged by the Government Printing Office are higher, or lower, than outside prices is true. The departments may in some instances be able to get a particular job printed at a lower figure by a commercial printer, while other jobs would unquestionably cost them more if carried to an outside firm.

"Comparisons of prices for printing are often misleading. Even in cases where bids are requested, it often develops that if the work is performed by the low bidder it costs as much or more than the high bid, due to the sometimes excessive charges made by low bidder for extras—such as changes in the original manuscript or authors' alterations that are not included in the original contract. It is a well-known fact in the printing industry that many bids are submitted low with the idea that any loss will be made up by excessive charges for extras.

"While, as stated, comparisons in prices are often misleading, the Public Printer decided in 1918, when departments and bureaus were having a large amount of printing and binding done commercially, to make an official inquiry into the matter for the purpose of determining, as definitely as possible, whether or not the Government Printing Office prices were excessive. At his request President Woodrow Wilson issued instructions to all departments and bureaus to send to the Public Printer copies of the jobs that they had secured commercially, with the prices paid therefor; departments thereupon submitted about 400 such samples, all of which were at once priced at the then current fixed scale for Government Printing Office work. From this survey it was found that 95 percent of the commercial charges submitted exceeded what the Government Printing Office would have charged for the particular jobs by from 2 percent to as high as 471 percent; the Government Printing Office was found to be slightly higher on about 5 percent of the work.

"Following the above survey, the act of March 1, 1919 (40 Stat. 1270), was passed. Since that date the departments have, of course, procured their printing from the Government Printing Office, and it is therefore not possible to make as dependable a comparison as that shown in the above statement.

"In view of the fact that actual prices paid for printing in general cannot be ascertained, the Public Printer has selected 25 jobs produced by this Office, priced them by the scale outlined in the Franklin Printers' Catalogue, and has compared the prices thus arrived at with the prices actually charged by this Office. The jobs selected include briefs, pamphlets, circulars, ruled sheets, printed forms, etc., every effort being made to select a wide variety of work. The Franklin scale represents a composite commercial pricing scale and is the latest and most up-to-date pricing list issued for the guidance of the printing trade. But it must be remembered that it is for their guidance only, for, as stated, in the great majority of cases the price quoted is governed by the conditions existing in the particular shop at the particular time the request for an estimate is received.

"This comparison developed that the Government Printing Office is higher on 5 of these jobs, lower on 20, and on the total 25 jobs the Franklin Printers' Catalogue is higher by 20.8 percent."

With reference to the statement of the witness before your committee that the high cost of printing at the Government Printing Office is due to the use of obsolete machinery, I wish to advise that the machinery now in use—with a few minor exceptions that are gradually being corrected—is as modern and up to date as can be economically used in the present buildings. We have as many high-speed machines now as our present aisle and working space will permit us to use with any degree of efficiency. It doesn't pay to have high-speed, expensive machinery lying idle, because the work cannot be conveyed to or away from it as rapidly as the machine can turn it out. It is also more economical in some instances to use slower machinery or even hand work where the job is small and the number of copies ordered are few than to use the high-speed presses referred to by the witness. In view of these facts, I cannot concur in the statement of the witness that obsolete machinery unduly adds to the cost of printing at the Government Printing Office, for, as stated, our outstanding need is space—a more modern and up-to-date plant.

With this need in mind and in my effort to correct it, I prepared a report on the conditions of the buildings housing the Government Printing Office, a copy of which is enclosed, and forwarded the same to the Speaker of the House of Representatives under date of January 25, 1935. Please note the letter from the engineering department of the District of Columbia quoted on page 4 of the report, particularly the line, "These three buildings are an extreme fire hazard", and, from the equipment standpoint, pages 24, 25, and 26 of the report.

I want to again thank you for your letter of March 18 and to assure you that I will deeply appreciate any assistance that you may be able to give me in my effort to modernize the plant and equipment of the Government Printing Office.

Respectfully,

A. E. GIEGENGACK,
Public Printer.

Mr. FLETCHER. The provision in question has been in District appropriation bills heretofore enacted. It is very important that the public printing be done at the Government Printing Office. They are equipped to do it and the charges for the work done there are not in excess of charges for similar work done on the outside. It is a mistaken idea that the Government will be saved any money by eliminating the provisions. I am assured by the Public Printer, as I believe the Senator from Arizona stated, that the duplicating work done by the District is not the kind of work that it is expected to have done. The work to be done as provided in the bill can be done at the Public Printing Office and will not cost any more than it would cost anywhere else.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, under such circumstances, would it not be wiser to let the amendment go to conference and let it be worked out there after investigation? It seems to me this is one of the cases that ought to go to conference.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the letter from the Public Printer settles the question. I do not believe it ought to go to conference. I think the amendment ought to be rejected.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, replying to the suggestion made by the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Arizona, let me submit to the Senate the representations made to our committee. I am now reading from such representations as were submitted by the District Commissioners:

The operation of the central duplicating system, which has been in operation since October 1, 1934, up to the present time, shows that the District is able to do its printing work at a cost of from 25 to 40 percent under the prices charged for the similar printing by the Government Printing Office.

Of course, if that saving could be made, the committee was impressed with that statement.

There is another item to be considered. At the reformatory the District Commissioners maintain a sort of printing establishment where men sent to the reformatory are taught the printing art. If this provision shall be stricken from the bill, that institution's printing plant likewise will have to be closed. If it be of any value to teach men at the reformatory printing in any of its branches, whatever value there is might be lost.

I sincerely trust the committee amendment may be agreed to. If there is objection to it, we can take it to conference and adjust the matter there.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I believe the Senator is mistaken about any danger of closing the printing establishment at the reformatory and stopping any work now being done there. That is a matter which under the law is entirely within the jurisdiction of the Joint Committee on Printing. We have permitted this printing. Last year the printing done in the field amounted to more than $2,000,000; so that we are not preventing operations such as the Senator mentions, but we are taking care of them. The Joint Committee on Printing will see to that.

We have no need to legislate with the contemplation that we are going to deprive people of the facilities which the Senator mentions. That matter is entirely in the hands of the Joint Committee on Printing, and heretofore we have not hesitated to grant permits in those circumstances. Therefore there is no danger of that situation arising through the rejection of this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, before we leave that matter, while it is before us, on page 11, line 11, I move to strike out "$43,000" and insert "$63,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Central garage", on page 13, line 6, after the word "equipment", to strike out "$22,500" and insert "$25,000", so as to read:

For postage for strictly official mail matter, including the rental of postage meter equipment, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 18, to insert:

EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

For personal services and miscellaneous and contingent expenses required for maintaining a public employment service for the District of Columbia, $4,640.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Free Public Library", on page 16, line 15, after the word "librarian" to strike out "$333,870" and insert "$343,550"; so as to read:

For personal services, and for substitutes and other special and temporary services, including extra services on Sundays, holidays, and Saturday half holidays, at the discretion of the librarian, $343,550.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 18, after the word "publications" to strike out "$60,000" and insert "$70,000"; so as to read:

Miscellaneous: For books, periodicals, newspapers, and other printed material, including payment in advance for subscription books, and society publications, $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 9, after the word "vehicle" to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$32,625"; so as to read:

For maintenance, alterations, repairs, fuel, lighting, fitting up buildings, care of grounds, maintenance of motor delivery vehicles, and other contingent expenses, including not to exceed $800 for purchase and exchange of one motor delivery vehicle, $32,625.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 3, to insert:

For the purchase of street and road materials, rental of equipment, and other expenses in connection with Highway Department work projects performed through force account or day labor, $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 9, after the word "bridges" to insert a comma and "including not to exceed $15,000 for surveys and engineering investigations of the bridge in line of Pennsylvania Avenue over the Anacostia River and", and in line 12, after the word "vehicles" to strike out "$65,000" and insert "$80,000"; so as to read:

For construction, maintenance, operation, and repair of bridges, including not to exceed $15,000 for surveys and engineering investigations of the bridge in line of Pennsylvania Avenue over the Anacostia River and including maintenance of non-passenger-carrying motor vehicles, $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 21, after the word "purchase", to strike out "and/or" and insert "and", so as to read:

For beginning the construction of a viaduct or bridge and approaches thereto in line of Michigan Avenue NE., pursuant to authority contained in the act approved February 12, 1931 (Public, No. 618, 71st Cong.), as now located on the permanent system of highways of the District of Columbia, between Brookland Avenue and Perry Street NE., over the tracks and right-of-way of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., in accordance with plans and profiles of said work to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, including the purchase and condemnation under chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, and amendments thereto, of necessary land in accordance with the highway plan, construction of and changes in sewer and water mains, personal services, and engineering and incidental expenses, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 4, after the figures "$175,000", to strike out the colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That one-half of the total cost thereof shall be borne and paid by the said railroad companies, their successors and assigns, to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia, to the credit of the District of Columbia, and the same shall be a valid and subsisting lien against the franchises and property of the said railroad companies, and shall constitute a legal indebtedness of said companies in favor of the District of Columbia, and the said lien may be enforced in the name of the District of Columbia by a bill in equity brought by the said Commissioners in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, or by any other lawful proceeding against the said railroad companies", so as to read:

For the widening, altering, and strengthening of the existing viaduct and approaches in the line of Benning Road NE., between Kenilworth and Minnesota Avenues over the tracks and right-of-way of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., in accordance with plans and profiles to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, including construction of and changes in sewer and water mains, personal services, and engineering and incidental expenses, $175,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 15, to insert:

For the construction of a viaduct or bridge and approaches thereto in line of Franklin Street NE., over the tracks of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, in accordance with plans and profiles to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, including construction of and changes in sewer and water mains, personal services, and engineering and incidental expenses, $200,000: Provided, That one-half of the total cost thereof shall be borne and paid by the said railroad company, its successors and assigns, to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia to the credit of the District of Columbia, and the same shall be a valid and subsisting lien against the franchises and property of the said railroad company, and shall constitute a legal indebtedness of said company in favor of the District of Columbia, and the said lien may be enforced in the name of the District of Columbia by a bill in equity brought by the said Commissioners in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, or by any other lawful proceeding against the said railroad company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 22, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$2,175,000" and insert "$2,515,000", so as to read:

In all, not to exceed $2,515,000, to be immediately available; to be disbursed and accounted for as "Gasoline tax, road, and street improvements and repairs", and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

For extension of the water department distribution system, laying of such service mains as may be necessary under the assessment system, $225,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 3, after the name "District of Columbia", to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$90,000", so as to read:

For installing and repairing water meters on services to private residences and business places as may not be required to install meters under existing regulations, as may be directed by the Commissioners; said meters at all time to remain the property of the District of Columbia, $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 9, after the word "pavements", to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$120,000", so as to read:

For replacement of old mains and divide valves in various locations, on account of inadequate size and bad condition of pipe on account of age, and laying mains in advance of pavements, $120,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, after line 17, to insert:

For 6,500 feet of 36-inch water main from Eleventh and Kenyon Streets NW. to Seventeenth and Taylor Streets NW., $120,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, line 1, after the word "of", to strike out "one 25,000,000-gallon daily electrical motor driven centrifugal pumping unit" and insert "two 25,000,000-gallon daily electrical motor driven centrifugal pumping units", and in line 6, after the word "gallon", to strike out "obsolete steam pumping unit, $65,000" and insert "and one 20,000,000-gallon obsolete steam pumping units, $123,000", so as to read:

For the purchase and installation of two 25,000,000-gallon daily electrical motor driven centrifugal pumping units at the Bryant Street pumping station, including all necessary appurtenances and alterations and removal of one 12,000,000-gallon and one 20,000,000-gallon obsolete steam pumping units, $123,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, after line 21, to strike out:

SEC. 8. No part of the appropriations contained in this act shall be used to pay any increase in the salary of any officer or employee of the District of Columbia by reason of the reallocation of the position of such officer or employee to a higher grade after June 30, 1932, by the Personnel Classification Board or the Civil Service Commission, and salaries paid accordingly shall be payment in full.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 32, line 25, after the numerals "$6,957,100", it is proposed to insert:

Of which not exceeding $5,000 may be expended for compensation to be fixed by the Board of Education and traveling expenses of educational consultants employed on special educational projects.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the distinguished Senator having the bill in charge to line 5, page 72. Before doing so, I want to pay tribute to the devoted, unselfish service rendered by the Senator. The people of the District of Columbia owe him a great debt of gratitude for what he has done, at a sacrifice of time and energy, to try to meet the needs of the citizens of the District.

The matter to which I am now referring relates to the item for the payment of physicians to the poor. In 1933 there were 4,400 calls on these physicians, at a cost to the District of $4,000. In 1934 there were 6,764 calls, at an expense of $3,740. In 1935, so far there have been 5,624 calls, indicating for the year calls totaling 8,436.

Back in 1912 there were 32 doctors doing this work. Now there are only 10, and because of the poverty in the District, there are more calls on the public doctors than ever before.

In view of these facts, I move to amend on page 72, line 5, by striking out "$8,000" and substituting in lieu thereof "$13,000", adding $5,000 to the appropriation.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a strong showing was made on this particular item and similar items, and because of the showing made by the Senator from New York, I have no objection to letting the amendment go to conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conferees will be appointed at a later date.

PUBLIC WORKS OF THE NAVY

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5576) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is that the naval bill?

Mr. TRAMMELL. It is the public-works bill of the Navy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it on the calendar?

Mr. TRAMMELL. It is Calendar No. 424.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Florida to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5576, known as the "naval construction bill."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McNARY. I am advised by the leader on the Democratic side, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], that he expects to ask for an adjournment this evening, with a morning hour tomorrow, and a call of the calendar. I have been advised by some Senators that they would like to have the question of proceeding to the consideration of the naval construction bill brought up tomorrow rather than this afternoon. If it is to be insisted on this afternoon, there will have to be a quorum call so that Senators may be notified of the proposal to make some particular order the unfinished business. In view of that situation, I suggest to the Senator from Florida that, inasmuch as we are to adjourn this afternoon until tomorrow, he make his motion tomorrow if he desires so to do.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Of course, Mr. President, I desire to conform to the wishes of Senators. I really see no reason why the bill should not be made the unfinished business at the present time. Then it would come up tomorrow, as the unfinished business, at 2 o'clock. Of course, we could take it up now by a majority vote, but with the understanding that it will be the pending business tomorrow at 2 o'clock——

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senate adjourns today, of course, the Senator will have to renew his motion tomorrow, because it will not be the pending business. If the Senate should take a recess, it would be the pending business tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. It should readily occur to the Senator from Florida that there are only a few Senators present, and I am advised that some would like to be here when the motion is made to make any order the unfinished business. So, in fairness to those who are not present, I suggest to the Senator that he make his motion tomorrow at the proper time, and he will have an opportunity at the time the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the calendar. Tomorrow will not be a regular calendar day. Any motion may be made as to any order of business at any particular time during the call of the calendar, and if the Senator should secure recognition when the calendar is first brought up he can move that the bill in which he is interested be taken up. He would lose no right.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I had hoped very much to get the bill before the Senate this afternoon, and I regret that some Members of the Senate are absent who might wish to have something to say in opposition to taking up the bill. It is not a question of voting on it; it is a question of taking it up for consideration. I really think that it is very unfortunate that Senators absent themselves from the Senate and prevent our going ahead with the business of the Senate. However, I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from Oregon, and if I may have it understood now that at 2 o'clock I may have the privilege of making the motion that the bill to which I have referred be made the unfinished business, I shall not press the motion at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will say to the Senator from Florida that under the rules of the Senate, as he understands them, when the Senate proceeds to a consideration of measures on the calendar tomorrow the Senator will be at liberty to make his motion at once.

Mr. McNARY. At any time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And it will not be debatable.

Mr. McNARY. As I suggested a moment ago, when the consideration of the calendar begins tomorrow the Senator may make his motion that the bill to which he has called attention be made the unfinished business.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, with that explanation and understanding, I will not press this afternoon the motion to make the bill the unfinished business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, April 9, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, APRIL 8, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we lift our hearts to Thy throne of mercy and call Thee Father. What a sunlit and enchanted place is Thy footstool, which is all vocal with divine love. As we wait here in prayer and meditation, we thank Thee that Thou dost comfort and console in the hours of desolating sorrow which parches the flowers of life and withers its joy. Teach us, O Lord, that he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, for God is love. Put this angel of heaven in all our souls. Illuminate every horizon; speak in every harmony that thrills the breast, and let us feel the touch of that dear, human love that warms the world. In Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ROLL CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. Evidently, there is not a quorum present.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 49]

Amlie	Dorsey	Lamneck	Somers, N. Y.
Andrews, N. Y.	Doutrich	Lanham	Sumners, Tex.
Bankhead	Fish	Lord	Taber
Bell	Frey	Lundeen	Thomas
Brooks	Gambrill	McGrath	Thurston
Cannon, Wis.	Gasque	Meeks	Tinkham
Cartwright	Griswold	Montague	Treadway
Celler	Hancock, N. Y.	Norton	Turpin
Cox	Hartley	O'Brien	Wadsworth
Crowe	Higgins, Conn.	Peyser	Welch
Darden	Hoffman	Sadowski	Werner
Dear	Hook	Sandlin	West
Ditter	Kennedy, Md.	Shannon	Wilson, La.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and seventy-nine Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

WAR PROFITS

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, ever since the World War I have been committed to the proposition of the universal conscription of men and of wealth in the event of another war, and I am still in favor of this proposition. My idea of universal conscription is very simple. It is that every able-bodied male citizen of the United States of military age shall be subject to conscription for military service and that all other citizens shall be conscripted in the public service. However, this is not my understanding of the pending bill with section 3 as now amended in the bill.

My understanding of this section as amended is that conscription in the military service or exemption from such service will depend solely upon the accident of employment. If a man happens to be in a favored employment at the time war is declared, he may be exempt from military service. If he is not in such employment, he can be drafted and sent to the front.

I do not see that this is materially different from the World War Draft Act that gave rise to the "shipyards patriot", which caused so much heart burning to the men in the military service and so much more after their discharge from the service.

Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding that this would be a bill to take the profits out of war. I did not understand that it would deal with the question of drafting manpower, as provided in section 3 of the bill. I have not heard the draft mentioned in connection with the Nye bill. Now, section 3 has been amended in the Committee of the Whole by the addition of the following language:

Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed as conscription of those employed in industry.

It is claimed that this is intended to prevent the freezing in industry of those employed in industry, but it does not read that way. If we are going into the question of exemptions from military service, I want to suggest that it cannot be done by the consideration given to a spur-of-the moment amendment under the 5-minute rule in Committee of the Whole. Since the amendment of section 3, the conscription section, I have taken the trouble to examine the Selective Draft Act of 1917. That act provided that in addition to the organized military forces then existing—

All other forces hereby authorized * * * shall be raised and maintained by selective draft exclusively. * * * Such draft herein provided shall be based upon liability to military service of all male citizens between the ages of 21 and 30 years, both inclusive.

Then comes the provision dealing with exemptions. There were expressly exempted from the World War draft, the Vice President of the United States; the officers, legislative, executive, and judicial of the United States, the States and Territories and the District of Columbia; ministers of religion; students in theological schools; conscientious objectors.

In addition, the President in his discretion was authorized to exempt from the selective draft the following classes:

County and municipal officers, customhouse clerks, persons engaged in the transmission of the mails, workers in navy yards, arsenals, and armories; pilots and marines in sea service; other persons in the United States service as designated.

Also:

Persons engaged in industries, including agriculture, found to be necessary to the maintenance of the Military Establishment or the effective operation of the military forces, or the maintenance of national interest during the emergency;

Those in a status with respect to persons dependent upon them for support which renders their exclusion or discharge advisable;

And those found to be physically or morally deficient.

Mr. Speaker, the provisions of the Selective Draft Act of 1917 indicate that very thorough consideration was given to the question of exemptions from the draft. It cannot be claimed that any such consideration was given to section 3 of this bill. I cannot foresee at this time how this section may be construed and applied and I cannot foresee what will be the reactions to it of the millions who are to be affected by it. I cannot be sure that the veterans of the World War, whom I know to be overwhelmingly in favor of the universal draft, will find that this section as it now reads, meets their idea of such a draft. If I err, I want to err on the side of the millions whose lives are to be affected by this section, and vote to recommit the bill to have the draft feature of section 3 stricken from it.

Mr. Speaker, during the World War the man in uniform was the only man who got neither war profits nor high wages. He was called upon to make, if necessary, the supreme sacrifice virtually for his board and clothes. All other men were permitted to remain at home and profit by the war, and most of them did.

If I understand the philosophy of this legislation, it is as a deterrent to war by taking the incentive of profit out of war and by bringing home to everybody the hardships and the sacrifices of war. No other system could be just. No other system could take the profit out of war for everybody. No other system could even approximate a sharing of the sacrifices of war. If we cannot effect such a system, then we confess that universal conscription is a failure and we are merely devising a system of selecting from groups or classes those whom we destine to fight and to die.

It is claimed that the American Legion endorses this legislation. I have read the exhaustive statement made in its behalf before the Committee on Military Affairs and find the following:

Legislation that will prepare our country to draft immediately, without favor, all the man power and resources of our Nation.

The adoption of universal-draft legislation, to the end that in case of war America's man power and resources might be immediately called into the service of the Nation without unjust discrimination and costly delay.

The universal draft of both property and men, to become effective as soon as possible.

A plan providing for a universal draft and the conscription of capital, industry, and man power in the event of war.

The question is, Does section 3 of the bill embody the above specific recommendations not only of the American Legion but of all other veterans' organizations?

Mr. Speaker, the profit should be taken out of war. Perhaps the price freezing in the bill may limit the profit, but the way to take out the profit is to take it in taxes and take all of it, take 100 percent. I know the views of many men who fought in the last war. They are not for war. They believe that the most sobering influence that can be brought to bear upon the national mind against participation in another war will be the knowledge that the moment it is declared every man and every dollar will be in the service of the Government, not just some men and some dollars.

[Here the gavel fell.]

SALE OF TIMBER ON THE NATIONAL FORESTS

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2881) authorizing the adjustment of contracts for the sale of timber on the national forests, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill and the following Senate amendment:

In line 8, strike out "May 1, 1933," and insert "June 30, 1934."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, this seems to be a minor amendment, and I have no objection to the request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY] has been called away by death in family and requests indefinite leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization may have permission to sit during the sessions of the House on tomorrow and Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this on the pending bill?

Mr. CONNERY. No.

Mr. McSWAIN. I have no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the Members who did not hear the statement I made a few days ago, I wish to announce again that tonight at 8 o'clock, in the caucus room of the old House Office Building, through the courtesy of Warner Bros., and in compliment to the Committee on Labor, there will be exhibited a film that has not yet been shown in any theater, entitled "Black Fury", featuring Paul Muni. This picture describes conditions during a strike in the mines, and is one that I am sure the entire membership will be interested in seeing.

Mr. O'CONNOR. May I suggest that the picture is shown not only through the courtesy of Warner Bros. but through the courtesy of the House Office Building Commission.

Mr. CONNERY. I beg my dear friend's pardon. And I wish to express my deep appreciation to the Speaker of the House, the Chairman of the Rules Committee [Mr. O'CONNOR], and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BACHARACH], all members of the House Office Building Commission, through whose courtesy the picture is to be permitted to be shown.

The picture will be shown at 8 o'clock, and each Member is invited to attend, and we hope that each one will confine himself or herself to one guest, due to the limited seating capacity of the caucus room.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Is this a censored version or an uncensored version?

Mr. CONNERY. It is uncensored, and there is nothing in it that needs censoring.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I understand the State of New York and the State of Illinois intend to cut out some parts of it.

Mr. CONNERY. I suggest that my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN] see the picture tonight. It is a wonderful picture. I saw it at a special preview a few days ago, and it is a clean, dramatic, colorful picture, and needs no censoring in any particular.

WAR PROFITS

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we must restrict ourselves to the issue now before us, and we must not open this subject for debate. The gentleman, as I understand, proposes to submit a motion to recommit, which is within his rights; but everybody else would have just as much right to speak as my friend the gentleman from Maryland. The motion to recommit will speak for itself, and I regret very much that I feel I should object. Does the gentleman intend to address his remarks to the motion to recommit?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Only for the purpose of explaining what is in the motion, and not to debate it.

Mr. McSWAIN. If the gentleman's purpose is simply to explain the motion, I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, the motion to recommit, which I shall presently offer, simply strikes from the bill the first sentence of section 3, which provides for human conscription.

THE N. R. A.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute, not on the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, from time to time we have had attacks on the N. R. A. from the other side of the Mason and Dixon's line here and the other day the infection spread to the Democratic ranks.

Mr. RANKIN. The center aisle in the House to which the gentleman refers is the dead line—not the Mason and Dixon's line.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. In order to get in the RECORD what the N. R. A. has done for the bituminous coal industry of this country, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, from time to time in this House we have been hearing of the evils of the regimentation and the harm that has resulted to the country because of the National Recovery Act.

The criticisms of that enactment have in the main come from the gentlemen of the opposition—I mean from those who seem to think that their political life is dependent on the destruction of the N. R. A. Such an attitude, if we consider partisan politics only, is perhaps to be expected. But it has remained for one who does not belong to the opposition and who no doubt would bitterly resent any charge that he was in sympathy with the destructive program of the opposition—whatever it is and whoever can be found to state that program—to direct at the N. R. A. the heaviest broadside we have yet heard. I refer to the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia uttered the other day.

Let it be understood at the outset that I have not the slightest quarrel with the gentleman from Georgia. Nor shall I follow the established rule of this House and start throwing flowers at that gentleman. He is not dead yet, and I shall reserve any inference or suggestion that he is, because I do not think he is. In my short service here in this House I have come to think well of and respect him in his individuality, though I doubt if he even knows my name, and I am sure the gentleman does not know that I have a very kindly feeling for him.

But, Mr. Speaker, while we can dismiss Republican pot shooting at the N. R. A. in the understanding that it merely discloses a consciousness of poverty of imagination and emptiness of thought on the part of those who deride the N. R. A. from the ambushes of timber that has the dry rot and is windshaken at the butt, we must not permit the friends of the people to stray into sterile pastures and eat the noxious growths of a sour and unproductive soil.

Mr. Speaker, it would not be difficult to prove that of all the attempts made by the Roosevelt administration to defeat and to overcome the appalling disaster and horrible wreckage caused or permitted by three uninterrupted Republican administrations of our Government, the N. R. A. is far and away the most potent and the one that has done more to benefit the people than any other enactment.

It is necessary because of the limitation of my time that I confine my remarks to what the N. R. A. has done for the bituminous coal industry of this Nation. Coal we have always been told was one of the basic industries of this country. In order to get even a faint idea of what the N. R. A. has done for the people, a brief retrospect is necessary.

In 1927 the organized coal miners and the operators could not agree upon a wage scale. A strike resulted in the organized fields. People from various other parts of the country of very dubious occupation and vocation were imported into organized territory to break the strike. The miners' union was broken and utterly dismembered. The operators had the field, but what a scene of carnage. The miners were licked, the operators were licked, the people were licked, the Nation, one might almost say, was licked. It was not bloodshed; it was not civil war. It was business, industrial, financial, wreckage.

In 1932 every coal-producing field I suppose in the United States had those of its people who had more than a bare existence, and who at the same time had some human sympathy, contributing regularly to the local charity funds to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, to house the houseless. Children attending school in the dead of northern winters half clothed and nearly starved, or being kept from school entirely because of less clothes and more starvation. It was a calamity not ever to be forgotten, not ever to be erased from the vision. A state of dire poverty, of unemployment, of physical and mental hoplessness and inaction. Through this sad, sickening, and unwholesome mass there suddenly shone the rays of the N. R. A.

The miners' union was revived. The riff-raff scurried back to the scummy haunts from which evidently it had come; the mines began to operate, the cars rolled in and out, men returned to work, the railroads moved the freight, and—the greatest benefit of all—the spirit of the people took on a happier tone and a brighter color. Perfection we have not yet, but improvement and betterment we have, immeasurably so, and, Mr. Speaker, it is by cause of the Democratic Party, by cause of the Democratic Roosevelt, by cause of the N. R. A.

Those Republicans who carp at, those individuals who criticize, and those Democrats in this House who would scuttle the N. R. A. are either bigotedly partisan or totally unacquainted with the facts.

Let us look at some of the evidence of N. R. A. results:

Total bituminous-coal production in Pennsylvania

	Tons
1931	89,830,912
1932	68,022,893
1933	78,571,864
1934	89,592,481
	Value
1931	$155,060,000
1932	100,361,000
1933	108,418,000
1934 (estimated)	160,000,000
	Employees
1931	116,726
1932	104,532
1933	115,453
1934 (estimated)	120,000

This is exclusive of wagon mines producing less than 1,000 tons.

I represent the Twenty-seventh Congressional District of Pennsylvania, which is most likely the largest bituminous-coal producing congressional district in the United States. In that district alone, comprising Armstrong, Cambria, Indiana, and Jefferson Counties, the coal production in 1932 amounted to 19,774,840 tons. The production increased in 1933, after the N. R. A., to a total of 21,014,786 tons, and further advanced to 23,000,000 tons in 1934.

Let me commend to my Democratic friend from Georgia and all other Democratic Members who have any little feeling of doubt about the merits of this much-abused N. R. A., a wider and more thorough knowledge of what it has done for the people. If he had the faintest idea, the slightest conception of how the act has helped revivify the spirit of millions of Americans, he could not too hurriedly, in defense of his own integrity, find means to wipe out his words of condemnation and vocalize a feeling of whole-hearted approbation.

It is a pleasure for me to hear the Republican Members attack the administration at its strongest and best fortified front. Of course it is the poorest strategy imaginable, and it is just as futile as it is comical and as its results are going to be disappointing.

It was, of course, too bad that the N. R. A. fell into the hands of "Crack Down" Johnson, who so conspicuously "cracked up." Notwithstanding that months ago the black dust storm that blew out of Oklahoma killed the N. R. A. deader than a dodo, on April 1, 1935, N. R. A. temporarily but very successfully averted a bituminous coal strike, which achievement alone is abundant reason for its existence.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Republican leadership will continue its fruitless attacks on the N. R. A. At the same time, I trust the Democratic membership will devote some time to the acquisition of more facts and less fancy.

WAR PROFITS

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the adoption of the amendments to the bill (H. R. 5529) to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war and thus provide for the national defense, and promote peace.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on what is known as the "modified Faddis amendment."

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday there were not more than 40 or 50 Members present when many of these amendments were written into the bill. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read through clearly, slowly, and distinctly, so that the Members can be informed of what is in the bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. The RECORD has been before every Member and the amendments are easily understood, and I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there any other amendment upon which a separate vote is demanded? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendment be read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read when we come to vote upon it. The question is on the remaining amendments.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk will read the amendment upon which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 13, strike out the word "service" and insert the words "armed forces" and on page 3, line 2, after the word "purposes" change the period to a colon and add: "Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed as conscription of those employed in industry."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 207 ayes and 11 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the engrossed copy.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill as amended be read to the House.

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] demanded the reading of the engrossed copy. Such request should be disposed of first. If the engrossed copy is read, that would place the bill as amended in the RECORD at this point. I think the bill should be printed in the RECORD at this point, as it is not a long bill, so that the country and every member of the American Legion can know that the bill contains something that they are opposed to, to wit, the Faddis amendment, which exempts all men in industry from fighting, and does not allow them to be drafted. I think we are entitled to have the bill read. So after we vote to engross the bill, it should be read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I renew my demand for the reading of the engrossed copy.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I do not know when a motion to recommit is in order. Can I offer a motion to recommit now?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can offer his motion to recommit after the bill has been read the third time.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, if the House will give unanimous consent to the reading of the bill as it is amended, will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] insist that the bill go over until tomorrow? We want to dispose of it today.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; so long as the amendments are read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the bill is short; and if the Members would agree that the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD so that the country may know what it contains, I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] would withdraw his demand; and if that is done, I shall not renew it.

Mr. McSWAIN. And vote on the bill now?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but let it be printed in the RECORD at this point as it is amended.

Mr. McSWAIN. That it be considered as read?

Mr. BLANTON. What I want is to have the bill printed in the RECORD, and what the gentleman from Illinois wants is to have the bill read.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; for the information of the Members.

Mr. McSWAIN. Then I ask that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY] agree to have the bill read.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That will be agreeable.

Mr. BLANTON. And in that connection I ask unanimous consent that with the reading of the bill the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point as amended, and then I shall not renew the demand for the reading of the engrossed copy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the bill be read with the amendments which have been adopted and printed in the RECORD at this point. Is there objection?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. We originally made that request about 10 minutes ago, and the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs objected to it.

Mr. McSWAIN. But the gentleman has changed his mind, in view of the parliamentary knowledge of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. O'MALLEY. Then I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read the bill with the amendments which have been adopted by the House.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. While we are waiting for the Clerk to get this bill together, I propound this parliamentary inquiry to the Speaker. Cannot any Member of the House demand the reading of the bill in full before it is voted on?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read the first clause of rule XXI:

> Bills and joint resolutions on their passage shall be read the first time by title and the second time in full, when, if the previous question is ordered, the Speaker shall state the question to be: Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time? and, if decided in the affirmative, it shall be read the third time by title, unless the reading in full is demanded by a Member, and the question shall then be put upon its passage.

Under the rule, therefore, it is the right of every individual Member, after the bill has been ordered read a third time, to demand the reading in full.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, would a demand of a Member at this time that the engrossed copy be read be in order?

The SPEAKER. That demand has been made, and the Chair understood that it had been withdrawn.

Mr. WOODRUFF. But, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who made the demand previously could not speak for other Members of the House. It is apparent to me from the condition of the House today that even though this bill is read, there is not going to be order enough in the Chamber so that the Members can understand it. Therefore I demand the reading of the engrossed copy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan demands the reading of the engrossed bill. Of course, he has that right. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Clerk will read the bill with the amendments.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McSWAIN. And that is as to whether or not, if my good friend from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] were in the House and gave his consent that the bill be read now and considered and printed in the RECORD, it is not binding on the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that that interferes with the right of a Member to demand the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. If the gentleman insists upon that, it seems to me a useless consumption of time to read the bill at this time.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I quite agree with that, that it would be a useless effort to read the bill at this time with the lack of order there is in the House and that probably will continue just so soon as the Clerk starts the reading of the bill. I demand the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. The engrossed copy can be here in the House ready for reading later on this afternoon.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The House has given its consent that the bill with the amendments be read, and the Chair hopes that Members will maintain strict order during the reading. The Clerk will read the bill with the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever Congress shall declare war, then, from and after a date prior to such declaration which date the President is hereby authorized and directed to determine and publicly proclaim, it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, partnership, or corporation to willfully buy, sell, or otherwise contract for any artice or thing at a higher rate, rent, price, commission, compensation, or reward than was in effect at the date so determined.

SEC. 2. During the period of any war, whenever in the sole discretion of the President he shall determine that any maximum price, rent, rate, commission, compensation, or reward shall be adjusted either upward or downward he is hereby authorized to make and publicly proclaim such adjustment, and such adjustment shall have the full force and effect under this statute of such price, rent, rate, commission, compensation, or reward before such adjustment.

(b) Furthermore, the President is authorized to close all stock and commodity exchanges in the United States of America if in his sole discretion it becomes desirable in order to curb speculation.

SEC. 3. That in the event of war, declared by Congress to exist, which in the judgment of the President demands the immediate increase of the military establishment, the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to draft into the armed forces of the United States such members of the unorganized militia between the ages of 21 and 45 as he may deem necessary, and all persons responsible for the management, direction, and control of industry, commerce, transportation, and communications, subject to such conditions, exemptions, rules, and regulations as the President may prescribe and publicly proclaim: Provided, That no member of the militia drafted into the armed forces of the United States under the provisions of this section shall, while a member of such armed forces, be permitted to serve on foreign soil, except to prevent, repel, or quell actual invasion of the United States of America: Provided, however, That the per diem pay of such members of the unorganized militia so drafted shall be a sum not less than the daily wage of unskilled labor as of the date proclaimed by the President for price determination, and the President is hereby authorized and directed to determine and proclaim the amount of that wage. Likewise, during such time of war declared by Congress, the President shall have power to determine and publicly proclaim from time to time the material and financial resources, industrial organizations, and public services over which Government control shall then be necessary and to commandeer same for use by the Government and such control and commandeering shall be exercised by him through agencies then existing or which he may then create for such purposes: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed as conscription of those employed in industry.

SEC. 4. During the period of any war declared by Congress the President is authorized to determine, and by public proclamation announce, what classes of public service, or of dealers or of manufacturers of any article or commodity, shall be required to operate under licenses, to fix the conditions of such licenses, and to grant licenses under such conditions. After such determination and proclamation by the President, it shall be unlawful for any public service, dealer, or manufacturer in such determined classes willfully to engage in business without such license. This section shall not apply to the publication or distribution of newspapers, periodicals, or books.

SEC. 5. During the period of any war declared by Congress the President is authorized to determine and publicly proclaim the order of priority in which any manufacturer, dealer, or public service in the United States shall fill orders, or transport anything, or furnish power, and after such determination and proclamation, it shall be unlawful for any such manufacturer, dealer, or public service willfully to fill such orders in any other order of priority.

SEC. 6. That during the period of any war declared by Congress the President is empowered to set up such agencies, boards, or commissions, or to designate such persons, to exercise such portion of his powers as he may deem necessary and proper to accomplish the purpose of this act. Likewise, at such time he shall have power to make such rearrangements of departments, and of bureaus and divisions thereof, and to transfer such duties and powers as he may deem necessary for the proper conduct of war.

SEC. 7. That any person, firm, or corporation willfully violating any of the provisions of this act, or willfully violating any publicly proclaimed orders, rules, or regulations made by the President for executing the powers contained in this act, is hereby declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be liable to indictment and trial therefor, and upon conviction thereof shall be sentenced to pay a fine, not exceeding $100,000, or to serve in prison, not exceeding 1 year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 8. That upon the declaration of war, there shall be imposed a tax of 100 percent of all excess war profits that may be earned during said period of war as defined in this act.

SEC. 9. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. There has been a demand for the reading of the engrossed copy.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I renew my demand for the reading of the engrossed copy.

CONSTRUCTION, REPAIR, AND PRESERVATION OF PUBLIC WORKS ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment, that I may propound a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I will withhold the motion.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire just when we will vote on the McSwain bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been informed that the engrossed copy will probably be in the House by 3 or 3:30 this afternoon. This bill will have to be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. RANKIN. May we have an understanding that the vote on the bill will go over until tomorrow?

Mr. McSWAIN. I would not want to take the responsibility without talking with the House management about that. It is my personal desire to close it up as soon as possible.

Mr. RANKIN. We would like to know just when it will be taken up?

Mr. McSWAIN. Can we rely upon the assurance that it will be here by 3 o'clock?

The SPEAKER. No assurance can be given, but the Chair has been informed that the bill will probably be in the House by 3 or 3:30, or between 3 and 4 o'clock. Of course, the bill can then be taken up and disposed of.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to agree that the bill go over until tomorrow.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Reserving the right to object.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing to object to.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I understood the gentleman propounded a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6732.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 2 hours, one-half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] and one-half by myself.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order against the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNELL. I make the point of order against the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] on the ground that this is not a privileged bill, and therefore the motion is not in order. I do this not because I am opposed to the bill, because I am for it, but in order to keep the RECORD and the precedents of the House intact relative to the consideration of a river and harbor bill.

As a matter of fact, the Chairman of the Rules Committee and I had a word or two about this bill Saturday night. Originally, river and harbor bills were privileged bills, but in those days they were confined to river and harbor projects alone. In later years all of these river and harbor bills have contained various other matters, such as channels, canals, and artificial waterways, which are not privileged matter. Of course, the presence of unprivileged matter in a bill makes the bill itself unprivileged. If I remember correctly, the present distinguished Speaker made a ruling on this very same proposition some 12 or 15 years ago when he was acting as Chairman of Committee of the Whole, and as a further argument to sustain my position, I respectfully call attention of the Speaker to that decision.

I would like to say further that as far as I am concerned, if the Speaker sustains the point of order, which I believe he will, if the gentleman from Texas will ask unanimous consent to call up this bill, I doubt if there will be any opposition to considering it at this time. The point I am making now is simply for the purpose of maintaining the rules of the House, and not because I have any opposition to the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to the point of order, in order to keep the record clear. On Saturday the following colloquy occurred at page 5202 of the RECORD:

> Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman tell us what the program is going to be for the first part of next week?
> Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The rivers and harbors bill will come up for consideration Monday.
> Mr. SNELL. That will be brought up under a special rule?
> Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not know. The social security bill will follow that measure.
> Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman knows that the rivers and harbors bill is a privileged matter.
> Mr. SNELL. I do not know any such thing.

Now, under clause 45 of rule XI of the House, bills reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for "the improvement of rivers and harbors" are privileged, along with reports from the Rules Committee, reports of the Elections Committees, general appropriation bills, bills from the Public Lands Committee relating to forfeiture of land grants to railroads, and so forth, reports from the Accounts Committee pertaining to the contingent fund of the House, reports on enrolled bills, reports from the Committee on Territories admitting new Territories as States to the Union, reports from the Invalid Pensions Committee reporting general pension bills, and reports from the Joint Committee on Printing. I think I have covered all the privileged reports. If not, I shall include them later in my remarks.

Under the rule, the gentleman from New York is correct in the strict sense, in that the bill reported from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors must relate only to rivers and harbors. This ruling is sustained by the following precedent: On January 11, 1919, at page 1263 of the RECORD, the present distinguished Speaker, then presiding as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, ruled that a Rivers and Harbors Committee report was not privileged because it contained canals and artificial waterways. It has also been held that the presence in a bill, otherwise privileged, of matters not privileged destroys the privileged status of the whole bill (Hinds' Precedents, vol. IV, sec. 4622, etc.).

I am willing to concede to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] that this bill does in fact contain provisions relating to canals and creeks and artificial, and perhaps undiscovered, waterways, so if the gentleman should press his point of order, the bill would not be privileged. In view of that situation, however, if the point of order is pressed, the Rules Committee is prepared with a rule to meet the situation.

Mr. SNELL. Did the gentleman hear the suggestion I made, that as far as I know, there is no opposition to considering the bill if the gentleman will ask unanimous consent. If the gentleman will ask unanimous consent, he will get it, I think, because we are all for the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. SNELL. Oh, yes; I will have to insist on the point of order, but I think the gentleman can get his bill up the other way.

The SPEAKER. Clause 45 of rule XI, as it relates to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, reads as follows, under the heading of Privileged Reports.

> The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, bills authorizing the improvement of rivers and harbors.

The bill which has been presented to the House not only relates to rivers and harbors but provides for other waterways.

There are quite a number of provisions in the bill, which it is unnecessary to point out, providing for inland waterways; for instance, from the Delaware River to Chesapeake Bay, the improvement of the Cape Cod Canal, and other provisions quite numerous which, in the opinion of the Chair, takes the bill from under the privilege provided in the rules.

The Chair feels constrained to follow the precedents heretofore established and the plain letter of the rule the Chair has read, which applies only to bills relating to rivers and harbors exclusively. In addition to this, the Chair will state that the Chair is informed that this bill was not presented to the House as privileged bills are, but was reported through the basket, rather than from the floor of the House.

The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, if agreeable to the Committee on Military Affairs, that the pending Military Affairs Committee bill to take the profits out of war go over until tomorrow. It is so indefinite as to when the engrossed bill will come in that Members do not know what to do, when the bill will come in, or anything about it. For this reason I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over until tomorrow.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the engrossed bill ought to be back here within the next 2 hours, and the Membership of the House can complete it at that time. Why delay a vote on the bill? It is very important that we have a vote on the bill now. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I object.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce at this time that on April 11, 1935, at 8 p. m., in the auditorium of the Department of the Interior, Mr. Fickinger, the superintendent of Colonial National Monuments, will deliver a lecture on archeological discoveries at Jamestown and Yorktown. He will have slides there to show some of the relics that were taken from a British ship that was sunk in the campaign and seige of Yorktown in 1781. Everyone is invited to be present.

CONSTRUCTION, REPAIR, AND PRESERVATION OF PUBLIC WORKS ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Pending this motion I ask unanimous consent that general debate be confined to the bill, and be limited to 2 hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] and one-half by me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, with Mr. ARNOLD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, the question of transportation is certainly one of the most important matters with which our country has to deal. In some sections we have great surpluses of products of the farm or factory for which there is no market. In other sections there is distress on account of the need of those commodities, but which cannot be obtained because of the prohibitive cost of transportation. Congress should exert every reasonable effort to bring about a better solution of this problem. In doing this the general interest, rather than a selfish interest, should receive our first consideration.

Lord Bacon said:

> There are three things which make a nation great and powerful: A fertile soil, busy workshop, and easy conveyance for men and goods from place to place.

We have the fertile soil and the busy workshop, but in our transportation system there is room for improvement. Reasonable but substantial reductions in freight rates is one of our greatest possible needs. The low cost of water transportation on the Great Lakes, of about 1 mill per ton mile, has added many billions to the economic wealth of the country and has actually contributed more to the business of the railroads, supposed competitors in transportation, than perhaps any other single development in our history.

The systematic improvement of our Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf ports has substantially lightened the burdens of the ships upon the high seas. As a consequence, a bale of cotton can now be carried from a Texas port to our most distant market in the Orient for slightly less than $2 per bale, after paying a toll through the Panama Canal. This is about one-half the cost of a few years ago and illustrates the fact that the people get the benefit of reduced transportation costs made possible by systematic river and harbor improvements.

In our transportation system we have about 3,000,000 miles of public roads and highways, improved and unimproved. We have 250,000 miles of railways and about 15,000 miles of rivers having a greater or lesser degree of improvement for navigation. Of these different systems of transportation the waterways have the lesser maintenance cost per ton of freight handled. The cost of maintaining all our harbors and improved rivers is about $25,000,000 per annum, which represents a cost of about 3½ cents per ton of commerce. The cost of maintaining the railways ranges from one billion to two billion per annum, as approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission. This represents a cost of about $1.50 per ton of freight handled. The cost of maintaining our public roads and highways is estimated at about $161,000,000 annually, as borne by the States. The cost to the Federal Government for maintaining Federal-aid highways is estimated by the Bureau of Roads at $40,000,000. We, of course, have no reliable estimate of the amount of traffic handled over our highways.

Our waterways certainly constitute an indispensable part of our transportation system and should continue to be improved as rapidly as circumstances will permit.

In our early history waterway transportation was the most important. A little later rail competition practically eliminated the waterways. Spasmodically the waterways have come back to contest the claim of superiority made by the railways.

For more than a hundred years the battle between them has waxed and waned. The pendulum has swung back and forth. Neither has been eliminated, though it cannot be disputed that both have become more or less obsolete in certain lines. Waterway transportation was too sluggish and restricted to hold its own with the railways except in the movement of heavy tonnage of bulk commodities and raw materials. The railways, for similar reasons, have been unable to compete in many fields with the highways. And the trucks, busses, and automobiles have almost completely eliminated them in certain lines. Transportation by air is now rendering the automobile obsolescent for quick movement.

All these modes of transportation are necessary, and the people should have the right to patronize the one that best suits their purpose for certain lines of traffic. Monopoly in transportation is dangerous, and no one can foresee just where it might end.

The claim has been made that waterways injure the railroads. That is an assertion which no man can prove, but all impartial investigation will lead to the opposite conclusion. It is a fact that cannot be denied that the railroads, which operate in the same zones where the greatest volume of waterway traffic is handled, are the most prosperous roads we have. As an illustration, the Pittsburgh district might be considered as the center of inland waterway transportation. It is the destination of a great volume of iron ore moving over the Great Lakes. It is the place of origin of a great volume of coal, going back over the same waterway. It is at the junction of the Allegheny and Monongahela forming the Ohio. These three rivers handle a greater volume of traffic than is handled over any other inland waterway of our country.

We find, that in 1900, the traffic on these rivers in the Pittsburgh district, was 9,000,000 tons, in round numbers. In 1925, just a quarter of a century later, it had increased to 40,000,000 tons, and here is how it affected the railroads. In 1900, the rail traffic was 57,000,000 tons and in 1925 it had increased to 173,000,000 tons. In other words, during that 25-year period, while the waterway traffic increased 31,000,000 tons the railroad traffic increased 116,000,000 tons.

The cheap movement of raw materials resulted in building up the greatest industrial region on the American continent, and provided a greater volume of traffic to move by rail than is to be found in any other section of our country.

The bill before us, while not neglecting inland waters, yet deals more with a much-needed improvement in the port and channel conditions on the Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf coasts, and on the Great Lakes. With few exceptions, the major inland waterways embraced in the bill, are already under construction with emergency funds. Your committee considers them meritorious, and recommends their completion. Otherwise, much of the money expended will have gone for naught.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the gentleman include in the RECORD the places where the projects are located?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The bill shows the places where they are located.

The river and harbor bill now before the House provides for the authorization of 204 projects, 77 of which are now under way with funds provided from the emergency appropriations. The other 127 projects have been recommended by the chief of engineers but they have not yet been authorized by Congress. The total estimated cost of the projects included in the bill is $272,132,172.70, of which $58,067,499.49 has already been provided from the public-works funds. The bill will authorize the undertaking of these projects as funds become available, and their future maintenance from the annual appropriations for this purpose. Since the current War Department appropriation provides only the funds necessary for maintenance and operation of existing projects, funds for the execution of the projects in this bill must come for the time being from emergency appropriations.

There is a real and urgent need for the passage of this bill. It will preserve the legal status of the projects initiated under the emergency program and permit them to be maintained in the future from annual appropriations. It will authorize for execution, as funds become available, projects badly needed for the improvement of our national waterway system. There has been no river and harbor bill since 1930, a 5-year period which represents the greatest length of time without the enactment of such legislation since the Civil War.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. Section 2 of the bill reads:

> The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause preliminary examinations and surveys to be made—

And so forth. My understanding was that the gentleman's committee had this authority without legislation, by committee resolution.

Mr. MANSFIELD. No; the gentleman is slightly in error.

Mr. CONNERY. I wanted to understand the situation.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The law in regard to it is that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors cannot initiate a survey, but a survey that once has been authorized by Congress and becomes dormant can be revived by resolution of the committee.

Mr. CONNERY. I thank the chairman.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Needless to say, during this period there have been many changes in the requirements of commerce and navigation. Many of our important waterways are badly in need of increased depths, widths, or other improvement. A number of modifications of existing projects are provided for in the bill. Protracted low water levels in the Great Lakes have made imperative the deepening of the Great Lakes harbors to handle their important commercial tonnage and to enable these ports to take full advantage of the connecting channels.

During the past 5 years, in the absence of river and harbor legislation, the development of our waterways has been dependent upon the emergency appropriations and the allocation of funds by an emergency agency. The undertaking of new projects has been dependent upon the approval of that agency. The emergency public-works construction has had as a primary purpose the meeting of needs for employment. The selection of the projects placed under way with emergency funds has been governed by considerations other than the needs of navigation. Important projects badly needed for commerce have not been included in the relief program, although the total funds made available from these appropriations for river and harbor projects have amounted to a considerable sum. These funds have enabled very rapid progress to be attained on a number of projects, but they have not provided definite authorization of all of the projects needed. The dependence upon temporary agencies for the authorization of waterway improvements during an abnormal period does not dispense with the need for permanent legislation by Congress after the mature consideration of the report of its committee. Legislation is essential to the development, in accordance with a definite policy, of a well-rounded and comprehensive program of waterway improvement.

Congress, during a period of more than 110 years, has established its policy on well-defined lines for the continued improvement of national waterways to meet the requirements of commerce and navigation. The projects in the present bill provide for the improvement of our rivers and harbors to meet the needs of navigation and commerce. The approval by Congress of this bill will insure a reasonably progressive and comprehensive development in accordance with its established policy. It will insure the continuation and maintenance of the projects undertaken with emergency funds. With the enactment of this bill these projects will be appropriately authorized by law, and will, therefore, have the same status as other existing river and harbor works. In addition to providing for improvements the bill also provides for the preliminary examination and survey of a number of waterways for which the demand for water transportation justifies investigation sufficient to determine the advisability of the improvements desired. The absence of river and harbor legislation during the past 5 years has prevented a number of proposed river and harbor improvements from receiving consideration under emergency appropriations since there has been no authority for their investigation. The Chief of Engineers, in his recommendations to the emergency administration, has limited these recommendations to projects which have been investigated by congressional direction and which have been recommended to Congress, except where a special request for a report has been received from the Administration of Public Works.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has consumed 20 minutes.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GREEN. In connection with the gentleman's remarks, I should be glad if the gentleman would bring out a comparison of the amount of expenditures that our Government has made for rivers, harbors, and improvement works and grants and loans made to the railroads; also the contribution made by the Federal Government for highways.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I may say to the gentleman that will be his privilege if he wants to do that later in connection with the consideration of this bill.

Localities desiring to obtain the benefits of low-water transportation are entitled to an investigation to determine the advisability of a proposed improvement so that if economic worth is established, they can receive consideration under emergency expenditures.

No legislation is presented to Congress which has been more critically examined than the items in this bill. Investigation of these projects was initiated by Congress, authorizing preliminary examinations and surveys. Detailed surveys of the projects were undertaken only after the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors had found that the results of the preliminary examination warranted further investigation. When a report on a preliminary examination indicates that a detailed survey is unnecessary, such a survey cannot be made unless Congress authorizes it by special legislation. The detailed survey report is prepared in the field by the district engineer and his capable assistants who are thoroughly familiar with local conditions. It is carefully reviewed by the division engineer and again by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors. During the period of consideration local interests are given every opportunity to fully present the merits of the proposed improvement. All data and information secured are carefully examined to determine the benefits which can be expected. The reports of the district and division engineers and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors are carefully reviewed by the Chief of Engineers prior to the submission of his report, and finally before the project reaches Congress in the river and harbor bill, it is examined with detailed care by your Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, created by the River and Harbor Act of 1902, is composed of seven members. It reviews independently the reports of the district and division engineers. This Board assures a uniformity of consideration of projects being investigated. Its members, who are not subject to political removal, are not actuated by local or selfish viewpoints, but are capable of looking at each project from its value to the Nation as a whole. The establishment of this Board in 1902 was largely inspired by the Honorable T. E. Burton, a statesman whose familiarity and detailed knowledge of waterway development were beyond question.

The late James R. Mann, whose legislative experience was gained by many years' service as an active Member of the House, in his speech on January 7, 1922, expressed the belief that no legislation coming before Congress is so critically scanned by experts as the river and harbor bills before they are introduced in the House. From my long experience with the Board of Engineers and with the reports of the Engineer Department, I am intimately acquainted with their unrestricted and unbiased attitude toward the projects under investigation and I have been impressed by the unfailing determination of officers of the Corps of Engineers to report to Congress honest and independent findings. I know that the Members of Congress who have had frequent contacts with this organization can testify to the courteous consideration which they invariably receive. This same courteous consideration is extended to the public at large, but at the same time there is no deviation from the fixed objective of determining accurately merits or demerits based on factual data before recommendation is made.

In the past 2 years we have heard much of national planning. We know that organized studies of our waterways have been under way for a number of years and that their future development has been well laid out by the Army Engineer organization. The advantages of this planning are obvious, and a nation with the great natural navigation opportunities of the United States should and must plan continuously for the future use of these resources. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives has always looked upon the development of our waterways from a national viewpoint and from the standpoint of a long-time development. Its policy throughout the years has been to develop these resources to meet the immediately anticipated expansion of commerce and navigation. The results of this policy of Congress have been to give the United States seaports and protected harbors unexcelled by any and equaled by few in the world.

A great system of inland waterways, which includes the development of navigation facilities on the Great Lakes to handle a tremendous tonnage, has been made possible by the improvements authorized by Congress. The Corps of Engineers charged with this work has maintained commercial and engineering staffs which have recorded engineering information and commercial information such as tonnage and value of commerce handled on the national waterways. With this background of information the Corps of Engineers has had in view in its reports to Congress a continued development of waterways to meet the policy established by Congress. To my mind this represents the best national planning, and the results to date have demonstrated its adequacy. The tonnage through the calendar year 1933 on the waterways of the United States totaled 394,104,000 tons, valued at $12,597,000,000; and prior to the present depression amounted to the astounding total of 539,200,000 tons in 1 year.

The great care given to the selection of the river and harbor projects authorized by Congress for improvement by the Federal Government has been equaled in the efficiency and economy with which these projects have been carried out. The total expenditures for river and harbor improvements since the first appropriation by Congress have been $1,717,840,000. These expenditures have been under the direct supervision of the Corps of Engineers, which has been charged with this work from its beginning. The engineering services rendered works undertaken in the improvement of these waterways have been of an exemplary character.

Time and time again the navigation interests of the country have expressed their confidence in the works and in the agency charged with their planning and prosecution. The efficient and economical conduct of this work through the years is an outstanding chapter in the history of governmental administration; it has made an international reputation for the responsible organization. At present this organization is playing a major part in the emergency works program. It has been charged with construction involving the expenditure of $350,000,000 of emergency funds, and has placed this work under way with a maximum of speed and with no sacrifice in soundness of design or economy of operation. It has loaned its officers to the various emergency agencies, has conducted many investigations for those agencies, and at the same time has carried on its normal functions of adequately maintaining existing river and harbor works to satisfy the needs of navigation. The Government has been fortunate in its efforts to provide the people with the benefits of low-cost water transportation, to have had at its command an organization devoted solely to the performance of its duties in the service of our country.

This river and harbor bill stands on its merits. It is essential to meet the commercial needs of the Nation. The projects included in the bill have been selected with the utmost care. Congress and the people know that within the authorization, as funds become available, they will be constructed with efficiency and dispatch.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I am interested to know if this program were put into effect in connection with the Public Works funds and those funds spent, what percentage of this money would go direct to labor?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It ranges, according to the estimates of the engineers, from 76 to 80 percent.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Seventy-six to 80 percent?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Direct and indirect.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. To direct labor. I doubt if there is any other project contemplated under the public-works program which would absorb as much labor as this one.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I do not know that there are any others that exceed this.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. Is it not a fact that the money we are now expending for recovery particularly must be paid by future generations and that by the improvement of our rivers and harbors we are giving future generations something for the encumbrances that they must pay?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I think the gentleman is correct. We are leaving them some permanent improvements of permanent value.

Mr. WELCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WELCH. I desire to compliment the distinguished Chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee and his able committee for having brought to the floor this constructive and well-balanced bill. May I ask the gentleman with reference to page 20 of the bill, under the title of "San Francisco Harbor, Calif.", Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 50, Seventy-second Congress, with particular reference to the following:

Deepening the main ship channel across the bar at the entrance to the harbor to 50 feet at an estimated cost of $504,000, with $100,000 annual maintenance.

As I understand it, under the Public Works Administration project they deepened the main channel to 48 feet, and this authorization will lower it to the desired depth of 50 feet, as recommended by the San Francisco shipping interests and also by the War Department Engineers?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Why, the project depth for the entrance channel to the Golden Gate is now 50 feet.

Mr. WELCH. As projected?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes. I am advised that according to the last annual report of the Chief of Engineers it was not quite that deep, being 48 feet on June 30 last; but the project depth is 50 feet, and it may be that that depth has been secured by this time.

Mr. WELCH. In the authorization it is provided for the removal of Black Point Shoal west of pier 41 to a depth of 40 feet, with the estimated cost as fixed in the recommendation.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. WELCH. Also to move the easterly boundary of the portion of Alcatraz Shoal, to be removed under the project from 2,000 feet, now authorized, to 2,500 feet west of Alcatraz Light. Those are very necessary developments, and again I compliment the gentleman and his committee for having provided for them in this bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes; those matters are all authorized in this bill, I may say to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN. The gentleman and his committee have always shown a great deal of interest in the upper Mississippi River. There is no mention of the upper Mississippi River in this bill. May I ask the gentleman a question? In regard to the present project a 9-foot channel was authorized some years ago, but when the first authorization took place and the project approved, an authorization containing about $15,000,000 was approved by Congress. I want to find out whether it will be necessary to have an additional authorization from Congress to complete the 9-foot channel in the upper Mississippi River or may this come out of funds now in the hands of the administration for river purposes?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I may say to the gentleman that we have no funds available for river and harbor improvement work and have not had for the past 2 years. Congress has only appropriated enough to the Engineers of the War Department for actual maintenance purposes, and for the present, at least, we must depend upon the Public Works Administration for funds for improvement work. The upper Mississippi River project was adopted in the rivers and harbors bill of July 3, 1930, which provided for a 9-foot project. In that bill there was authorized $7,500,000 and also something like $6,000,000 that was left on hand from the old 6-foot project, making about $13,500,000 altogether. At present this work is now being pushed to completion by emergency funds. It is not embraced in this bill, and it is not necessary to do so, because the project has already been adopted by Congress. We have no funds at this time, anyway, to dispose of, and they are procuring that fund from this public-works agency.

Mr. ANDRESEN. The understanding is they can proceed and complete the entire project without additional authority from Congress?

Mr. MANSFIELD. They can insofar as the public emergency funds are concerned. They cannot do it out of appropriations by Congress without further legislation.

Mr. BOLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BOLTON. I have listened with a great deal of interest to what the gentleman said about the actions of the Corps of Engineers. He presented the matter very ably and in a complimentary fashion, and I compliment him on his presentation. Would it not be proper to add to his presentation the statement that it has been the policy of the Committee at no time to consider projects unless approved by the Corps of Engineers and the Chief of Engineers?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I may say to the gentleman from Ohio that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has pursued an invariable rule of requiring all rivers and harbors projects to have the approval and recommendation of the Corps and Chief of Engineers before we considered them eligible for consideration.

Mr. BOLTON. If I may ask the gentleman a further question, does the gentleman feel that the Natural Resources Commission in its activities will interfere in any way with the planning which the Chief of Engineers and the Board of Engineers have carried on in the last 2 years?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I do not know, but I hope they will not.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. The report of the Committee has estimated that the cost of improvement in connection with this bill for the Cape Cod Canal will be about $31,000,000 and states that approximately $6,000,000 has been set aside by the Public Works Administration. Does the gentleman feel that the entire amount will be approved by the Public Works Administration for this much needed improvement?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I certainly believe they will do so; otherwise the $6,000,000 they have spent will be of little avail. If they should not do so and this bill becomes law, hereafter, it will be subject to improvement in that manner under regular appropriations by the Congress.

Mr. HEALEY. And it will be necessary for Congress to make the appropriation.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes; such would be the case in the event the emergency funds should fail to complete the job.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is it the opinion of the gentleman that this amount of money should be allocated for the completion of this work?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I think it is a very meritorious project.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. WILCOX. It is noted in the bill that several projects are approved for which public-works funds have been appropriated or allocated. Is it the theory of this bill that these projects are approved for the amounts originally recommended by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, less the amount that has been expended by the Public Works Administration?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The projects we have included in the bill we authorize for the full amount, regardless of what amount has been expended upon them by the Public Works Administration. We want to legalize the thing in its entirety, so that in the event the Public Works Administration should go out of existence there will be some law by which these projects can be prosecuted to completion.

Mr. WILCOX. In other words, in a particular instance we will say that the original report and document referred to in the bill may have approved the deepening of a harbor to 30 feet, and in the meantime, since the filing of that report and before the bringing in of this bill, the Public Works Administration may have deepened the harbor to 25 feet, it is the object of this bill, as I understand it, to approve the project to the full 30 feet, so that it may be carried out legally regardless of what may have been done by the Public Works Administration.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. I think the gentleman's presentation has been excellent. It has clarified my mind on the provisions of section 1, with respect to Toledo Harbor, for instance, on page 18.

I am a little confused about section 2, where reference is made to Marblehead, Ohio, and Put in Bay, Ohio, on page 34, lines 19 to 22, inclusive. I want to find out about the rule of procedure. This act of the Congress, when passed, authorizes the War Department to make a survey. Does that project have to come back to Congress before it can go forward following the report of the engineers?

Mr. MANSFIELD. These are preliminary surveys. They are referred by the Chief of Engineers to the district engineer of the gentleman's district, who will make a preliminary examination and report back to the Board. If the Board finds that they probably possess such merit as to warrant further consideration, they will then order a more complete survey and investigation without further legislation from Congress.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. And assuming that they do find, from a preliminary survey, that it is meritorious and they make a further and more detailed examination, they then come back to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors with a report?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Not until they are approved by the Engineering Corps all along the line and referred back by the Secretary of War or by the Chief of Engineers, as the case may be.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. My point is that it comes back to the gentleman's Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. MANSFIELD. It comes back to the Congress and is referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. And the next bill brought out by the gentleman's committee, if such a project were deemed meritorious, would come under what you now call "the provisions of section 1."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Certainly, and would come up for consideration in another bill.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. I notice in my district there are three projects listed in the first section of the bill, Grand Marais Harbor, Agate Bay Harbor, and Duluth-Superior Harbor, and, as I understand it, the War Department has approved all of these projects, and I simply want to get it clear in my mind whether or not this improvement and this work is done in anticipation of the fact that some day we hope to have a Great Lakes-to-the-ocean waterway.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I cannot say that this has any connection with that matter further than in the event the St. Lawrence shipway——

Mr. PITTENGER. That is what I refer to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. In the event the St. Lawrence shipway becomes law, these expenditures will be in aid of carrying out the purpose of that project.

Mr. PITTENGER. They would have to be done in that event.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. PITTENGER. And does the Chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee know, off-hand, whether the deepening of the harbor to 26 feet will be deep enough if the St. Lawrence seaway should be constructed?

Mr. MANSFIELD. No; not to correspond with the St. Lawrence shipway, but nearly deep enough. About 27 feet would correspond with that project.

Mr. PITTENGER. That is what I thought.

Mr. MANSFIELD. But the connecting channels under the bill of 1930 have been increased in depth from 21 feet to a depth sufficient for boats operating with a draft of 24 feet. They are about 26 feet in depth, as 2 feet of water under the keel is usually considered as a reasonable margin of safety.

Mr. PITTENGER. And you need this for present boats?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Certainly; and they will then carry 2,000 tons more of ore than they have been able to carry under the 21-foot draft.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee, who has had long experience and knowledge of river and harbor legislation, if there is not some way, by amendment to this bill, whereby we might require the Public Works Administrator to spend earmarked river and harbor money for projects authorized by this bill and prevent him from spending money for projects never considered by your committee or by Congress? If so, I would like to put such an amendment in the bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. No; the National Recovery Act did provide that projects for river and harbor improvements would not be eligible for consideration unless authorized by Congress or at the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers. But the bill put through the conference a few days ago seems to have repealed that provision of law insofar as future expenditures are concerned.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman means the public-works bill?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The 4,880 million bill.

Mr. MOTT. Does not the gentleman think that at the end of the first section, if we required the Public Works Administrator to apply the river-and-harbor earmarked money to these projects, that it would be effective?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I do not know about that. I am sure that it would meet with a veto, because it is the desire of the President to have the funds without strings of that kind.

Mr. MOTT. I think it is in accordance with the wishes of your committee and most of the Members of Congress.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I think such a measure as that would have to go to the Ways and Means Committee because we would not have jurisdiction.

Mr. MOTT. As a glaring example of the action of the Public Works Administrator—his utter disregard of law and his seeming contempt for Congress—there is the Umpqua project in my State. It has been authorized for a long time, has the approval of the Chief of Engineers and the Board of Army Engineers, providing Mr. Ickes would allot the money, but he will not do it. I am trying to find some way of compelling him to do it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I will have to decline to yield further, as my time is about up, and will ask the gentleman from California to use some of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has 8 minutes remaining.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I will reserve that and ask that the gentleman from California now use some of his time.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to compliment the distinguished Chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee and his able committee for having brought to the floor this constructive and well-balanced bill (H. R. 6732). At the same time I invite attention to some projects provided for in this bill, which, while of immediate importance to maritime facilities in San Francisco Harbor, are of national importance because they further develop one of the greatest natural harbors in the world. They increase the facilities which will be at the disposal of the merchant marine of the world in peace time and our Army and Navy in time of war.

There are three specific projects in the bill to which I invite your attention. The first of these is to carry out the recommendations made by the War Department with reference to the main channel or approach to San Francisco Harbor. The War Department, in 1932, recommended that the main ship channel be deepened across the bar at the entrance to the harbor to 50 feet and a width of 2,000 feet.

Approaching the Golden Gate to enter San Francisco Bay there are two principal channels, one known as the "main ship channel", and the second as "Bonita Channel." A short distance out from the shore a crescent-shaped sand bar imperils ships seeking to enter by the former when high seas are running. Bordering the Bonita Channel there are submerged rocks which make this channel treacherous for vessels, particular during fogs, although it is a natural channel of great value to coastwise trade entering the Golden Gate from the north.

The present administration, recognizing the importance of San Francisco Harbor and the necessity for it being accessible to any large vessel at all times, has started the work recommended by the War Department on the main ship channel by the use of public-works funds, but it is now necessary to provide legislative authorization in order that this work might be completed.

While the War Department has not recommended the removal of submerged rocks in the Bonita Channel up to the present time, it is my opinion that it has not done so because of technical difficulties entering into the problem. Shipping interests generally, however, have long since urged that the value of this channel to navigation is so great as to make it imperative that steps be taken at an early date to make it safe for vessels. It is hoped that the War Department, through its able Corps of Engineers, will continue their study of the problems involved so that an early recommendation might be made concerning this work.

In the meantime, this delay increases the necessity for deepening the main ship channel at as early a date as is practicable. The normal annual peace-time tonnage passing through the Golden Gate has been far in excess of 25,000,000 tons. This would be greatly increased in time of war, even doubling or trebling, so that the recommendation of the War Department that the channel be deepened to 50 feet and a width of 2,000 feet where it crosses this bar is conservative.

The second project recommended by the War Department and to which I invite the attention of the House of Representatives is that contained in House Document No. 279, Seventy-second Congress, and in accordance with the modification included in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 8, Seventy-third Congress. This provides for deepening the channel in lower San Francisco Bay through the San Bruno Shoal to 27 feet and 500 feet wide and continuing the channel 300 feet wide and 27 feet deep from Dumbarton Point to the mouth of the Guadulupe River, with a turning basin 600 feet wide, 1,200 feet long, and 30 feet deep at the lower end of the channel.

Such a channel in addition to increasing the facilities available in San Francisco Bay for both the Army and Navy in time of war, will give a direct outlet for commerce from the Santa Clara Valley, one of the most beautiful as well as fertile valleys in the whole world. Recognizing a potential annual traffic through this channel of 500,000 to 750,000 tons, which would in large part be composed of agricultural products, the value of this work cannot be overemphasized. At the present time shallow-draft vessels only can use this area and their traffic consists of canned goods, tin plate, sugar, lumber, petroleum, and miscellaneous products.

The third project to which I desire to call attention is that contained in Rivers and Harbors Document No. 10, Seventy-third Congress, and which was recommended by the War Department on May 25, 1933. It provides for the improvement of the channel in Redwood Creek to a depth of 27 feet and 200 feet wide from deep water in San Francisco Bay to the junction of Redwood Creek and West Point Slough, with a turning basin about 1,800 feet long, 700 feet wide, and 27 feet deep at the inner end of the channel. The completion of this work will give deep-water port facilities to Redwood City connecting directly with one transcontinental railway and with a second already proposed for this point. To carry on this improvement all necessary rights-of-way and suitable areas for the disposal of dredged material will be furnished to the United States free of cost.

There are two major considerations that must be taken into account in developing work of this kind. Both are national in character. The first is the strategic importance of a harbor to the United States for its naval and military uses and the second is the question of whether or not it is an important peace-time port for our commerce with the world.

Briefly referring to the first, San Francisco Harbor and Bay are of the utmost strategic value to our military forces. The United States has about 1,100 miles of coast line along the Pacific extending from the Canadian to the Mexican borders. At the extreme northern end is the port of Seattle, and at the southern end are to be found the ports of San Diego and Los Angeles. San Francisco Harbor lies midway between these two extremes, and it is the only port of refuge between these two extremes which large merchant vessels and capital warships have.

The importance of this harbor, therefore, to our Navy is supreme. The Navy Department has stated that the harbor of San Francisco is the only harbor on the Pacific coast which possesses practically all of the natural advantages for a main operating base for the United States Navy. In recognition of this fact a great aircraft base has been established at the southern end of San Francisco Bay, another on the eastern side of the bay in Alameda County, and an immense bombing base in Marin County, which borders on the northern side of the bay. In addition, the Navy Department maintains one of its major navy yards at Mare Island on the northern end of the bay.

Likewise, in the San Francisco Bay area would be centered the major activities of the War Department on the Pacific coast in the event of war. Its central location would afford the surest and fastest defense of the entire coast line.

In the past I have appeared before the Rivers and Harbors Committee of Congress and have consulted with War Department officials concerning many of the projects already undertaken. The work undertaken by the Public Works Administration has commanded my active interest and has emphasized the recognition of the advantages of this area given by our military forces. Under the Public Works Administration work has been done at Point Knox Shoal, which is now completed; deepening the main ship channel was started, which is now recommended for completion in this bill. Among the other projects accomplished by the Public Works Administration through funds at its disposal may be cited the following:

Bar channel, 48 feet, March 8, 1934.
Islais Creek Shoal, 33 feet, April 6, 1934.
Presidio Shoal, 37 feet, February 21, 1934.
Point Knox Shoal, 35 feet, March 22, 1934.
Rincon Reef Rock (inner), 41 feet, August 27, 1932.
Rincon Reef Rock (outer), 41 feet, August 20, 1932.
Blossom Rock, 42 feet, May 10, 1932.
Arch Rock, 35 feet, August 19, 1932.
Shag Rocks Nos. 1 and 2, both 37 feet, August 25, 1932.
Harding Rock, 35 feet, August 3, 1932.

San Francisco is one of the youngest large cities in the world. The harbor facilities in San Francisco Bay are not only its greatest asset but are one of the greatest assets of our Nation. Its rapid growth has been due in large part to its ideal geographic location with reference to the rest of the country. On a straight line from the great metropolitan areas of the eastern part of our Nation, it is the key to the Orient. Men of vision and foresight urge the continuing development of these harbor facilities at the southerly end of San Francisco Peninsula, firm in the belief that this port will become the greatest port in all the world. Through it continues to pass a great proportion of our entire commerce with the teeming millions of the Orient.

It was with a view to hastening the day when the harbor facilities of the San Francisco Peninsula will be unified that I introduced a resolution in the last Congress to bring about the establishment of pierhead lines from Hunters Point, in San Francisco, to Ravenswood Point, in San Mateo County, a distance of approximately 25 miles. Hearings have been held on the proposal by the War Department. When this is accomplished it will become an integral part of the port development contemplated by the enactment of the present legislation.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, the very able presentation of this whole question by our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Texas, Judge MANSFIELD, leaves but little to be said. Judge MANSFIELD is a technician in this field. He knows the ins and outs of waterway transportation in America. He has a birdseye picture of economic conditions that make it necessary.

The Members of the House well know that I am very jealous not only of the prerogatives but of the high reputation and technique of Congress. I believe we have sitting here in the House more than a hundred men who are of true Cabinet caliber. They are outstanding men in point of natural ability. From their service here and by virtue of their contact with problems that pass before them in their committee work they have a complete and full knowledge of these various technical questions. For that reason I am somewhat enamored of the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN] that Cabinet officers have a seat on the floor here where they may be interrogated by Members of the House. Then, indeed, if that were true, as it is under the English system, gentlemen who have no technical qualifications for these high positions would not find their way into the Cabinet, because by the very nature of their services and experiences in the past they could not answer the questions which the Members of the House would propound to them. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] knows this question thoroughly, and he is a credit and honor to the House as now constituted.

I was greatly interested in one phase of Judge MANSFIELD's discussion, namely, the suggestion that the railroads have no quarrel with waterways, and that is, in fact, true. I found in my files a statement by the gentleman from Texas—and his statements are always well considered—that 90 percent of the harbor improvements in America were requested by the railroads—increase of harbor depth, due to increase of tonnage. The classic example of that as referred to by the gentleman from Texas is the upbuilding of the Pittsburgh area, which is perhaps the greatest railroad area in America, or, in fact, in the entire world. Sixty years ago it was the belief of the German and English manufacturers of steel that they had the steel market of the world permanently, because America could not compete, due to the fact that over 1,500 miles separated her coal from the ore of the Mesaba Range in Minnesota. The waterways, carrying the ores from the Mesaba Range down the Lakes at one-twentieth of the cost for which the railroads would carry it, made possible the development of Pittsburgh and the development of the greatest railroad center in the world.

There is the present suggestion that water transportation shall be coordinated and weighted down with the past sins of the railroads, due to the performances of the Jay Goulds and the Jim Fisks, and in these latter days the more elaborate and perhaps legalistic performance of some of the American banking groups who now hold the railroads in the hollow of their hands. Somebody on the floor just suggests they have a finer technique. It is, as I say, more legalistic. If you have any question about that, and the danger of that coordination, I ask you to read the hearings before the Wheeler committee on the bill that proposes to coordinate them. The railway and waterways can exist as separate entities, and each is a feeder and a corollary to the other.

I have a sympathetic attitude toward the railroads, but I can see from 6 years' observation and experience on the committee that the two things are separate and distinct and cannot go hand in hand. The distinguished chairman of the committee has shown you by his very able discourse, which I trust those of you who have not heard will read at length, that it is 5 years since we have had a river and harbor bill. This bill is simply an authorization and earmarks these 204 projects and authorizes their improvement. These items include the necessary coastal channels in Alaska, where no other transportation scheme is present. It takes care of the Missouri, Tennessee, and Warrior Rivers and the harbors of New England, and Mississippi is connected with the Great Lakes by the Great Lakes and Hudson Waterway.

I emphasize what has been already stated by the distinguished chairman of the committee, that every project in the bill has the economic "John Hancock" and approval of the Board of Engineers, who, I say, without fear of successful contradiction, are the greatest economists on water transportation not only in America but in the whole history of the world. Every project in this bill has run a triple gauntlet. First the district engineer, then the division engineer, and then the Board of Rivers and Harbors. I ask any Member on this floor, if he can, to point to an economic fallacy, and by economic fallacy I mean one project in this bill that will not in due course return two-fold to the people of the country, after it gets in operation, the money disbursed for the purpose of making the improvements. This, I repeat, is not an appropriation; it is simply an authorization, and Congress is again after a long period of silence finding its voice.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. Yes.

Mr. BIERMANN. I understand the projects named in the bill are the most commendable projects.

Mr. CULKIN. Yes; they are the projects that have been recommended by the engineers.

Mr. BIERMANN. In 1930 the Rivers and Harbors Committee, different than it is now, considerably, authorized the building of the Mississippi 9-foot channel from the mouth of the Illinois River to Minneapolis. From that day until now, Congress has neither authorized the continuance of that project nor appropriated one single dollar for that purpose.

Mr. CULKIN. Is the gentleman now talking about the upper Mississippi?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes. In this bill there is no reference to the upper Mississippi 9-foot channel.

Mr. CULKIN. That becomes P. W. A. now. Let me say to the gentleman that that was more or less the child of the Senate.

Mr. BIERMANN. I compliment the House. The House is usually right.

Mr. CULKIN. I thank the gentleman. The gentleman feels we are generally right on this bill?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BIERMANN. In 1933 your committee had before it the proposition of authorizing a further appropriation of $11,600,000 for the continuation of the building of the 9-foot channel. I think they had in mind that that amount of money would complete a channel that would surely be a 6-foot channel, and they were going to try that out and see how it worked; but that bill never came on to the floor of this House.

Mr. CULKIN. I do not want the gentleman to make a speech in my time.

Mr. BIERMANN. I wanted to ask if there is anything in this bill that indicates that this committee wants to turn over to Mr. Ickes the completion of the 9-foot channel. By leaving it out of this bill, does the committee indicate that it wants Mr. Ickes to complete it? Will the gentleman be kind enough to answer that question, whether or not his committee wants Mr. Ickes to complete this 9-foot channel, which is a criminal folly, and is so considered by the informed people in the territory affected?

Mr. CULKIN. That was authorized in the 1930 bill, so that it now has the force of law, and he can legally do it.

Now, I know it is to the gentleman's sorrow, but that is all I can say about it.

Mr. BOLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. BOLTON. I think the gentleman is not entirely correct. The 1930 bill authorized the upper Mississippi River project with an expenditure of approximately $11,600,000 to complete five locks and dams, which we felt would insure a 6-foot channel. That was the extent to which the Rivers and Harbors Committee went, but Mr. Ickes, under the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, has seen fit to authorize many millions in addition on the upper Mississippi that were not with the recommendation of the Rivers and Harbors Committee at all.

Mr. BIERMANN. I should like to know whether your committee sanctions the expenditure of these tens of millions of dollars not authorized by Congress?

Mr. BOLTON. I cannot speak for the committee, but as far as I am concerned personally I do not.

Mr. CULKIN. I declare this last bout a draw.

I now yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman expressed the opinion that in this bill Congress was again finding its voice.

Mr. CULKIN. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. May I ask what indication there is here that Congress has found its voice on this subject, when the Administrator of Public Works, under his present authority, may ignore every authorization in the bill? He does not have to spend one cent on any of these projects, but on the other hand may expend all of the money he pleases on projects that have never even been submitted to Congress.

Mr. CULKIN. At least I will say we are putting our imprimatur on projects which we believe are proper and should be developed. A later Congress when, in the usual phrase of the day, the emergency is not so great, may be more vocal and insistent.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman made a statement a moment ago that not one of the projects included in this bill would be found not to be economically feasible, and would ultimately return the money invested in them. I should like to ask the gentleman if his committee has at any time ascertained from the engineers of the War Department the amount of traffic on each of the various streams and the amount of freight that is being handled, so that you could calculate whether it was paying or not?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CULKIN. I assume it is a statement of fact which everybody knows that each of these projects, when it comes into the committee, is accompanied by a detailed report as to tonnage, as to the necessity for transportation, and as to the economic surroundings. For example, in some of the small ports in the coastal waters of Alaska there is no other mode of transportation available. The railroads are not near them. It is essential to their very life. Every phase of this matter is discussed, including a full presentation of the past, future, and prospective tonnage.

Mr. MAY. I wish the gentleman to understand that I am not at all opposed to the development of waterways, particularly inland waterways, but I live on a tributary of the Ohio River which has some 38 dams in it. It is navigable from Pittsburgh out to the mouth of the river. I have heard the statement made that the traffic——

Mr. CULKIN. I hope the gentleman will only ask a question. I am only going to yield for a question. My time is very short.

Mr. MAY. The question is this: I have heard the statement made by some who seem to know about these conditions that it costs about $75 a ton to handle freight, based on the amount of money invested in those dams, at a reasonable rate of interest. That is, to transport freight over the Ohio River.

Mr. CULKIN. Of course, that is definite propaganda. I do not have the time to go into that now, but I will characterize it as definite and absurd propaganda.

Mr. BIERMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I cannot yield further. I have given the gentleman about one-third of my time. I am sorry and cannot yield further.

Now, this authorization is far-flung. It is not sectional. It represents the North, the South, the East, and the West, wherever there is a demand for economic transportation, and in some parts of the country the demand is exceedingly grievous.

I know of one section of this country, and it is several thousands of miles from my home, where it costs more to carry a bushel of wheat by railroad a hundred miles than the bushel of wheat is worth. This situation, of course, can be cured only as it was in the case of the carriage of ore from the Messaba Range to Pittsburgh, by cheap water transportation. These questions have been weighed carefully and considerably by this committee. The word "pork" is used proverbially in rivers and harbors, but it no longer applies. The high character of the Chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee indicates that there is no pork in this bill, and there will be none under his auspices. The cry of "pork" is but another kind of propaganda.

May I say, in conclusion, that the Rivers and Harbors Committee has a just pride in this bill. Its enactment means much—and I say it in all earnestness and after 6 years on this committee—means much to the future of America and the unborn generations. The canalization and river and harbor improvement provided in this measure will result in great economic savings to the people of America—East, West, North, and South.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. The Great Lakes-Hudson River Seaway is, to my mind, one of the most truly national projects in this bill. This project involves Federal aid to the State of New York in the sum of $27,000,000. A detailed history and the economics of this project are set forth in House Document No. 20, Seventy-third Congress, second session. This waterway affects not only the teeming millions of the East but the residents of all the States bordering on the Great Lakes, and will, when improved as recommended by the engineers, give low-cost transportation not only to the Great Lakes and New York but to the New England States, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. It is the connecting link between the systems of canals now projected in the Midwest with those on the Atlantic coast and through the Intercoastal Canal to the great ports of the South.

The report of the engineers recommends the deepening to 14 feet of the existing Oswego Canal between Lake Ontario and Three Rivers, and from Three Rivers to the city of Albany, where it connects with the 27-foot waterway now provided by the Federal Government.

For the information of the House, I will state that New York State has spent on this canal by way of construction, operation, and maintenance the sum of more than $230,000,000. This disbursement has been a contribution by the State of New York to the national welfare; for this canal, on which 90 percent of the present tonnage is interstate, is toll free under the constitution of New York. This canal was the historic waterway over which in the early days passed the migratory frontiersmen who subsequently developed the great West. Over it passed the immigrant who had elected to make in America a home for himself and his descendants.

The Oswego and Erie Canals were opened about the year 1828. It is interesting to note that the original Welland Canal was opened in the year 1833. These waterways furnished the original water transportation between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean by way of the Hudson River. The Niagara barrier between Lake Ontario and Lake Erie was overcome by the Welland Canal. Without these canals national and state progress would have been materially retarded. Where formerly it cost $150 per ton to ship grain and flour from the Lakes to New York, these canals reduced the freight rates to $12 per ton. Its influence on the development of the Great Lakes region was most marked. This territory at this time was a wilderness. Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, and Wisconsin came into their own when these avenues of transportation were provided.

I want to reemphasize to the Members of the House that this waterway route via the Great Lakes and through the State canals to the seaboard has served a great national purpose. It is still serving it. During the year 1933 more than 4,000,000 tons of traffic, valued at more than $100,000,000, went over these waterways and was distributed to the States of the Great Lakes region. It is noteworthy, according to the well-considered report of the engineers, that 90 percent of this traffic was interstate. It is noteworthy that the tremendous savings in transportation which are affected by this waterway benefit the farmer and manufacturer of the Western and Eastern States alike.

The saving will result in increased comfort and higher standard of living to the man on the farm and to the resident of the cities. If Congress is faithful to the power and authority which the Nation has imposed on it it will speedily enact this legislation into law. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, for many years I have listened to the discussions of river and harbor bills. In the earlier days most of the time was taken up in characterizing the river and harbor bills as "pork barrel" bills. It was sometime until I fully comprehended what that meant. I am delighted to say today, however, that I have good faith in my friend of all these years, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] and chairman of this committee, his knowledge of legislation, and his understanding of what pork barrel means, to know that he would not sanction the reporting of any such measure to this House, as was once done. He has given us, furthermore, wonderful information in regard to the purpose of this bill.

Most of the bills that relate to water and the West have had to do with irrigation schemes and plans and with power and lights. I should like to call your attention to another phase which might be encompassed within the range of a river and harbor bill. I have read of the devastating floods of the Mississippi. It seems to me these two purposes—irrigation and electric light and power—for which vast sums of money have been appropriated, could well stand aside for a moment while we consider this uncontrolled flood force which destroys, but which could be converted to useful purposes if given proper attention; and in the short time at my disposal I shall give you several concrete examples of how it might be done. After I had looked over these two particular instances I was in great wonderment why the intelligence of this House had not been aroused by the recurrence of these destructive floods on the Mississippi River; how it was they had failed to direct the attention of the committee and the country to putting barriers before these floods on the tributary streams.

I shall cite you two cases in Pennsylvania, and I hope you will investigate at least one. There are Members from western Pennsylvania who are familiar with what we call the Pymatuning Swamp proposition, and they may tell about this wonderful accomplishment.

While I was a member of the Water Supply Commission of Pennsylvania, during a vacation from this House, and associating with eminent men like John Birkenbine, who built many dams in the South, and is known to be one of the greatest hydroelectric engineers in the world, they impounded that water; and that great section, including part of Ohio, has been made safe from floods. The water is impounded during flood times and stored against use in the summer season to give them ample water supply for their mills on Beaver River, a tributary of the Ohio.

But the greatest engineering feat, with completely satisfactory results, is but 60 miles from Washington, at Safe Harbor, just over the line in Pennsylvania.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FOCHT. The State of Pennsylvania has an area of 45,126 square miles. The watershed that supplies the north and west branches of the Susquehanna River of Pennsylvania covers an area of half the 45,126 square miles of the State; yet the young Engineer, John Walls, who later built dams for the Italian Government, can sit in his office and by touching a button have absolute control of the flood waters of that watershed in Pennsylvania. In other words, when a flood starts or is threatened in the upper sections of the State he opens his wickets. The water does not flow over the dam at all; not a drop goes over, so perfect is the control he has over a mile and a half of dam; but he opens the gates and the water flows into lower portions of the river and basins ready to receive it. If we would do the same things on the tributary streams of the Mississippi River we would not have recurring harrowing stories we read every year of the Mississippi River, with the bottom of the river higher than the surrounding land, breaking dikes and spreading desolation and ruin over that great valley.

No such thing could occur if we would take the money we are going to put into these other schemes and arrest the water of the tributary streams, which would be a complete and definite control of all the waters. That can be seen and the Members will agree with me when they look at this Safe Harbor Dam. They have put that into operation and are even able to control the ice that comes down the river, as well as all kinds of debris. It is the most complete example of flood-water control the world has seen; yet we go on with these other doubtful schemes and pass by something that would save an untold number of lives and billions of dollars of property and terror those floods cause in the Mississippi Valley.

Mr. BIERMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BIERMANN. The proposal now in the making in connection with this 9-foot channel is to put in about 27 dams which will maintain the river at a certain level all the time. This maintenance of the river at a certain level at all times will fill up all the natural reservoirs so that in flood times they will be filled instead of having them filled with flood water.

Mr. FOCHT. Do what I have suggested with every tributary and that will be the end of floods in the Mississippi Valley.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] on his observations just made.

It was my privilege to come across the country in 1913 on my way to Washington in the first train brought through by the Pennsylvania Railroad after the disastrous flood of that spring. I cannot picture in words the damage that was done at the time. Following that flood, five dams were constructed in the region affected. They are known as the "Morgan Dams." I understand that since those dams have been constructed they have never had a foot of high water. They hold back the flood waters and let it out at the low-water period.

Mr. Chairman, when the flood-control bill was pending in the House some years ago I followed the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. Sears, who knew something about floods and how to control them. Senators came from the other side of the Capitol to this room, and had it not been for their visit we would have provided in that bill for reservoirs in the Platte and Mississippi Valleys, advocated by Mr. Sears. It was the Senators who came over here and lobbied among the House Members that defeated the reservoir projects. I know what I am talking about, because I was approached at the time.

I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and to the Members of this House, coming as I do from the Mississippi Valley and also knowing something about the tributaries of the Mississippi River, that you can spend all the money you want trying to control the flood waters of the Mississippi River, but until you provide storage basins to hold back the flood waters you will never succeed, no matter how much money you spend, in stopping those disastrous floods. We have some natural basins over there, and the cost would not be great.

I hope that the Flood Control Committee of this House at the present session of Congress will at least provide for a survey so that we may construct some dams out there to hold back these flood waters. If they do that, we will not have the situation in the Mississippi Valley that we had this spring.

I have received numerous telegrams from residents of the St. Francis River and Little River Valley in the southern part of Missouri, telling how the people of that section of the country were put out of their homes around Christmas time. Only last month they suffered again.

The Government has purchased over a million acres of ground for forest reservations in Missouri and is to buy more. A survey, I am sure, will disclose it is possible to hold back the flood waters from many Ozark streams by the mere construction of dams. Ohio has solved its problem. We should profit by what Ohio has done. "Build reservoirs" has been the cry of the people in the Mississippi Valley, and their appeal should be heeded.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this is a matter we can conquer if it is handled properly, and it would save the Government money in the end. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, coming from the Great Lakes section of the country, as I do, and from a great State—Michigan—that has more than 1,500 miles of coast line, with many rivers, harbors, and ports, I rise to speak in behalf of this bill with more than ordinary interest. I say that because it is known that one-third of all the commerce of the United States is borne on the waves of the fresh-water seas of this country, the Great Lakes. In 1924 that rose to the almost unheard of sum of 131,000,000 tons. May I say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], who asked a question a few minutes ago about whether or not there was any saving on the tonnage of water-borne commerce, that if there was a saving of $1 per ton on the tonnage of the Great Lakes you would save half of the amount provided in this entire bill, or $131,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, I want to pause to pay a just and deserving tribute to the able chairman of our committee. I think I voice the opinion of every member on that committee, whether he is a new member or an old member, when I say that we have received nothing but uniform consideration at his hands. [Applause.] His remarkable memory, his almost unbelievable fund of information on rivers and harbors and the commerce of the United States has captured the admiration and respect of his entire committee. In that work he has been ably assisted by a man who sits here on the floor of the House today, who has spent one-third of a century in Rivers and Harbors Committee work. I refer to Mr. McGann, clerk of the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. WILCOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. WILCOX. As a Member of the House who is not a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, but who has had occasion to appear before that committee, may I join in the tribute the gentleman from Michigan has paid to the Chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. I also want to express my compliments to the committee for the fair, impartial, nonpartisan, and nonsectional manner in which this bill has been prepared and the hearings conducted.

Mr. DONDERO. I thank the gentleman for his observation.

The economy of water transportation of the country becomes apparent when it is known that a ton of coal can be carried from Buffalo, N. Y., to Duluth, Minn., a distance of 1,000 miles, for approximately the same cost as carrying that ton of coal from the curb on the street in front of your home to your cellar window, about 50 cents per ton, and that tonnage in the Great Lakes region moves at a cost of about one-tenth of 1 cent per ton-mile, or $1 per ton per thousand miles.

It may also be of interest to the committee, when it comes to the matter of considering the efficiency with which water transportation is carried on and conducted today, to know that a ship entered a place called "Two Port Harbor", 75 miles east of Duluth, Minn., on the north shore of Lake Superior, took on a cargo of 12,508 tons of iron ore in 16½ minutes, and in 3 days transported that cargo 1,000 miles, or nearly so, to the port of Conneaut, Ohio, and there delivered it to the great furnaces of the steel industry in 3 hours and 5 minutes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I will be pleased to yield to my chairman.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I desire to suggest to the gentleman that just such instrumentalities have reduced the transportation costs on the Great Lakes to practically a mere nothing, or, as the gentleman has said, to 1 mill per ton-mile.

Mr. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, a member of the committee.

Mr. BOLTON. May I inquire whether the shipment referred to was made during the past navigation season or before we had experienced so much low water?

Mr. DONDERO. I think it was made before that time.

Mr. BOLTON. In other words, the 600-footer during such low water cannot carry that amount of ore.

Mr. DONDERO. I am going to touch on that point in my discussion.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I live on the Great Lakes. I am thoroughly conversant with the low levels of the Lakes at this time and the ever-recurring low levels which seem to get lower each time they recur. I am also familiar with what has been contemplated in connection with the building of compensating works in order to restore and to maintain the level of the Great Lakes. Of course, we cannot go on forever deepening and widening channels, thereby increasing the flow of water out of the Lakes, and maintain the level of the Lakes unless we do something to regulate the flow and keep it down to the normal rate. It should not be forgotten that every time the level of the Lakes is reduced 1 inch it reduces the cargo-carrying capacity of the larger ships 500 tons. In addition to this, we must either install compensating works or continue indefinitely to deepen our harbors and channels until we have nothing remaining but these channels.

Mr. DONDERO. The gentleman is correct about that. That is something that will have to be done.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BIERMANN. In speaking of the economy of Great Lakes transportation, of course, the gentleman does not want to compare such transportation with transportation on the upper Mississippi River. The Great Lakes have a natural channel and on this channel the traffic is transported in ships, while on the upper Mississippi there is an unnatural or artificial channel which has to be made and maintained and the traffic is transported by barges at from 3 to 5 or 8 miles an hour in a very cumbersome and almost obsolete manner. Is not that true?

Mr. DONDERO. That is true, and of course the cost varies in different parts of the United States.

Mr. BIERMANN. But my point is that you cannot compare the Great Lakes with a river.

Mr. DONDERO. I think that is true.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FIESINGER. I was wondering if the cost of 1 mill per ton-mile included the cost of loading and unloading?

Mr. DONDERO. I cannot say as to that, but perhaps the chairman of the committee will be able to answer that later on.

I may say in connection with the efficiency of transportation on the water of the Great Lakes that today a 100-ton car of coal can be loaded into the hold of one of these big ships in 2 minutes.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. Is it not true that the bulk transportation on the Great Lakes is the cheapest transportation in the world?

Mr. DONDERO. That is correct.

Mr. CULKIN. Averaging about one-tenth of the cost of rail transportation.

Mr. DONDERO. I think that is a correct observation.

One of the major problems in this country is adequate disposition of the products of the farm, the factory, and the mine to the centers of population and the consuming public. Therefore the economical transportation and distribution of such products enter into the economic life of the Nation and the cost of living. Water transportation always has been, and undoubtedly always will be, a cheaper method of transportation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 4 additional minutes.

Mr. DONDERO. This comparison of the cost of transportation is not intended as a criticism or by way of making a comparison with any other methods of transportation, and certainly it is not intended as a comparison with or a criticism of the railroads of the country. Both are indispensable to the Nation and both have contributed much to the progress of our national life and the expansion of our great national domain.

Touching upon the question referred to by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF], I may say that the lowering of the water in the Great Lakes and the construction of larger and deeper draft vessels have made it necessary to deepen the connecting channels of the Great Lakes from 21 feet to approximately 26 feet, and I may say that nearly $20,000,000 has thus far been expended upon this work alone. When this is done, there are projects in this bill which provide for the deepening of the harbors of the Great Lakes region of the country to conform and correspond with the deepening of the connecting channels of the Great Lakes, and if the St. Lawrence Seaway ever becomes a reality, what we are providing in this bill will not have to be done over again, because the depths that are provided in the projects here will conform and correspond and harmonize with the depth of the St. Lawrence seaway when that great waterway is completed.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BEITER. Does the gentleman state that if the St. Lawrence seaway were constructed it would be a benefit to the Great Lakes and the Great Lakes seaports?

Mr. DONDERO. I think it would. It would permit the grain and the other products of the farms from the great Northwest to find an outlet to the ocean and the ports abroad.

Mr. BEITER. What good would it do if they got to the outlet or to the ocean when there is no foreign trade?

Mr. DONDERO. I may say to the gentleman from New York that if we continue our policy of reciprocal tariffs there may not be any foreign trade or foreign markets for our products. [Applause.]

Mr. BEITER. We lost that trade prior to the enactment of the Reciprocal Tariff Act.

Mr. DONDERO. There may have been some action by the European countries to stop foreign trade, but not entirely so.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HULL. If the St. Lawrence seaway were such a futile proposition, why is it that the present President so urgently advocated it a year ago?

Mr. DONDERO. I think that is a good question. I may say, in conclusion, that on two occasions when this committee was called into conference by the President of the United States, the one thing he asked was how much of the money provided in these projects would go to labor, directly or indirectly, and it was shown that 76 percent of the funds expended on rivers and harbors projects would go to labor either directly or indirectly. Therefore, as a relief measure, and for the purpose of furnishing work to the unemployed, much can be said in favor of this proposed legislation.

This bill is not the result of hasty conclusions. It represents the work of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of three Congresses, and covers a period of nearly 5 years. Every project has been thoroughly considered and weighed by your committee before adopting the same and recommending it to the consideration of the House. I, therefore, urge every Member of this body to give to the bill and the projects included therein your earnest and thoughtful consideration and support.

The bill is in no sense an appropriation measure. It appropriates no money whatsoever. If it becomes a law, the necessary amounts will be submitted to the Congress by the Appropriations Committee in such sums as may be required from year to year to carry out and complete the work provided in the bill. When spread over a number of years this will be a moderate sum.

There are a number of items in the bill which have a direct bearing upon our national defense. I refer to some of those located on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, so that in addition to the improvement of rivers and harbors, navigation, and commerce, the bill has a threefold purpose in that it also serves the question of the defense of our country.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the distinguished Chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee for bringing in this bill. This is the first rivers and harbors bill reported to the House since 1930.

Gentlemen will recall that we urged the Rivers and Harbors Committee at the last session of Congress to bring in a bill similar to this one. In answer to my direct question on the floor last session as to why no river and harbor legislation was being reported, I was informed by the Chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee that the reason was because the President did not want any rivers and harbors bill at that session. In other words, the committee declined to function altogether at the last session because the President told them not to.

Now, I understand the pending bill is brought in at this session in spite of the fact that the President of the United States still is of the same opinion as he was last year. He still does not want Congress to enact any real river and harbor legislation. Therefore, I want to congratulate the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and particularly its chairman, for having nerve enough to bring in this bill, even though, as I propose to show, the bill under present conditions does not guarantee that the projects authorized in it will be carried out.

Mr. BEITER. On what ground does the gentleman say that the President did not want the bill?

Mr. MOTT. This is the same bill the committee wanted to report and which it would have brought in at the last session if the President had not forbidden it. If the gentleman will look at the RECORD of the last session he will see the colloquy that was had on the floor between the chairman of the committee and myself. I asked the chairman why he had not brought in a rivers and harbors bill, and the chairman said that the reason it was not brought in was because the President did not want it. I am glad that the bill has finally been brought in, and now I want Members to understand what the nature and scope of the bill is.

This bill is by no means what many gentlemen here believe it to be. As a matter of fact it is little more than a gesture. It authorizes certain projects approved by the Board of Army Engineers and authorizes surveys by the Army Engineers of other projects yet to be approved. There are five river and harbor projects, for example, in my own State, authorized by the bill to be constructed. There are 15 other projects in my State which the bill authorizes surveys to be made upon, and which in due course will be authorized for construction. With this, naturally, I am pleased, and in this respect the bill is excellent.

But under the present set-up, under the large discretionary power and the dictatorial authority that has been given the Administrator of Public Works, under previous legislation, everything provided in this bill can be entirely set aside by the Public Works Administrator. The Administrator of Public Works can utterly ignore every authorization in this bill. He is not required, under the bill, to construct a single project named in it.

Every project authorized by this bill has been examined, surveyed, and approved by the Board of Army Engineers and has been recommended by the Rivers and Harbors Committee after the most careful and exhaustive study, and yet, under existing law, the Administrator of Public Works can absolutely refuse to allot any money whatever to any of these approved projects.

I say that is not right. I say that infringes upon the authority of Congress. The Congress of the United States never had any right to surrender that authority to the Administrator of Public Works. Congress now should immediately proceed to recapture that authority by providing in this bill that the projects authorized in it be actually constructed.

When the Board of Engineers surveys and approves a project and when the Rivers and Harbors Committee authorizes its construction and when finally it is reported by the committee to Congress and Congress passes the bill, then, I say, it should be mandatory upon the Public Works Administrator or upon whoever may have charge of the distribution of rivers and harbors money immediately to allot that money for the construction of the projects named in the bill.

I am going to offer, when the bill is read, an amendment which will undertake to require the Administrator of Public Works, who, as soon as the works-relief bill is approved by the President, will have in his hands $350,000,000 for rivers and harbors—I am going to offer an amendment which will require the Administrator of Public Works to make that money available to the Board of Army Engineers for the construction of these approved projects.

We are all delighted to have this bill for which we have waited and worked so long. The people of my own district, which embraces the entire seacoast of Oregon and within which are located some 16 of the projects authorized in this bill for construction or survey, are particularly happy that we are now about to pass the bill. But while we are at it, let us amend the bill, if possible, so as to require the actual construction of that which we are here authorizing.

Whether such an amendment will be held to be germane I do not know, but I think it is proper. I think it is highly necessary, and I think that the Congress should adopt it. At any rate, I am going to offer it.

The improvement of rivers and harbors, particularly the small harbors on the Pacific coast, is absolutely essential to the economic life and prosperity of that part of the United States. Our principal product there is lumber. In Oregon, for example, lumber supplies in normal times more than 60 percent of the entire pay roll of the State. That lumber cannot be profitably harvested and manufactured unless it can be sent to the markets of the East at transportation charges low enough to yield the manufacturer a profit. By water transportation that can be done, but we cannot have water transportation until our small harbors are improved. This bill authorizes several of those harbors to be improved, but in spite of this authorization we have no way of actually knowing whether they will be improved or not until Congress recaptures its jurisdiction and until it requires, when it approves these projects, that they be actually constructed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, the observations made a little while ago by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] with reference to the floods and the disaster and loss of life in the Mississippi Valley stimulates in my mind some observations made years ago, when I was operating a 2-yard dipper dredge up and down the Illinois River for a distance of 150 miles. There is nothing inspiring in bilge water and mud, but there did come out of that 4 or 5 years of marine contact some observations with respect to the complete lack of vision that has been exercised in this country year in and year out in connection with flood control and the improvement of some of our rivers and harbors. Illinois was originally a part of the territory of the Northwest under the ordinance of 1787. In 1818 it became a State, and before 1895 there was not a single drainage district up and down that river. Then came covetous eyes and avaricious hearts and selfish minds of people, who saw those lush and abundant acres along the watercourses and who, as the value of land went up, determined that it was economically possible and feasible to reclaim that land by building great earthwork levees up and down the river. I was one of many who with dipper dredges built some of those levees—immense mountains of dirt 20 to 30 feet in height—to keep out the freshet water in the spring. The Illinois River is a stream of variable levels. When the snows that fall in Minnesota and Wisconsin melt, they go into the tributaries and come down into the Illinois River, and when we have spring freshets we often find those waters 18 to 20 feet over low-water level. We find no less than 37 drainage districts along the Illinois River over a length of 200 miles.

The result is that when you have a great earthwork levee on one side and a great earthwork levee on the other side and these freshet waters come down they cannot spew out over the valley, and the result is that the level of the water goes up and knocks the crowns off of these levees; and I have seen the time when 100,000 acres were inundated in that valley. Why is this? At one time those virgin bottom lands were the habitat of birds and fishes, a place where duckweed and vegetation grew in profusion for wild fowl. Then came man and took it away from nature, and then comes nature and just swishes her tail right across that western country with heavy snows and torrential rains, and as a result of consequent floods hundreds of thousands of acres are inundated and millions of dollars are lost. Then we stand on the side lines and contemplate this devastation and say that something has to be done to cure this by artificial flood control. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] was exactly correct. It will never be cured until we pursue a reservoir policy, so that those excess waters will have some place to go; and it seems to me that the Congress of the United States could very well address itself aggressively to that problem. Now they intend to appropriate some money to dig up these earthwork levees where they now confine that river within a 500-foot channel in lots of places and set them back. It is a tremendous undertaking, and very expensive; and as a contractor I say right now that it will cost at least 60 cents per cubic yard for every cubic yard of dirt they handle to set them back. And so, because of lack of vision years ago on the part of the Government and the States, these water courses are going to incur a most extraordinary expense to pay for that lack of vision. And will we have done an abiding job? Will it be one of those things that will remain fixed and settled and get us away from the disaster and loss that have gone with it? Oh, no. Set them back a hundred or two hundred feet, and we will have the same problem to contend with year in and year out until we establish a definite reservoir policy. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FIESINGER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I also yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FIESINGER].

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Chairman, I addressed an inquiry to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] as to whether the 1 mill per ton-mile on the Great Lakes included all of the costs of handling the freight. Mr. McGann, clerk of the committee, told me afterward—and I want to put it in the RECORD—that that does not include the unloading costs; that the dock companies bear that cost. It includes the loading, but not the unloading costs. It is not unusual that the cost of transporting coal upon the Great Lakes is 30 or 40 or 50 cents a ton.

I was attracted by a statement made by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] that this bill is a mere gesture. Well, the bill we have been debating here for 2 or 3 days, to take the profits out of war, might be said is a mere gesture, but I do not agree with that. I think it is a declaration of national policy. The bill which we have before us now, the rivers and harbors bill, is a declaration of the intent of the Congress of the United States, and I feel that the administrators of the fund of the four or five billion dollars will give serious consideration; in fact, I think they will almost feel bound to carry out what this Committee on Rivers and Harbors has so painstakingly put into this piece of legislation.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIESINGER. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. If the Congress is fully conscious of its dignity and power and the P. W. A., or whatever organization may succeed that, ignores the manifest recommendation of Congress, does not Congress hold the purse strings in the future?

Mr. FIESINGER. Absolutely. It holds the purse strings in the future, and we have given this power because we are in a great national emergency, and when that emergency is over I say Congress will reassert itself and do these things which it has done for more than a hundred years in this country.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIESINGER. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman allow me to give him an example of direct disregard for the wishes of Congress? In the Seventy-second Congress the improvement of the Umpqua River in Oregon was authorized, passed, approved by the Board of Army Engineers. Since that time the Chief of Engineers on many occasions has gone to the Administrator of Public Works and asked him to allot the money. Many people have done that. He has absolutely refused to date to allot one cent, although it was an act of Congress; it was approved by the Board of Army Engineers; and it is again in this bill for approval.

Mr. FIESINGER. Well, I do not know just what the reasons were why the P. W. A. Administrator did not undertake that work. I know they did undertake a lot of work that we considered.

Mr. MOTT. They undertook a lot of work that the Board of Army Engineers had never even approved or sanctioned.

Mr. FIESINGER. It may be that they did not regard that as feasible, but I know that I had two projects considered by the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and the P. W. A. have undertaken and practically completed both of those projects. The same—the Sandusky and Huron, Ohio, Harbors projects—are in this bill now, and also in this bill is a provision for the survey of some work at Vermilion, Ohio.

Mr. MOTT. In some cases it has, and in some cases it has not.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Chairman, under leave to extend my remarks, I desire to tell the House about a project that is of great interest to my district, as well as the people of the State of Ohio. It is my sincere hope, in the interests not only of this great project, but the relief situation in Ohio, that the administrators of the new works bill give the same immediate consideration, and I refer to flood protection and water conservation of the Sandusky and Scioto Rivers.

These two rivers flow within 9 miles of each other near Marion—the Sandusky on the north of the divide, flowing into Lake Erie at Sandusky, and the Scioto on the south side of the divide flowing into the Ohio River at Portsmouth, 250 miles apart. Most of the great storms follow a storm lane along the summit divide and empty water into both watersheds.

The storm of March 1913 caused $40,000,000 flood damage and the loss of 167 lives in the two valleys. There have been a great many storms which have caused property damage and loss of life in these valleys.

In 1913 the Scioto River raised the Ohio River at Portsmouth 36 feet in 24 hours, causing the Ohio River to flow upstream 10 miles.

The Scioto River at Bellepoint drains 770 square miles. A reservoir at that point will only impound 55,000 acre-feet of water; a reservoir on the Sandusky River near Upper Sandusky will drain but 275 square miles and will impound 312,000 acre-feet of water.

By making a diversion cut through the summit glacial moraine 200,000 acre-feet of water can be diverted from the Scioto Valley to the Sandusky Valley and impounded, protecting Columbus and the valley below.

Lake Erie is 573 feet above sea level; Columbus, 702 feet; and Portsmouth, 481 feet above sea level. Building these two reservoirs to an elevation of 900 feet above sea level, and the summit cut, will form a summit level lake 40 miles along, and take care of the flood water of a 1913 flood on the summit.

It is estimated that three reservoirs in the Sandusky Valley, with the summit cut, and nine reservoirs in the Scioto Valley, or their equivalent, will give adequate flood protection for the Sandusky and Scioto Valleys and furnish 1,214,900 acre-feet of flood protection for the Ohio Valley, reducing the crest elevation of all floods materially at Cincinnati, and a lesser amount at points west of Cincinnati and the Mississippi Valley. It will be a great aid to navigation and an aid in diluting pollution in the Ohio Valley.

Drought in central Ohio is becoming a greater menace than floods. At one time during the past summer the O'Shaughnessy Reservoir was dry and the Griggs Reservoir was 15 feet below the crest. It was estimated that Columbus had but 60 days' water supply and farmers were hauling water for a great distance. Cutting the forests, draining the swamps, and tiling the land have caused a quick run-off of water in rain periods, not allowing the water to penetrate the silt sand and rock. A survey in 1925 by W. J. McGee, United States Bureau of Soils, on a record of 9,500 wells in central Ohio shows the sweet water table is 13.8 feet lower than it was 80 years ago.

April 1 each year after the big storms are past, is recommended that 50 percent of the spillway capacity of the reservoirs be impounded and held until January. Geologists claim by impounding 50 percent capacity of these reservoirs on the higher elevation will restore the sweetwater table over the greater part of Ohio.

It is estimated that the building of these reservoirs will employ 6,000 to 8,000 for 3 to 4 years, furnishing 50,000,000 man hours.

The F. E. R. A., emergency relief, in this district from May 1 to November 1, 1934, was $3,874,064, with 26,036 relief cases.

The Scioto-Sandusky Conservancy District is a legal political subdivision of Ohio organized under the conservancy act. C. E. Sherman has prepared complete plans and estimates of costs, using unit costs supplied by Muskingum Valley engineers, from contracts let. Alan N. Jordan has made a supplementary plan, giving 1,214,900 acre-feet flood control for the Ohio River and 276,000 acre-feet flood control for the Sandusky Valley, costing approximately $24,000,000. Owing to advances in commodity prices and in wages, it is recommended that 25 percent be added to these figures, and an allotment of $30,000,000 be made by the United States Government for the building of the reservoirs and the change of utilities, as granted the Muskingum district.

The State of Ohio will change all highways and bridges and the conservancy district will provide all rights in land and assume responsibility of all damages and agree to accept the completed works for operation and maintenance.

The Army Engineers have made studies of most of this project and contracts could be let at an early date.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ECKERT].

Mr. ECKERT. Mr. Chairman, I live in western Pennsylvania. I happen to be in the Pittsburgh district. Inasmuch as the Pittsburgh district has been cited as an example of what water improvements do to a community, both by the distinguished chairman of the committee and by Judge CULKIN, I simply want to add my testimony to what is happening around Pittsburgh. I know that Pittsburgh has been spoken of as the workshop of the world. I believe that one of the factors which has produced that eminence for Pittsburgh is the fact that the industries in and around Pittsburgh have had the benefit of water transportation. I think we follow a short-sighted policy when we seek to curtail river improvements. I believe the people of this country can learn a lesson from Germany. Before the World War Germany was recognized as one of the most industrialized nations of the world. Dr. Frederick C. Howe, who is a keen student of economic conditions in the Old World, stated that one of the things that made Germany that great industrial nation was the fact that her rivers and canals were developed to a very high degree.

Now the bill under consideration provides for the improvement of rivers, harbors, and other waterways in various parts of the United States and Alaska. There are 204 projects included in the bill and all received thorough study and careful examination on the part of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of this and previous Congresses. As the distinguished Chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, Mr. MANSFIELD, in his report accompanying the bill says:

> These projects have been under investigation for many months, and in many cases for several years, before receiving favorable recommendation. Detailed field investigations have insured the projects satisfactorily meeting the rigid requirements of the district engineer and his field assistants. They have been reviewed by the division engineer, have been examined in detail and approved by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and finally have been recommended by the Chief of Engineers.

The authorizations contained in the bill are not only in keeping with the long-established policy of the Congress, but are in line with modern progress. The National Resources Board, submitted to President Roosevelt a report on national planning and public works in relation to natural resources, relating especially to land use and water resources. In this report the Board makes the observation that:

> The natural resources of America are the heritage of the whole Nation and should be conserved and utilized for the benefit of all our people. Our national democracy is built upon the principle that the gains of our civilization are essentially mass gains and should be administered for the benefit of the many rather than the few; our priceless resources of soil, water, minerals are for the service of the American people, for the promotion of the welfare and well being of all citizens.

For the first time in the history of our country the natural resources of the Nation are being subjected to a thoroughly scientific investigation and appraisement. The Water Planning Committee, in its report notes that:

> The whole Nation is concerned in seeing to it that water is provided the largest possible amount of beneficial use and does the least possible amount of damage. Here, as in other things that we do and plan, our children's children should have cause to thank us—not to reproach us.

I submit that this is the spirit in which the problem of waterways improvement should be undertaken and prosecuted. It is a matter for rejoicing that the Federal Government has at last a more enlightened interest in the problem of natural resources and their development. The country is to be congratulated upon the promise that the Nation's policy of waterways development in the future will be scientific, intensive, comprehensive, and in keeping with modern needs and demands.

As has well been said:

> Land, water, and the people go together. Flood control, erosion, and low-water control, navigation, hydroelectric power, water supply, and sanitation are integral parts of the Nation's waterways. And they tie into agriculture, irrigation, forestry, recreation, and the conservation of wildlife.

This is a new and deeper aspect of the use of our waterways. Yet, upon reflection, it is obvious that the waterways of any country play a very vital and important part in the life and prosperity of its people, and should be developed so as to give the largest possible amount of beneficial use.

It is inspiriting to know that recognized experts are emphasizing the fact that our river systems and harbors must be developed in modern fashion if we would obtain the major benefits and reduce flood damage to a minimum. A new thought is developing among the people concerning the use and importance of our river systems and harbors and the Congress ought to be happy to have the opportunity to move forward with the spirit of the times and pass the pending bill.

Much is being said these days about the relief of the unemployed, of raising the American standard of living, and providing happier conditions for the average man and woman. To bring relief to the unemployed is a laudable ambition on the part of the Federal Government. To do so in the present economic crisis the Federal Government is about to engage in an extensive public-works program. Various projects are in contemplation, including the improvement of rivers and harbors. There are those, perhaps, who may question the wisdom of some of the proposed projects, but all agree that the improvement of rivers and harbors is an obligation of government. Rivers and harbors are commerce and trade channels, and it is a function of government to provide public thoroughfares on land and water for the use and convenience of the people. This is a well-settled principle of American jurisprudence. Therefore the Federal Government is well within its rights in improving at public expense the rivers and harbors of the Nation. In so doing it does not invade the domain of private enterprise.

The development of our water resources might well engage the attention of those who are concerned about unemployment and raising the standard of living of the American people, for here is a field that offers unlimited opportunities for increasing the economic efficiency of the Nation. John Stuart Mill is authority for the statement that:

> If the object is to improve the permanent conditions of a people, small means do not only produce small effects; they produce no effects at all.

The aim of all legislation is or should be to improve permanently the condition of the people. Why spend money either on relief or otherwise on small and petty projects? President Roosevelt has expressed the wish that the petty attempts to bring relief to the unemployed be discontinued and that Federal projects of national scope be undertaken with a view of not only providing work for the unemployed but to add to the Nation's wealth. We know that much that has been done in the way of relief projects has not resulted in the permanent improvement of the condition of the people nor added to the wealth of the Nation. The charge is frequently made that much of the relief money has been wasted. There need be no waste of any kind in waterways improvement if the work is done intelligently and scientifically. There is no field for relief of the unemployed and at the same time increase the national assets that can be compared with the projects relating to waterways improvements. The development of our river systems and harbors, as indicated, is not only permanently improving the economic conditions of the present generation but of generations yet to be.

We, as a nation might, with profit to ourselves, learn a lesson from some of the nations of the Old World in relation to the development and use of waterways. Germany, for example, immediately before the outbreak of the World War, was recognized as one of the great industrial nations of the world. One of the factors that contributed to her industrial and economic preeminence was the fact that her waterways were highly developed and were an integral part of her economic set-up. Industrialists, merchants, farmers, and shippers generally had the benefit of the lowest transportation rates possible, both on land and water, to the end that her own people would not be compelled to pay undue transportation rates and to aid her industrialists to compete successfully in the markets of the world.

It has been demonstrated by experience, both in other countries as well as our own, that economical transportation is best achieved by the full use of all modern methods of transportation, not in competition with each other, but by complementing each other. A fully developed and coordinated system of transportation, including rail, water, air, truck, and automobile gives the greatest promise of lowest cost to the people.

Dr. Frederic C. Howe, already referred to in discussing Germany's industrial greatness, says:

> Cheap water transportation is another explanation of Germany's industrial progress. It has been planned with the same far-seeing intelligence that characterize the railways system, with which it is closely related in its administration. Some idea of the magnitude of the water traffic is evidenced by the fact that, while the total goods carried in 1911 upon the railways aggregated 408,879,000 tons, the goods upon the waterways totaled 76,632,000 tons, or more than one-sixth of the amount carried by rail.

It is common knowledge that the item of transportation adds materially to the cost of living and therefore the problem of the transportation of goods and people at the lowest possible rate is essential and vital to the prosperity and happiness of the American people.

It is held by some that in localities where traffic is moved by common carriers, such as railroads, and so forth, development of waterways ought to be discouraged for the reason that the latter would be in direct competition with the former and materially reduce their earnings. This contention, in many instances, is unsound, as experience has proven. In communities that are adequately served with water transportation there may be certain types of freight diverted from the railways, but in such communities industrial development is usually so pronounced that a steady increase in population, business, and trade follows, resulting in increased demands for transportation facilities of all kinds. Therefore, what might be lost in heavier goods by land carriers would be compensated by the increased demand for railroad and truck transportation of other types of goods.

For example, the Ohio River and its tributaries carry more commerce than any other river system in the United States. Yet in the very midst of the greatest water transportation in the United States, there we find the busiest and most successful and most profitable railroads in the country. Opposition to an intelligent and scientific development of our river systems and harbors in the most comprehensive fashion possible is short-sighted and unsound in reason and logic.

The American people are entitled to the cheapest transportation possible, and it is the duty of the Federal Government to do all in its power to bring about this consummation. This bill is in line with modern transportation development and progress and I bespeak for it the support of the Congress.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I am taking this opportunity to call attention to the parliamentary situation of the McSwain bill, to take the profits out of war or to lessen war profiteering.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] will make a motion to recommit the bill with instructions to strike out the first part of section 3, which is the conscription provision in the bill. If that motion is voted up, it will remove one of the principal objectionable features of the bill. It will mean that we are not, in time of peace, doing something that this country has never done before in time of peace, namely, passing a draft measure; and we are not thereby giving any false notice, which I am sure the people of this country do not mean, to the other nations of the world that we expect to go to war, either defensive or offensive.

The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCSWAIN], on Saturday, nearly at the close of the debate, offered an amendment—which was accepted, of course—which, had it been contained in the bill originally, very likely would have mitigated and, probably to a great extent, have minimized opposition to the bill; that is, the proposition that in the event of declaration of war a tax of 100 percent will be levied on excess profits.

I am not here posing as a constitutional lawyer; I am just an ordinary garden variety of lawyer; but I think it is fairly well settled that although a tax provision properly laid would be sustained, the provision as included in the bill is unconstitutional. I think it has been settled already that such a provision would be unconstitutional.

If the conscription provision were cut out of the bill, then, with the tax amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCSWAIN] in the bill, I might vote for it. The main reason that I would then vote for it would be that the taxing amendment offered by Mr. MCSWAIN would probably give the Senate the right to do what they would not have the power to do under the Constitution without the McSwain amendment—namely, include in the Nye bill a provision to tax excess profits on munitions and other war supplies, and thereby to that extent discourage war by making it unprofitable. Such a method is, as I have several times pointed out in debate upon this bill, the only way to take the profits out of war.

Mr. MCFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I yield for one question; but I will ask the gentleman to be brief, for I have only 4 minutes.

Mr. MCFARLANE. With a tax amendment in the bill, however, a foundation is provided for a tax structure which may be perfected in the Senate.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman is entirely correct; it could, of course, be perfected in the Senate. The McSwain taxing amendment greatly improves the bill.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. For one question.

Mr. MONAGHAN. I just wanted to say that I think the gentleman and I are in agreement on the way the bill is taking shape.

Mr. SISSON. There are, however, other objectionable features of the bill which I should like to discuss, but I have not the time to do so. Some of them are so serious, as I have already pointed out at other times in the debate upon this bill, that they would lead me to vote against the bill if I thought that when the bill comes back from the Senate, they would still be in the bill. I have been informed, however, that Senator NYE now wishes us to pass this bill in order to enable him to put a taxing feature in the Senate bill, and that he has given some of the other opponents of this bill assurance this morning that the other objectionable features in the McSwain bill will be taken out in the Senate.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CARTER. The time has been fixed under the rule. I yielded 4 minutes to the gentleman. I hope the gentleman from Montana will not press his request.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. COLDEN].

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to speak to the details of this measure, but I do want to discuss some of the incidental questions. Among others, a comparison of rail and water rates and the fundamental reasons why there is a difference and why water transportation should be preserved. I wish also to make some observations as to the value of the Panama Canal to the Pacific coast and of other waterways. [Applause.]

OUR WATERWAYS AND "OLD MAN RIVER"

I shall not, as I said, discuss the details of the river and harbor bill for the reason that the chairman of the committee, Judge JOSEPH J. MANSFIELD, and others have undertaken this task. My confidence in this measure is sustained not only by the long experience and able judgment of a number of my colleagues on the Rivers and Harbors Committee but because every project therein contained recommending the improvement of rivers and harbors is based upon a favorable report by the Board of Army Engineers. Consequently, the details of this measure have been subjected to actual and careful inspection, surveys, and estimates by the outstanding organization of the Board of Army Engineers and its staff.

As river and harbor development is of prime importance to the entire Nation, I desire to address myself to some of the general and incidental aspects of the subject under discussion. I desire to offer some observations as to the part that has been played by the improvement of waterways and harbors as one of the great contributory factors to the growth of our country and particularly to the Pacific coast. While the public is aware in a general way as to the importance of river, lake, and ocean transportation, many are not acquainted with the handicaps and with the struggles of water transportation in these days in which the railways of the Nation dominate transportation to a very great extent and have made it increasingly difficult to develop and maintain water transportation. For instance, the railroads have in some cases stifled water transportation by the purchase of canals and the relegation of their use. In other instances, the railroads have reduced their rates between competitive points with waterways and made it impossible to develop any great volume of water transport. The railway influences are ever alert to thwart and retard the development of waterways. In some instances this has been a short-sighted policy.

Permit me to give you a striking example where the development of waterways has contributed materially to railway traffic. In the Pittsburgh, Pa., area, there is a very heavy traffic on the waterways. This cheap transportation has developed a great industry, the products of which in turn have given the railways a very heavy tonnage which is distributed to every part of our country. Cheap water transportation, river and lake, for the ores and fuel has built up such great centers as Pittsburgh and Chicago and made a great contribution of tonnage to the railways of the country.

There is a fundamental difference in railway and water transportation. The railway by its very nature is a monopoly. Its line or its rails are under the exclusive management of a great corporation which owns and controls the engines and cars that move on its tracks. There can be no competition with other agencies so far as the use of the railway equipment is concerned. The shipper and the public must deal upon the terms of the railway and within the regulations that have been imposed upon the railways by a dissatisfied public. The litigation throughout the years, the attempts to regulate the railway rates by the various States and the Federal Government is extensive evidence of the voluminous complaints registered by the users of transportation.

The railway has been an indispensable instrument in our economic welfare but because of its monopolistic nature, its discriminations, its arbitrary and unscientific rate structures, it has built industries, communities, and cities, and ports, and has destroyed others. Its magic power in unscrupulous hands has been the economic ruin of thousands and upon others it has bestowed prosperity and riches. By its policy of lower rates to competitive points it has driven the factory and its workers from the countryside to the great centers and contributed to the problem of overconcentration of population and at the same time added to the farmer's problem of marketing. The transportation systems of our country affect our social as well as our economic life.

Water transportation, like highway transportation, invites open competition, and no steamship company and no barge line can monopolize the watercourse. The water highway is open to any and to all. Not only does water transportation usually have numerous shipping lines in competition with each other, but in the event of a combination to uphold rates there is always the tramp ship, the tramp barge that may offer competition on its own account or may be chartered by the shipper. The same principle is true of the highways. It is in the interest of the public to maintain waterways and highways to open competition, for the reason that rivers, lakes, and the ocean afford an open highway to all. Water transportation is much more free of the combinations, the abuses, and the unfair and unjust rate structures which the user of the railway must combat.

It is rather an interesting observation that members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives are enthusiastically devoted to the development of waterways. Those who enter the committee, perhaps in many instances with an indifferent but open mind, usually become quick converts to the necessity, the importance, and the utility of water transportation. At nearly every session of the Rivers and Harbors Committee evidence is shown by which river and harbor development contributes greatly to the country's commerce, to its industries, and to its agricultural interests. In numerous instances the demand for river and harbor improvements is compelled by the discriminations, by the unfair rate structures of the railways. The lowest transportation rates in this country are enjoyed by those centers of industry and commerce that have competitive rail and water rates.

Concerning the comparative cost of water and rail maintenance, I refer to a speech of the Honorable JOSEPH J. MANSFIELD, Chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives, of May 11, 1934, in which he states that in 1932 the maintenance of all our ports and inland waters was $23,791,815.30. That the water-borne tonnage for that year was 445,648,000 tons representing a cost of 5⅜ cents per ton. That the railway maintenance for that year was $970,119,814. The freight haul by rail was 646,222,818 tons, representing a maintenance cost of $1.50 per ton.

Again, Gen. Edward M. Markham, Chief of the Board of Army Engineers, in a speech before the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, called attention to the statistics of 1929 in which he states that the maintenance of waterways in that year was slightly less than 3½ cents per ton on freight movement as against a cost of $1.53 for maintenance per ton by the railways. Both of these illustrations are striking examples of the basic advantage of the waterways to agriculture, to industry, and to commerce.

Recently the Waterway Bulletin gave some Lessons in Simple Arithmetic. Among these lessons was that of cotton, one of the important crops of the lower Mississippi Valley. In 1933 Valley States exported more than 9,000,000 bales of cotton, representing approximately 65 percent of the total production. In 1931 the railroads maintained rates on compressed cotton from Mississippi River points to New Orleans ranging from 64 to 50 cents per 100 pounds, on any quantity.

Because of inland-waterway competition the railroads have reduced their rates on cotton for export from all producing points. From Memphis to New Orleans the old rail rate was 60 cents per 100 pounds. The present rail rate in carload lots is 34 cents and the barge rate is 31 cents, a saving of 26 and 29 cents, respectively, as compared to the old rail rate.

Similar savings are now available at other river points. From Helena, Ark., to New Orleans the old rail rate was 58½ cents; the present rail rate is 34 cents, and the barge rate is 31 cents. The old rail rate from Jackson, Tenn., was 60 cents; the present rail rate is 39 cents, and the barge rate is 36 cents. From Dyersburg, Tenn., the 1931 rail rate was 64 cents; the present rail rate is 39 cents, and the rail-barge rate is 36 cents.

These savings were not available before the advent of inland waterway competition. They illustrate how the inland waterways are helping to build agriculture and industry in the Mississippi Valley by lowering the cost of transportation and widening the trade markets.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to the illustration just cited, I desire to give another specific illustration of the value of water transportation in the commodity of sugar from New Orleans to St. Louis and Chicago as presented to the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the United States Senate by C. E. Childe, the chairman of the traffic committee of the Mississippi Valley Association. This witness states that the Interstate Commerce Commission a few years ago fixed as a reasonable railway rate on sugar 54 cents per 100 pounds from New Orleans to Chicago and 50 cents per 100 pounds to St. Louis. Because of the movement of sugar by the water route, the rail rate was later reduced to 34 cents to Chicago and 32 cents to St. Louis. The water rates from New Orleans were then reduced to 27 cents to Chicago and 25 cents to St. Louis, exactly one-half of the former rail rate. But note that Mr. Childe says that to points in Iowa, where water competition does not exist, the rail rate remains at the high level of 65 cents per hundred.

Again, Mr. Childe refers to the rate on wheat. Ten years ago the rate from St. Louis to New Orleans by rail was 31 cents per hundred pounds on domestic commerce and 18 cents per hundred pounds for export. The Federal Barge Line established a rate of 14 cents per hundred pounds on export wheat. The railroads started cutting rates, and reduced the rail rate on grain for export to 11 cents per hundred pounds by rail, and the barge line rate was reduced to 8 cents, considerably less than one-half of the former rail rate. This tremendous decrease in the cost of transportation redounds to the benefit of the wheat raiser in the shipping out of his product and also in the reduction of the cost of the products he consumes, including the sugar cited above. There is no reason to doubt that the high cost of transportation, the shipping out of his wheat, cotton, corn, cattle, and pork, and the cost of his coal and other articles he consumes is one of the acute and aggravated problems of the farmer. The above illustration clearly demonstrates that water transportation is the friend of the farmer.

Because of the railway domination of the transportation of our country and the continual spread of propaganda against the use of waterways, the public is not fully aware of the potential facilities of our rivers that have been but partially touched as a natural resource. The National Rivers and Harbors Bulletin is the authority for the statement that the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers system alone can afford 12,475 miles of water transportation. That it is possible to develop a total of 27,406 miles of navigable watercouses in the United States. As a part of the transportation system of our country, none of these waterways have reached their capacity.

The nations of western Europe which guard their waterways against unfair discrimination are said to have about 15,000 miles of connected inland waterways of which the Rhine is the center. There is said to be 9,000 miles of navigable rivers and canals in Germany alone. The Rhine, with its canal connections, reaches the Mediterranean through the Rhone; the Black Sea, through the Danube, and many other waterways of importance. The Rhine is an international stream and is crowded with the barges of Holland, Belgium, Germany, France, and Switzerland. The use of the river Rhine demonstrates the possibilities of the Mississippi River systems if developed on a proper scale.

The necessity of a comprehensive and coordinated inland waterway system has not been given full and proper consideration. The criticism has often been made and with justification, that river and harbor development in the United States has been piecemeal. This has been due to the fact that Congress has always been overly conservative in making appropriations for waterways. In order to develop any system of transportation, it is essential to reach and connect the great centers of agriculture, industry, and commerce. The highways and the railways reach all the important centers of the country. The railroads and highways of this country would have little value if they did not reach the great centers. It is quite evident that the improvement of rivers and the building of canals cannot be of the greatest use unless it does afford connection between important centers.

The improvement of the Cape Cod Canal has afforded a much shorter waterway route between Boston and New York and other points. The commerce on the Cape Cod Canal has shown a splendid growth in spite of the depression. If a comprehensive system of waterways is to be developed and if we propose to utilize the waterways—lakes, rivers, and canals—to their greatest service, Congress should give most serious attention to a coordinated system which would include an adequate inland waterway from New York Bay to the Delaware River and from the Delaware River to the Chesapeake Bay.

The intracoastal canal should reach from New York Bay to the Rio Grande. The proposed ship canals across the State of Florida and from Puget Sound to the Columbia River deserve most serious consideration. A waterway connection from the Pittsburgh district to Lake Erie should be carefully surveyed, and if economically justified, should be built. The same is true of the Tennessee River, and a proposed connection with the waterways of Alabama and to the Gulf. The waterway from the Hudson to the Great Lakes and from Lake Michigan to the Gulf are of national importance. All these projects and many others should be most carefully studied and, if economically justified, should be begun as early as possible.

One of the greatest waterway achievements in the history of the world was the building of the Panama Canal. The residents of the Pacific coast have observed many of the benefits of water transportation. It is estimated that the population of the Pacific Coast States of California, Oregon, and Washington increased 47 percent from 1920 to 1930. The operation of the Panama Canal opened much wider markets and reduced the cost of transportation and greatly stimulated the production of the entire Pacific coast. Not only did the population of the Pacific coast increase but their buying power increased, thereby benefiting all sections of our country.

To show the advantages of water transportation, it is estimated that the east-bound traffic from the Pacific Coast States showed an increase of about one-tenth on the part of the railroads, but the steamship lines showed an increase of nearly four times. This augmentation of traffic illustrates not only the marvelous growth of the Pacific States but the value of water transportation.

My own city of Los Angeles has largely participated in this growth. Today Los Angeles is the fifth city in the United States in population. In 1929 it ranked eighth industrially, and in 1931 tied for seventh place in the value of its manufactured products. The 1930 census disclosed that in the previous 10 years Los Angeles had gained in population 48.7 percent; San Francisco, 25 percent; Portland, 11.9 percent; Seattle, 14.4 percent. In the period from 1920 to 1930 Los Angeles grew from a population of 576,673 to 1,238,048, while San Francisco showed a growth from 506,676 to 634,394. The 11 Western States in the same period of 1920 to 1930 showed an increase of population of 2,993,000. The three Pacific Coast States 2,627,000; California, 2,250,000; southern California, 1,642,000; and Los Angeles County, 1,272,000.

It is estimated that the city of Los Angeles by an investment of $30,000,000 in harbor development is saving the Southwest a hundred million dollars or more per year in the cost of transportation alone. The building of the Panama Canal has been one of the important contributing factors. Los Angeles Harbor rivals Philadelphia as a second ocean port of the United States. In addition to being the base of the Pacific Fleet, Los Angeles Harbor is one of the busy ports of the world. No port of the United States is more enthusiastic in the future value of water transportation. Los Angeles has backed faith with heavy municipal investments.

The growth of the tonnage of Los Angeles Harbor is a romance in statistics, as the following table discloses:

Year	Number of ships	Net tons
1860 (calendar year)	67	12,565
1870 (calendar year)	203	29,370
1880 (calendar year)	350	102,105
1890 (calendar year)	493	171,261
1900 (calendar year)	508	216,857
1910 (calendar year)	2,450	1,660,975
1919–20 (fiscal year)	2,886	3,523,280
1922–23 (fiscal year)	5,476	18,870,102
1928–29 (fiscal year)	7,888	26,099,245
1932–33 (fiscal year)	6,199	17,850,906

This amazing growth has been handicapped by railway rate discriminations in favor of San Francisco. The Golden Gate city, being the first important port on the Pacific coast, was the backbone of the early railway rate structure and has been able to maintain many of its advantages in directing tonnage to its own terminals. Like New Orleans, the railway terminal system at San Francisco is publicly owned and this adds a further advantage. Improved highways and trucks have contributed much to overcome the railway discrimination against this newer port of Los Angeles.

The problem of transportation will always be a vital one. The cost of transportation falls heavily on the producer and the consumer. High transportation costs limit the market of the manufacturer as well as the farmer. The comprehensive and coordinated development of our rivers, lakes, canals, and harbors will encourage agriculture, industry, and commerce. It affords one of the greatest contributions to our national wealth and welfare.

In order to lift this country out of the depression, Congress is appropriating billions of dollars. Now is the time to build substantial improvements, to build for posterity, for future generations must pay the greater part of the debts we are now incurring. An adequate waterway system would be of great benefit to future generations and would be a justification for our great expenditures. It should be noted in this connection that it is estimated that in dredging operations, nearly 77 percent of the cost of construction is paid to labor. That in the building of locks and dams, that labor receives about the same proportion. In other types of river and harbor improvement, a proportion of approximately 80 percent goes to the labor employed directly and indirectly.

In closing, let us not forget that "Old Man River" has always been the pathway of the pioneer, the inspiration of the poet, and the friend of man. The primitive tribesman depended upon the river for fish and game. The pioneer found it the open road to the forests and prairies and riches of the interior. Not only was it a highway for the pioneer but it turned the wheels that ground his wheat and corn and wove his wool and his cotton into fabrics of beauty and comfort. It quenched his thirst and cleansed his body. In these modern days of great cities, it serves the same benevolent purpose. Notwithstanding the ancient river clothed with forests and beauty has been stripped of its natural protection and has become choked with the soil from eroded fields and is the receptacle of sewage and the vile waste of industry, "Old Man River" still remains the servant of man. The public is awakening to the necessity of rebuilding and restoring the natural waterways of the country. Today the river is being rejuvenated, not only for navigation and the control of its floods, but for its magic power to turn the wheels of industry, to lift the household burdens of wifehood and motherhood, to lift the load from bending, aching backs in the mine, on the farm, and in the factory. "Old Man River" is eager to serve today and now, not only in the great centers of industry, but to saw the wood, to pump the water, to spin the grindstone, to turn the corn-sheller, to wash and iron, and to sweep, a relief to man, woman, and beast. Not only does it perform all these drudgeries of man and woman but it gives light to the home and to the street and to the city.

The river is one of Nature's greatest gifts to man. With its companions, the lake and the ocean, it furnishes the great open highways of the world the bonds of mutual interest to the nations. These great highways are free and open, beyond the power of monopolization.

It is not only the privilege but it is the duty of Congress to support the development of an adequate, comprehensive, and coordinated waterway system that will serve all the people of all the country whenever and wherever the cost is economically justifiable.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Under the rules of the House, bills ordinarily are read by sections. In former years river and harbor bills have been read either by sections or by paragraphs. I would suggest that in order to dispatch the business of the House speedily we adhere to the rule of having this bill read by sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas that the matter has been called to the Chair's attention. The last expression of the House was on June 3, 1926. A point of order was made and the then Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], ruled that the bill should be read by paragraphs. An appeal was taken from the decision of the Chair at that time and the decision of the Chair was overruled. Thus the last expression we have, so far as has been called to the attention of the Chair, is that decision of the Committee itself made in 1926 to the effect that bills of this character should be read by sections; and the Chair is inclined to follow the decision of the Committee made at that time.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that that is my understanding of the situation exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill by sections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following works of improvement of rivers, harbors, and other waterways are hereby adopted and authorized, to be prosecuted under the direction of the Secretary of War and supervision of the Chief of Engineers, in accordance with the plans recommended in the respective reports hereinafter designated and subject to the conditions set forth in such documents:

Criehaven Harbor, Maine; House Document No. 310, Seventy-second Congress;

Saco River, Maine; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 11, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Lynn Harbor, Mass.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 7, Seventy-first Congress;

Boston Harbor, Mass.; House Document No. 244, Seventy-second Congress;

Gloucester Harbor and Annisquam River, Mass.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 39, Seventy-second Congress;

Weymouth Fore River, Mass.; House Document No. 207, Seventy-second Congress;

Weymouth Back River, Mass.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 32, Seventy-second Congress;

Cape Cod Canal, Mass.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 15, Seventy-fourth Congress;

New Bedford Harbor, Mass.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 16, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Thames River, Conn.: Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 18, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Connecticut River below Hartford, Conn.; House Document No. 49, Seventy-third Congress;

Connecticut River, above Hartford, Conn.; House Document No. 27, Seventy-third Congress;

New Haven Harbor, Conn.; House Document No. 479, Seventy-second Congress;

Stamford Harbor, Conn.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 8, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Mamaroneck Harbor, N. Y.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 4, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Mattituck Harbor, N. Y.; House Document No. 8, Seventy-first Congress;

Coney Island Creek, N. Y.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 12, Seventy-third Congress;

New York Harbor, N. Y.; House Document No. 183, Seventy-third Congress;

Hudson River Channel at Weehawken and Edgewater, N. J.: The existing project is hereby modified in accordance with the recommendations in the report submitted in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 49, Seventy-second Congress;

Hudson River Channel, N. Y. and N. J.; House Document No. 309, Seventy-second Congress;

Tarrytown Harbor, N. Y.; House Document No. 262, Seventy-second Congress;

Rondout Harbor, N. Y.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 17, Seventy-third Congress;

Hudson River between Troy and Waterford, N. Y.; Senate Document No. 155, Seventy-second Congress;

Great Lakes-Hudson River waterway; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 20, Seventy-third Congress: Provided, That no allotment of Federal moneys shall be made under this authorization unless and until the State of New York shall have entered into agreement satisfactory to the Secretary of War that no toll charges will be imposed for the use and navigation of the improved waterway;

New York and New Jersey Channels; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 17, Seventy-first Congress, and House Document No. 133, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Cut-off channel between Raritan River and Arthur Kill, N. J.; House Document No. 50, Seventy-third Congress;

Rahway River, N. J.; House Document No. 63, Seventy-third Congress;

Elizabeth River, N. J.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 24, Seventy-second Congress;

Compton Creek, N. J.; House Document No. 58, Seventy-third Congress;

Shrewsbury River, N. J.; House Document No. 157, Seventy-first Congress;

Delaware River, between Philadelphia, Pa., and Trenton, N. J.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 11, Seventy-third Congress;

Delaware River, Pa., N. J., and Del.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 5, Seventy-third Congress;

Wilmington Harbor, Del.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 32, Seventy-third Congress;

Inland waterway from Delaware River to Chesapeake Bay, Del. and Md.; House Document No. 201, Seventy-second Congress, and Rivers and Harbors Committee Documents Nos. 18 and 24, Seventy-third Congress;

Big Timber Creek, N. J.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 15, Seventy-third Congress;

Mantua Creek, N. J.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 14, Seventy-third Congress;

Barnegat Inlet, N. J.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 19, Seventy-third Congress;

Ocean City Harbor and Inlet, and Sinepuxent Bay, Md.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 38, Seventy-second Congress;

Maurice River, N. J.: House Document No. 275, Seventy-third Congress;

Upper Thoroughfare, Deals Island, Md.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 37, Seventy-second Congress;

Knapps Narrows, Md.: House Document No. 308, Seventy-second Congress;

Annapolis Harbor, Md.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 23, Seventy-third Congress;

Parish Creek, Md.; House Document No. 185, Seventy-second Congress;

Tangier Channel, Va.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 51, Seventy-second Congress;

Starlings Creek, Va.; House Document No. 138, Seventy-second Congress;

Washington Harbor; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 22, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Potomac River, north side of Washington Channel, D. C.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 13, Seventy-third Congress: Provided, That the work recommended in the said document shall be prosecuted in accordance with the recommendations of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors;

Horn Harbor, Va.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 22, Seventy-third Congress;

Nomini Bay and Creek, Va.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 30, Seventy-second Congress;

Mill Creek, Va.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 20, Seventy-fourth Congress.

Totuskey Creek, Va.; House Document No. 183, Seventy-second Congress;

Mattaponi River, Va.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 47, Seventy-third Congress;

Channel connecting York River, Va., with Black Creek at Slaight's Wharf; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 6, Seventy-fourth Congress.

Jackson Creek, Va.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 41, Seventy-third Congress;

Little Wicomico River, Va.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 24, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Norfolk Harbor, Va.; House Document No. 182, Seventy-third Congress.

Hampton Creek, Va.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 34, Seventy-second Congress;

Phoebus Channel, Va.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 33, Seventy-second Congress;

Channel from Pamlico Sound to Beaufort Harbor, N. C.; House Document No. 485, Seventy-second Congress;

Rollinson Channel, N. C.; House Document No. 218, Seventy-second Congress;

Inland waterway from Beaufort, N. C., to Cape Fear River, including the waterway to Jacksonville, N. C.; House Document No. 67, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Cape Fear River above Wilmington, N. C.; House Document No. 786, Seventy-first Congress;

Smiths Creek, Wilmington, N. C.; Senate Document No. 23, Seventy-second Congress;

Intracoastal waterway from Cape Fear River, N. C., to Saint Johns River, Fla.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Documents Nos. 11 and 14, Seventy-second Congress;

Shipyard River, S. C.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 43, Seventy-third Congress;

Waterway from Charleston to Beaufort, S. C.; House Document No. 129, Seventy-second Congress;

Savannah Harbor, Ga.; House Document No. 276, Seventy-third Congress;

Savannah River below Augusta, Ga.; report of the Chief of Engineers dated June 19, 1933;

Intracoastal waterway from Jacksonville to Key West, Fla.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 44, Seventy-second Congress;

Lake Worth Inlet, Fla.; House Document No. 185, Seventy-third Congress;

Fort Pierce Harbor, Fla.; House Document No. 252, Seventy-second Congress, and Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 21, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Port Everglades, Fla.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 25, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Miami Harbor, Fla.; report of the Chief of Engineers dated August 30, 1933;

Tampa Harbor, Fla.; Senate Document No. 22, Seventy-second Congress;

Anclote River, Fla.; House Document No. 229, Seventy-second Congress;

Channel from Apalachicola River to St. Andrews Bay, Fla.: Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 52, Seventy-second Congress;

St. Andrews Bay, Fla.; House Document No. 33, Seventy-third Congress;

Waterway from Choctawhatchee Bay to West Bay, Fla.; House Document No. 259, Seventy-second Congress;

Intracoastal waterway from Choctawhatchee Bay to Pensacola Bay, Fla.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 42, Seventy-third Congress;

Pensacola Harbor, Fla.; House Document No. 253, Seventy-second Congress;

Chickasaw Creek, Ala.; House Document No. 47, Seventy-third Congress: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for the acquiring of any lands required for the purpose of this improvement;

Black Warrior, Warrior, and Tombigbee Rivers, Ala.; House Documents Nos. 728, Seventy-first Congress, and 56, Seventy-third Congress; and in accordance with the modification of the recommendation in said Document No. 56, submitted in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 45, Seventy-third Congress;

Bayou Lacombe, La.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 53, Seventy-second Congress;

Bayou Lafourche, La.; House Document No. 45, Seventy-third Congress;

Waterway from the intracoastal waterway to Bayou Dulac, La.: House Document No. 206, Seventy-second Congress;

Bayous Petit Anse and Carlin, La.; House Document No. 225, Seventy-second Congress;

Mermentau River, La.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 36, Seventy-second Congress.

Lake Charles Deep Water Channel, La.; House Document No. 172, Seventy-second Congress;

Sabine-Neches Waterway, Tex.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Documents Nos. 27, Seventy-second Congress, and 12, Seventy-fourth Congress: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for the acquiring of any lands required for the purpose of this improvement;

Galveston Harbor, Tex.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 31, Seventy-second Congress;

Channel from Galveston Harbor to Texas City, Tex.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Documents Nos. 4 and 46, Seventy-third Congress;

Houston Ship Channel, Tex.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 28, Seventy-second Congress;

Clear Creek and Clear Lake, Tex.; House Document No. 264, Seventy-third Congress;

Freeport Harbor, Tex.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 15, Seventy-second Congress, and in accordance with the modification of the aforesaid report recommended in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 29, Seventy-third Congress: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for the acquiring of any lands required for the purpose of this improvement;

Channel from Aransas Pass to Corpus Christi, Tex.; House Document No. 130, Seventy-second Congress, and Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 13, Seventy-fourth Congress;

Port Aransas, Tex.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 35, Seventy-second Congress: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for the acquiring of any lands required for the purpose of this improvement;

Brazos Island Harbor, Tex.; The existing project is hereby modified in accordance with the report submitted in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 10, Seventy-second Congress;

Wolf River, Tenn.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 26, Seventy-second Congress: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for the acquiring of any lands required for the purpose of this improvement;

St. Croix River, Wis. and Minn.; House Document No. 184, Seventy-second Congress;

Illinois Waterway, Ill.; House Documents Nos. 180 and 184, Seventy-third Congress;

Cumberland River, Ky. and Tenn.; House Document No. 38, Seventy-third Congress, first session;

Allegheny River, Pa.; House Document No. 721, Seventy-first Congress, and Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 16, Seventy-second Congress; and in accordance with the modification of the recommendation in said Document No. 721, submitted in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 27, Seventy-third Congress;

Beaver and Mahoning Rivers, Pa. and Ohio; House Document No. 277, Seventy-third Congress;

Kanawha and Ohio Rivers, W. Va. and Ohio; House Document No. 31, Seventy-third Congress;

Green and Barren Rivers, Ky.: The existing project is hereby modified in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 480, Seventy-second Congress: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for the acquiring of any lands required for the purpose of this improvement;

Grand Marais Harbor, Minn.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 22, Seventy-second Congress: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for the acquiring of any lands required for the purpose of this improvement;

Agate Bay Harbor, Minn.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 17, Seventy-second Congress: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for the acquiring of any lands required for the purpose of this improvement;

Duluth-Superior Harbor, Minn. and Wis.; House Document No. 482, Seventy-second Congress;

Ashland Harbor, Wis.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 46, Seventy-second Congress;

Keweenaw Waterway, Mich.; House Document No. 55, Seventy-third Congress;

Presque Isle Harbor, Mich.; House Document No. 473, Seventy-second Congress;

Marquette Harbor, Mich.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 20, Seventy-second Congress;

Menominee Harbor and River, Mich. and Wis.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 28, Seventy-third Congress;

Green Bay Harbor, Wis.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 40, Seventy-second Congress;

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. MANSFIELD:

Page 9, line 23, strike out the word "House" and insert the words "Rivers and Harbors Committee."

Page 9, line 24, strike out "229, 72d", and insert "36, 73d."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. MANSFIELD:

Page 10, line —, strike out the word "modification" and insert in lieu thereof the word "modifications."

Page 10, line 23, strike out the word "document" and insert in lieu thereof the word "documents."

Page 10, line 24, strike out the semicolon, insert in lieu thereof a comma, and add the following: "and 26, 74th Congress."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take up the time of the Committee, since I know it is desired to finish the bill this afternoon, but I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point the report of the Chief of Engineers, and also some excerpts from the hearings before the committee. I appreciate very much the favorable action of the committee and of the House on this amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, my attention was otherwise occupied and I did not hear the request of the gentleman from Alabama. Will he be so kind as to repeat it?

Mr. OLIVER. I asked unanimous consent to insert as a part of my own remarks in reference to the amendment that has just been adopted a letter from General Markham, which is short, and also excerpts from the report of the Board of Engineers.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman desires to insert it in the RECORD at this point?

Mr. OLIVER. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The letter and excerpt follow:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, April 1, 1935.

Hon. J. J. MANSFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MANSFIELD:

1. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives, by a resolution adopted March 23, 1935, requested the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors to review the reports on Warrior and Tombigbee Rivers and tributaries, Alabama and Mississippi, submitted in House Document No. 56, Seventy-third Congress, first session, with a view to determining if the recommendations in said document should be modified in any way at this time. I enclose herewith the report of the Board in response thereto.

2. The Warrior River is formed by the confluence of the Locust and Mulberry Forks in north central Alabama, at a point 20 miles west of Birmingham, and flows generally southwest to join the Tombigbee at Demopolis, Ala. From its source to Tuscaloosa, a distance of 47 miles, the river is usually known as the "Black Warrior." The existing project for the Black Warrior, Warrior, and Tombigbee Rivers provides for a channel with a minimum depth of 8 feet and a width of 100 feet, which is increased to 150 feet where practicable, from the mouth of the Tombigbee River to the head of the Black Warrior River, and thence up Mulberry Fork 36 miles to Sanders Ferry, and up Locust Fork 16 miles to Nichols Shoals. The improved channel is provided by the construction of 17 dams and 18 locks and such dredging and snagging as may be necessary. The Warrior-Tombigbee Waterway system carries an important commerce of general character. It increased from a total of 407,000 tons in 1915, when the project was completed, to a maximum of nearly 2,000,000 tons in 1929. Since then it has shown some decline, the total in 1933 being 1,120,000 tons, of which 930,000 tons was vessel traffic. The principal items constituting this tonnage were coal, petroleum products, iron and steel, and forest products. The tows used on the waterway generally consist of 7 barges with 1 towboat, the tows being assembled to form a unit about 420 feet long and 75 feet wide, which, because of the limited size of the locks, must be broken up and reassembled for passage through each dam.

3. At Tuscaloosa there are three locks and dams within a distance of 1 mile, nos. 10, 11, and 12, with a combined lift of approximately 30 feet. Local interests now request that these three structures be replaced by the construction of a single lock and dam. This improvement, with a modern lock of ample dimensions, will result in a saving in time of 4½ hours in passing through the Tuscaloosa reach.

4. The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors has given consideration to the advisability of the improvement requested, and has reached the conclusion that the prosecution of the work at the present time at an estimated cost of $3,550,000 is justified. The three structures to be replaced by the new dam are now 40 years old. In view of this fact and in view of present economic conditions, the prosecution of the proposed work at this time is considered advisable by the Board. It therefore recommends the modification of the existing project for Black Warrior, Warrior, and Tombigbee Rivers, Ala., and Miss., to provide for the construction of a dam, with single lock, on the Black Warrior River below Tuscaloosa, to replace existing Locks and Dams Nos. 10, 11, and 12, at an estimated cost of $3,550,000.

5. After due consideration of this report, I concur in the views and recommendations of the Board.

Very truly yours,

E. M. MARKHAM,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE BOARD OF ENGINEERS FOR RIVERS AND HARBORS,
Washington, D. C., March 26, 1935.

Subject: Warrior and Tombigbee Rivers and tributaries, Alabama and Mississippi.

To: The Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

1. This report is in response to the following resolution, adopted March 23, 1935:

"Resolved by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives, United States, That the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors created under section 3 of the River and Harbor Act approved June 13, 1902, be, and is hereby, requested to review the reports on Warrior and Tombigbee Rivers and tributaries, Alabama and Mississippi, submitted in House Document No. 56, Seventy-third Congress, first session, with a view to determining if the recommendations in said document should be modified in any way at this time."

2. Tombigbee River rises in northeastern Mississippi, flows south and southeast through eastern Mississippi and southwestern Alabama 409 miles, and unites with the Alabama River about 45 miles north of Mobile to form the Mobile River. Warrior River, its principal tributary, is formed by the confluence of the Locust and Mulberry Forks in north-central Alabama, about 20 miles west of Birmingham, flows southwest 178 miles, and joins the Tombigbee River at Demopolis, Ala., 185 miles above the mouth of the Tombigbee. From the forks to Tuscaloosa, 47 miles, it is usually known as the "Black Warrior River."

3. The Tombigbee River below Demopolis and the Warrior River have been improved by locks and dams to provide a waterway extending from the vicinity of Birmingham to Mobile. Four of the locks and dams are on the Tombigbee and 13 on the Warrior. All dams are fixed dams. The upstream dam on the Warrior, no. 17, has a lift of 63 feet, with a flight of two locks, and creates a considerable pool designated Lake Bankhead. The other dams are generally low. The locks are substantially 52 feet in width and 282 feet in usable length. The depth over the sills is 8.5 feet, except at Lock 1, where the depth of 8 feet at ordinary low water is sometimes reduced for a brief time to 6.9 feet at extreme low tide. On an average, there are but 2 days a year, however, when the depth over the lower sill at Lock 1 is less than 8 feet. The channel throughout has a minimum depth of 8 feet and a minimum width of 100 feet in certain restricted reaches. The district engineer reports that the 4 locks on the Tombigbee River, designated as 1, 2, 3, and 4, are in good condition; on the Warrior, Locks 5 and 6 are fair; Locks 7 to 12, inclusive, are in poor condition; and Locks 13 to 17 are in excellent condition. The locks have the capacity to handle a traffic of somewhat in excess of 5,000,000 tons per annum.

4. The Warrior-Tombigbee Waterway serves a considerable and growing traffic. The commerce increased from 1,105,260 tons in 1924 to 1,938,773 tons in 1929, dropping to 958,337 tons in 1932 and increasing to 1,122,823 tons in 1933. The through traffic consists largely of iron and steel, coal, ore, oil, sulphur, sugar, cotton, and other comparatively high-grade products. The traffic originating on the Tombigbee River was practically all sand, gravel, stone, logs, and lumber. The tows generally used on the waterway consist of seven barges and a towboat. Such tows form a unit about 420 feet long and 75 feet wide, and are broken up and reassembled at each lock. At Sunflower Bend, 36 miles above the mouth of the Tombigbee, the river is very crooked and at high stages it is necessary to move tows in two or more sections, and tows have difficulty in maneuvering in the portions of the Warrior River having channel widths less than 200 feet, particularly in the very crooked section below Tuscaloosa. Navigation interests desire the adoption of channel and lock dimensions suitable for the operation of tows of eight barges with a loaded draft of 8.5 feet.

7. The further improvement now desired is the construction of a single lock and dam just below Tuscaloosa to replace existing Locks and Dams Nos. 10, 11, and 12. The construction of the new dam, with a lock of ample dimensions, will save 4½ hours in the passage of an average tow through this section of the river. This saving in time, with the resultant saving in transportation cost, does not, on the basis of the present commerce using the river, fully justify the cost of the proposed improvement, estimated at $3,550,000. However, in its prior recommendation on this subject the Board found that this structure did offer sufficient advantages to justify its being given a high priority in any general plan for the replacement of locks and dams on this stream. The present structures which would be replaced by the high dam are now 40 years old and their condition is such that their replacement will be required within a comparatively short period of time. The Board is of the opinion that in view of this fact and of present economic conditions the prosecution of the proposed work at this time is justified. It therefore reports, in compliance with the committee resolution, that the modification of the existing project for Black Warrior, Warrior, and Tombigbee Rivers, Ala. and Miss., is now advisable, and recommends the construction of a lock and dam with single lock on the Black Warrior River below Tuscaloosa to replace existing Locks and Dams Nos. 10, 11, and 12, at an estimated cost of $3,550,000, including flowage and rights-of-way.

For the Board:

G. B. PILLSBURY,
Brigadier General, Corps of Engineers,
Senior member.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent at this point to insert the committee report upon two projects, both for the city of Seattle. Both reports are very short.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, in the city of Seattle we have two very important river and harbor projects, namely, the east and west waterways and the Lake Washington Ship Canal.

On page 58 of the committee's Report No. 424 there is an authorization which I think the people of the city of Seattle and the Northwest are vitally interested in, and under the unanimous-consent request I ask now that the committee's report on these two projects be inserted in the RECORD.

SEATTLE HARBOR, WASH.

(H. Doc. 211, 72d Cong.)

Report recommends maintenance of east waterway for a distance of 700 feet north of Spokane Street, 400 feet wide, and the maintenance of a turning basin at the junction of the east and west waterways to a depth of 30 feet, all at an estimated cost of $4,750 annually. These waterways are a portion of Seattle Harbor, and the cost of the original improvement has been borne by the city of Seattle. Commerce of Seattle Harbor in 1929 amounted to 7,532,129 tons carried in vessels and 2,585,000 tons of floated timbers.

LAKE WASHINGTON SHIP CANAL AND WATERWAY, WASH.

(H. Doc. 140, 72d Cong.)

Connects Lake Washington (east of Seattle) with Puget Sound, passing through Lake Union; length, 8 miles. A dam and locks have been constructed by the United States, which maintained level of Lake Washington and the canal at elevation of 21 feet. Report recommends widening channels above locks to a width of 100 feet to Lake Union, 200 feet from Lake Union to Portage Cut, 100 feet through Portage Cut, and 200 feet thence through Union Bay to Lake Washington, at cost of $180,000. Commerce in 1930, 1,500,000 tons, not including floated logs and timber in the amount of about 1,600,000 tons. Narrow channels hamper and delay vessels, and groundings are frequent. The Public Works Administration has allotted $196,390.88 to this project.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 11, line 20, after the word "improvement", insert Provided further, That in the event an agreement with local authorities is effected to utilize a portion of Sabine Lake for the disposal of dredged material, the Chief of Engineers is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to contribute from United States funds one-half the cost of a suitable dike or retaining wall, but in no event shall the amount of such contribution exceed the sum of $50,000."

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DIES offers the following substitute for the committee amendment: Page 11, line 23, after the word "authorized", strike out the words "in his discretion, to contribute from the United States funds one-half the cost of a suitable dike or retaining wall, but in no event shall the amount of such contribution exceed the sum of $50,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "To construct with United States funds a suitable revetment, but in no event shall the cost of such construction exceed the sum of $300,000."

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, this deals with the Sabine-Neches Waterway, which is in my district. It has one of the largest tonnage of any waterway in the United States; in fact, it is second in the United States from the standpoint of total tonnage. Most of the tonnage is oil that moves to other States of the Union and to foreign countries.

In the disposition of the spoil from the dredging, they have dumped it into Sabine Lake which adjoins the city of Port Arthur. This mud is gradually filling up the lake and creating a mosquito-breeding ground. As a consequence of the mud accumulating adjacent to the city, millions of mosquitos are being bred there every year and it is very harmful to the health of that community. The city cannot spend any more money to build a revetment because it is financially unable to do so.

Mr. Chairman, this is a national port, serving the entire country, and it is vital to that community that the engineers be authorized to construct a suitable revetment. This is, of course, not an appropriation. It does not bind them to spend this money, but it does give them the authority to so revet that spoil that it will not create a public nuisance which will be destructive to the health of the people of that community. I certainly hope and trust that the membership of this Committee will adopt the amendment I offered, because it is absolutely vital to the community and to all the people who live along the banks of that lake.

This will not cost the Government any more than it would if the Government transported the spoil a longer distance. As I said, it will not cost the Government any more, and in the expenditure of the work-relief funds which we have appropriated recently, the Government can spend at least this much to build a revetment which will put people to work. This will be spending money more wisely than a great deal of the money has been spent heretofore.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. In other words, the amendment which the gentleman offers is to cover a sanitary proposition?

Mr. DIES. It is a sanitary proposition and is of absolute and vital importance to the community down there. I trust that the Committee will not object to the amendment and that the Committee of the Whole will approve it.

Mr. FADDIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FADDIS. The gentleman says that most of this tonnage is inbound tonnage?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. FADDIS. Where does it come from?

Mr. DIES. From the Texas fields and many other fields. I realize, Mr. Chairman, that we are greatly handicapped in the proper presentation of this worthy project due to the fact that an adequate brief was not before the committee when this matter was considered by them. I am fully aware that we are handicapped because we do not have sufficient accurate and specific facts to show the character of revetment needed and the exact cost. In spite of this unfortunate situation I sincerely trust that you will approve this vital amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, as much as I regret to do so I must disagree with the gentleman from Texas as to his amendment. I want to say that in this position I have the support of a majority of the membership of the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

Mr. Chairman, it has been stated here on the floor of the House, and it has been stated repeatedly in the course of debate, that each and every item in this bill had the approval of the Chief of Engineers. Now the gentleman from Texas proposes to come in here and inject an amendment that has not as yet had the approval of the Chief of Engineers. How he knows $300,000 is necessary I do not know, and the members of the committee do not know. The committee offered an amendment, which was approved by the Engineering Corps, providing for a retaining wall there to cost not in excess of $50,000, which I think is a reasonable disposition of the gentleman's problem.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIES. I may say to the gentleman that so far as the committee amendment is concerned, it might as well not be in the bill, because it cannot be constructed for $50,000, and, as I stated previously, the city is bonded to its limit and cannot raise more money.

Mr. CARTER. I cannot yield further to the gentleman. What the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] said may be true; however, he is not the engineer counsel that we go to. The Rivers and Harbors Committee has engineering counsel, consisting of the Chief of Engineers and his assistants. There has been no recommendation from that body in reference to $300,000, or any other amount, save and except the $50,000 mentioned in this bill. As much as I regret to do so, I am compelled to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas. I ask the Membership to vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. Chairman, we are trying to keep this bill within the bounds of saneness and common sense. We are trying to include in it only those things that have been surveyed and studied by the Corps of Engineers and the Chief of Engineers, and their engineering feasibility as well as their economic feasibility passed on by those experts.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIES) there were—ayes 10, noes 42.

So the amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: At the end of page 12, insert the following paragraph:

"Channel from Pass Cavallo to Port Lavaca, Tex.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 28, Seventy-fourth Congress."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I merely want to call attention, in connection with this measure, to the fact that possibly a year from now the St. Lawrence waterway may be again mentioned in Congress, particularly, on this floor, with a little more polite consideration than has been given it here in the few times it has been referred to this afternoon.

Running back for a period of nearly 20 years, just before a Presidential campaign was opened, we people out in the Northwest have heard a lot about the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway, and in nearly every Presidential campaign year in all that time we have seen political parties come out with the glowing promise that the election of one party or the other would open up a seaway and give the people of the Northwest the opportunity which we feel we should have.

In a little more than a year there will be other conventions meeting. I do not doubt that by that time we are going to have the press full of St. Lawrence seaway articles out our way, and the politicians who guide the destinies of parties and write the platforms will again make pledges regarding the wonderful things they are going to do to have that waterway opened.

This bill authorizes $167,000,000 for waterway projects. It comes in with practically not a dollar mentioned so far as appropriations are concerned, covering only the various authorizations of Congress in previous years, and one might read this entire bill without knowing, unless he was a little familiar with the doings of Congress, that there was a dollar appropriated anywhere. However, when we go to the report we find that it calls for approximately $162,000,000, and on top of that, about $105,000,000 has already been expended or is being expended under the direction of the Public Works Administration.

The amount of money already spent, and now being spent, and carried in this measure, is greater than would be the entire cost to our Government of the opening of the St. Lawrence waterway. We have here a huge measure covering about 120 projects.

These river and harbor bills in previous years have been referred to as "pork barrel" measures. I would be unable, and I think anybody else who has not had the time to spend a week or two studying the various projects, to intimate that there is any "pork" in this bill; but I would call attention to the fact that of the total $162,000,000 yet to be expended, $134,000,000 appropriation is going to seven States of this Union, leaving scarcely a mess of pickled pigs' feet out of the barrel for many of the other States involved.

If we can appropriate so much here at a time when there is such loud complaint as to the condition of our Government finances and the deficit in the Treasury, it would seem to me that possibly we might find a way, were we to consider it, of again taking up the matter of the St. Lawrence waterway.

From the harbor of Milwaukee, where you are appropriating $1,300,000 for improvements, there are 7,000,000 tons of lake shipping annually; and in this bill, in just two items, there is provided $32,000,000 for the Cape Cod Canal and $27,000,000 for the Oswego Canal, or more than one-third of the entire authorization here, and the tonnage in both waterways is less than one-half of the tonnage from a single port on the Great Lakes.

I realize nothing can be done here now, so far as the St. Lawrence is concerned, but I may say that the time is coming very soon when there must be action to bring about the opening of the St. Lawrence waterway. We have had promises in plenty. We need action. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have been somewhat amazed at the rapid and unfair diagnosis my friend from Wisconsin has just made. As stated in the course of the general debate, the fact is that the projects in this bill are far-flung and embrace every part of the United States. Twenty-nine States are involved in the North, East, South, and West.

With the gentleman from Wisconsin I am definitely and vigorously for the building of the St. Lawrence ship canal.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. In just a moment.

It could be built promptly by reason of its navigational and resulting power benefits to the whole people, but it does not serve the purpose of that seaway to throw dust in the eyes of this Congress or to have dust thrown from imperfectly informed sources on the subject of this bill.

The committee has worked hard on this bill. The committee knows about this bill and the gentleman from Wisconsin speaks casually and without information on the subject of it.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. In just a moment.

The St. Lawrence seaway, as I understand it, I will say to the gentleman, is now being held up pending further negotiations with the Canadian Government. Until these negotiations are completed, the situation is one of stalemate. I desire to add, although I say it from this side of the aisle, that the distinguished President of the United States has not played politics with this situation but has been wholeheartedly and vigorously for the St. Lawrence waterway in the interest of the entire people, East and West.

I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HULL. So long as the gentleman thinks I am so poorly informed—and I will honestly confess I know nothing about the 140 projects which are brought in here and in 2 or 3 hours passed along to the Treasury—but is it not a fact that the Senators from the States which get one-third or more of this fund were among those vitally interested in preventing the adoption of the treaty when the President recommended it?

Mr. CULKIN. What the gentleman says is true, but political post mortems serve no useful purpose.

The fact is, we have authorizations of projects based alone upon the demands of commerce and upon the necessities of the American people. Seven-eighths of these documents setting forth the projects have been in print 6 months or more, and if the gentleman has not read them it is his own fault. He should have read them before he takes the floor to criticize this bill.

I stated very definitely that I am for the St. Lawrence proposition. It is in my district, and I am for it. The gentleman can learn from the newspapers that a rapprochement is being made to Canada on the proposition, and while that is pending, as I understand the situation, nothing further can be done.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. When the project is brought out we should make it clear and certain that the project will not be paid for entirely or for the most part by the United States Government, and that we will not surrender our rights to control and regulate it.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman has been misled by propaganda. America's rights are being safeguarded in the treaty.

(The time of Mr. CULKIN having expired, he was given 5 minutes more.)

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman from Wisconsin stated the facts correctly when he said that the cost of the St. Lawrence Canal to the United States would be something like $142,000,000 after New York State pays $89,000,000 toward the power construction. That is my recollection. So this talk about the extraordinary cost of it is absurd. There are some questions about the Great Lakes diversion but that is a proposition which the State Department is attempting to iron out.

I say again that I believe the people in the Midwest are entitled to the building of that waterway. It will relieve them from oppressive freight rates. It will, on the other hand, give the northeastern section of the country relief from oppressive utility charges. Nature nearly completed this waterway and man should finish it.

There is nothing in this bill that unfavorably affects the St. Lawrence seaway or slows down its construction. The canal in this bill is a barge canal and the other is a ship canal. Both will serve the manufacturer and farmer in different ways. I am for both propositions and have no apology to offer to either group.

This bill is an honest bill. It is mirrored in the character of the engineers and in the character of the chairman of the committee. There is not an economic fallacy in it anywhere. [Applause.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The gentleman from Wisconsin has referred to the fact that out of a large number of projects embraced in this bill the great proportion or a majority of the funds authorized go to a few States.

Now, to have done otherwise, to undertake to apportion money out to the several States would go back to where we were 40 years ago and subject these matters to the common pork-barrel scheme, for no other purpose than for political effect upon the Members' constituents back home.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DONDERO. The question of national defense enters into and is interwoven with these projects, is it not?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Unquestionably. The measure embraced in this bill are as nearly scientific as it is possible for the best authorities to figure out.

These authorizations are to be placed where the needs of commerce and navigation most demand them. We have some States in the Union like Colorado, for instance, and other States in the mountain regions that have no waterway projects whatever, and it would be absolutely impossible to undertake to dish these things out as a "pork barrel" measure and to give to each State a little dose of "pork" here and there.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. DIES. Is it not a fact that the Public Works Administration has already set aside money for projects that the Rivers and Harbors Committee has heretofore disapproved.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is true; but they have acted from a different viewpoint. They act from the viewpoint primarily of employing labor. We act from the viewpoint of serving the purposes of commerce and navigation and for the permanent needs of the country instead of the temporary or emergency needs.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the pending committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 2, strike out the word "document" and insert the word "documents", and in line 3, after the word "Congress" add "and 40, Seventy-third Congress: Provided".

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Beiter: Page 4, line 16, after the word "waterway" strike out the semicolon, insert a colon and add the following:

"Provided further, That in the event the President or the President's National Resources Board considers that the improvement of that section of the Erie Canal, extending from Three Rivers Point to the Niagara River, is justified and would result in benefits commensurate with the required expenditure, an allotment of funds to cover the cost of the work is hereby authorized. Improvements, if and when made, are to be subject to the conditions set forth in the above-named document so far as applicable."

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two letters and a report from the War Department with regard to the improvement of the Erie Canal from Three Rivers Point to Buffalo.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to authorize allotment of funds required for the improvement of the Erie Canal from Three Rivers to Buffalo, in the event the President and the National Resources Board considers that the improvement is justified and would result in benefits commensurate with the required expenditure. Improvements, of course, are subject to conditions set forth in Document No. 20, Seventy-third Congress.

New York State has earned distinction by the contribution which it has made in the construction of the system of State barge canals. I refer especially to the Erie and Oswego divisions of the system which connect the port of New York and the Hudson River with the Great Lakes at Buffalo. These canals have a project depth of 12 feet and represent fine engineeering skill and a large expenditure. While they were supposed to be adequate when authorized the increasing size of barges and other types of boats and the demand for greater cargoes have likewise created a sentiment for the enlargement of these canals together with the removal of overhead bridges which obstruct navigation.

I represent a district in New York State whose citizens are intensely interested in the Erie Canal by reason of the fact that they feel that if the improvement of the canal system from Oswego to the Hudson with the aid of the Federal Government is made, outlined in the program that has been advanced by the Federal Government, in relation to the $27,000,000, it would dismember the New York canal system and an irreparable injury will be inflicted upon my district and its people.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEITER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman that there is neither logic nor justice in discriminating against the western half of the State of New York as is done in the recommendation of the engineers which is followed by the committee. I ask the gentleman whether his amendment goes far enough to include the improvement of the barge canal branch, extending from Three Rivers to the port of Syracuse?

Mr. BEITER. Yes; it does. It includes all of that portion from Three Rivers to Syracuse and then on to Buffalo.

Mr. MOTT. Is it the purpose of this amendment to make a more definite authorization or a more definite direction for the prosecution of this project than of the other projects in the bill?

Mr. BEITER. I might say to the gentleman it makes a more definite authorization.

Mr. MOTT. If I understand it correctly, it really directs that something be done about this.

Mr. BEITER. Yes; it does. I might add it is no pleasant matter for any advocate of waterway development to disagree with the Army Board of Engineers upon so important a matter as the improving of the western section of the barge canal. The Army Board of Engineers has repeatedly shown its genuine and very potent sympathy with the cause of waterway development. They have stood for that cause in all parts of the country, and no part of the Nation is under greater obligation to them for imperatively needed assistance than is the river and harbor at Buffalo. They have very recently recommended an additional $1,863,000 for river and harbor work in Buffalo, and when added to the $1,044,000 available for river and harbor work in the Black Rock Channel it will mean that nearly $3,000,000 will be spent in the vicinity of Buffalo—one of the largest appropriations allotted western New York in years.

Yet, disagreeable as it is to differ with so able and unselfish a body as the Army Board of Engineers upon so important a matter as the improving of the western section of the barge canal, the fact remains that a grant of $27,000,000 to widen and deepen the eastern section, a program detrimental to Buffalo and other communities along the western section, has been offered to New York State by the Government.

The report dated March 4, 1935, reveals that the engineers take the stand they took October 29, 1934, that the prospective benefits of improving the western section of the canal do not justify the expenditure. I hope that I may be pardoned for saying that this decision is flatly challenged by Buffalo and its up-State allies.

It has been shown that the western end handles about 75 percent of the commerce of the barge-canal system, as against the proportion taken care of on the eastern division, for the widening and deepening of which the Federal Government stands ready to grant $27,000,000. Moreover, the western end is the gateway to commerce from the Middle West. Denial of development to it would mean the diversion to the Welland Canal and Canadian ports of a vast amount of tonnage now poured through the barge canal.

Attempts to divert traffic from one route to another invariably have resulted in great loss to permanent investments without accomplishing the results originally intended.

In 1930 the report of the Chief of Engineers (H. Doc. No. 29, 71st Cong., 2d sess.), in reference to taking over and improving the New York State Barge Canal, recommended along the following lines:

> The most practicable and economical plan for meeting the anticipated needs of commerce as they arise appears to be increasing the depth to 14 feet, without changing the 12-foot depth now available in the locks, progressive widening to permit full use of the greater depth, and the raising of the bridges to provide 20 feet vertical clearances. Such of these improvements as might prove necessary in the next 10 or 15 years would probably cost about $50,000,000. The capacity of the canal would be very largely increased, and by the time the work was completed it is reasonable to expect that the increased commerce will justify the expenditure.

This improvement of the barge canal in its entirety by the Federal Government is just as essential today as it was then, as these improvements are necessary to accommodate the Nation-wide business as heretofore.

It is my recommendation that the Federal Government make these improvements as the United States Board of Army Engineers has recommended at that time, the work to be carried through under the same policy of improvement of Federal aid for the development of national highways.

This canal is of the utmost importance to the Nation at large, much more so than to the State, as it is a direct feeder with the intercoastal system upon which the Federal Government has spent millions. It has direct connections with the St. Lawrence River through the Lake Champlain division. It is the intermediary waterway between the Atlantic Ocean and the Great Lakes, and through the Atlantic Ocean and Panama Canal it connects with the Pacific Coast States thereby rendering a service to more than half of the entire population of the United States.

The New York State Barge Canal is of great importance to the Federal Government as an asset in time of great emergency to be used for transporting food, supplies, building materials, and other commodities to the coastal States in emergencies for a sustaining defensive and preparedness measure.

The Federal Government has spent large sums upon either waterway projects throughout the country, and therefore has established a precedent of improving our inland waterways.

The New York State Barge Canal is the only major waterway transportation system in the United States on which no moneys for waterway improvement have been spent by the United States.

Probably the most potent argument so far presented concerning the barge-canal improvement is found in the operation report of the Erie and Oswego Canals for last season.

Inquiry made of commissioner of canals and waterways of New York State as to the tonnage carried for 1934 furnishes this official statement:

On the Erie Canal the total tonnage moved was 3,646,245, a gain of 71,294 tons over the season of 1933. On the Oswego branch the tonnage moved this season amounted to 206,299 tons.

In view of the fact that the State of New York pays over 25 percent of the entire taxes and revenue of the Federal Government, the Empire State would therefore pay more than one-quarter of any and all sums that the Federal Government would expend on the improvement of the barge-canal system, so that under this arrangement, if $50,000,000 was expended, New York State's share would be approximately $12,500,000, as compared to only $37,500,000 that all the other 47 States together would expend. Since 89 percent of the canal's traffic is interstate, New York State would be paying 25 percent of the improvement costs for its 11-percent traffic use. In addition to this, New York

State has already invested over $230,000,000 in the canal system, as has been stated in the War Department's report which I have asked to be printed in the RECORD.

Buffalo and western New York ask no privileged consideration; they ask only that they be given a fair deal. Such a deal they have not received. They have shown the hardship they are under in the proposed improvement of the eastern end of the canal which will virtually bypass them. I believe that in justice to these and a very large portion of the State of New York, the improvement now about to begin on the eastern end of the canal should be extended to include the whole barge-canal system. I trust this amendment which I have offered will be adopted.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, April 4, 1935.

Hon. ALFRED F. BEITER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BEITER: Complying with your verbal request, I am enclosing herewith for your information a copy of the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors on the improvement of that section of the Erie Canal from Three Rivers Point to the Niagara River, together with a copy of my report concurring in the views and recommendations of the Board. This report has been forwarded to the Chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Very truly yours,

E. M. MARKHAM,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, April 4, 1935.

Hon. J. J. MANSFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MANSFIELD:

1. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives, by resolution adopted February 2, 1934, requested the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors to review the reports on the Great Lakes-Hudson River Waterway, submitted in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 20, Seventy-third Congress, second session, and reports previously submitted on this waterway, with a view to determining the cost and advisability of improving the section of the Erie Canal from Three Rivers Point to the Niagara River in a manner similar to that recommended in the above-mentioned report for the section extending from the Hudson River to Three Rivers Point. I enclose herewith the report of the Board in response thereto.

2. The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, after full consideration of the report secured from the special board and after affording local interests full opportunity to be heard, reports that improvement of the section of the Erie Canal from Three Rivers Point to the Niagara River in a manner similar to that recommended in House Committee Document No. 20, Seventy-third Congress, second session, for the section extending from the Hudson River to Three Rivers Point, is not advisable at the present time.

3. After due consideration of these reports, I concur in the views and recommendations of the Board.

Very truly yours,

E. M. MARKHAM,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE BOARD OF ENGINEERS FOR RIVERS AND HARBORS,
ROOM 2848, MUNITIONS BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., March 4, 1935.

Subject: Great Lakes-Hudson River Waterway.

To: The Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

1. This report is submitted in response to the following resolution, adopted February 2, 1934:

"Resolved by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives, United States, That the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors created under section 3 of the River and Harbor Act, approved June 13, 1902, be, and is hereby, requested to review the reports on the Great Lakes-Hudson River Waterway, submitted in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 20, Seventy-third Congress, second session, and reports previously submitted on this waterway, with a view to determining the cost and advisability of improving the section of the Erie Canal from Three Rivers Point to the Niagara River in a manner similar to that recommended in the above-mentioned report for the section extending from the Hudson River to Three Rivers Point."

2. The New York State Barge Canal system comprises the Erie, Oswego, Champlain, and Cayuga-Seneca Canals. The Erie Canal leaves the Hudson River at Waterford, the head of Federal navigation improvements on that stream, and extends westward through lakes, canalized streams, and land cuts across the State to Tonawanda on the federally improved Niagara River 13 miles below Buffalo. The Oswego Canal branches northward from the Erie Canal at Three Rivers Point, 160 miles west of Waterford, and extends northward in the Oswego River 24 miles to the federally improved port of Oswego on Lake Ontario. The Champlain Canal extends northward from Waterford in the valley of the Hudson to Lake Champlain. The Cayuga-Seneca Canal branches southward from the Erie Canal to Cayuga Lake and Seneca Lake. The canals have a project depth of 12 feet and minimum bottom width of 75 feet. The 41 locks have a clear width of 45 feet and usable length of 300 feet, with a depth of 12 feet over the miter sills. Numerous bridges, many of which are fixed, span the waterway. The minimum overhead clearance at maximum navigable stage is 14½ feet. The entire system has been constructed by the State of New York at a cost of more than $230,000,000. The section of the Erie Canal from Three Rivers Point to Tonawanda, now under consideration, has a total length of 178 miles, of which 127 miles are in land cuts and the remainder in improved small streams. There are 12 locks having a total lift of 201 feet. One hundred and seventy bridges cross this section of the canal. Of this number, 115 are fixed bridges having clearances less than 20 feet above the maximum navigable stage. In addition, there are 11 guard gates with 15½ feet overhead clearance.

3. The States bordering on the Great Lakes and the Hudson River, with a population of approximately 50,000,000, are directly tributary to the Erie and Oswego Canals. In addition, the New England States on the east and the Middle Western States have access to the canal by railroad, highway, and water. The canals traverse a highly industrialized region where there are plants engaged in the production of raw materials and manufactured articles of a national character. The commerce on the Barge Canal system has increased steadily in recent years, reaching a maximum of 4,000,000 tons in 1933. Slightly less than three-fourths of this tonnage moves over the Three Rivers Point-Tonawanda section.

4. The State canal system has been constructed, maintained, and operated solely at State expense. Having in view the interstate character of most of the commerce carried, the Chief of Engineers in 1930 recommended that the Secretary of War be empowered to accept the Erie and Oswego Canals and thereafter maintain and operate them as navigable waterways of the United States. This recommendation was enacted into law by the River and Harbor Act of July 3, 1930. Certain State interests opposed such transfer. In the report contained in House Committee Document No. 20, Seventy-third Congress, second session, which has not been acted upon by Congress, the Chief of Engineers recommended that the United States allot $27,000,000 to the State of New York for improvement of that section of the Erie Canal between Waterford and Three Rivers Point, and the Oswego Canal, without transfer of title, the improvements to be carried out by the State under certain restrictions, limitations, and conditions set forth in detail in that document. The recommended improvements are deepening the canal between locks to 14 feet below normal pool levels, widening the canal prism progressively at bends and elsewhere, and increasing the minimum vertical clearances of bridges and other obstructions to 20 feet at maximum navigable stage.

5. The Erie Canal from Waterford to Three Rivers Point and the Oswego Canal, in conjunction with Lake Ontario and the Canadian Welland Ship Canal, afford an alternate waterway from Lake Erie to the Hudson River. At a public hearing held by the special board appointed to consider the subject matter of the resolution quoted in paragraph 1 local interests strongly protested the improvement of this alternate route without a corresponding improvement of the Three Rivers Point-Tonawanda section. Prior to the opening of the New Welland Ship Canal in 1931, Buffalo was at the foot of deep-draft navigation on the Great Lakes system. Large investments have been made in terminal facilities for the transfer from lake steamer to barge, elevator, or railroad. Local interests fear that improvement of the canal from Oswego to Waterford without a corresponding improvement of the section now under consideration would tend to encourage the transfer from lake to barge at Oswego instead of Buffalo, with consequent disastrous effects on the commerce of Buffalo Harbor. Railroad interests of the State of New York submitted a brief in opposition to the improvement.

VIEWS OF THE SPECIAL BOARD

6. The special board, after reviewing the data presented in House Committee Document No. 29, Seventy-first Congress, second session, adheres to the estimate contained therein of the cost of the specific improvement now under consideration. Based upon weighted unit prices, averaged over a representative period of years, the estimated initial cost is $48,000,000; with increased annual carrying charges, including interest on the initial cost, of $2,677,000. The special board is of the opinion that this expenditure is not justified by the prospective benefits. It considers that the large increase in the commerce of the Barge Canal system anticipated in the reports under review, which was predicated mainly upon a continued growth in the export of wheat, is not now likely to be realized for many years, if at all. It believes that the commerce of the Barge Canal system will continue to grow at a moderate rate and will probably reach a total of about 5,000,000 tons by 1938. While not concurring in the views of local interests that improvement of the Oswego-Waterford route as recommended in the report under review would result in an appreciable diversion of traffic to that route, the special board does not anticipate that the section now under consideration will in the future carry more than its past average of 75 percent of the total Barge Canal commerce, or more han 3,750,000 tons annually by the year 1938. This figure is considerably less than the practical capacity of the present canal. If the Waterford-Three Rivers section be improved as recommended in the report under review, similar improvement of the Three Rivers Point-Tonawanda section would afford certain savings in transportation costs. These savings, based on the anticipated 1938 movement of 3,750,000 tons, are estimated at $1,211,000 per year, an amount clearly insufficient to justify the cost of the improvement.

7. Local interests were advised of the adverse nature of the report of the special board, and, at their request, a public hearing was held by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors. At this hearing request was made that special consideration be given to the branch channel leading from the main canal just west of Three Rivers Point to the city of Syracuse, and that this part of the waterway be improved in accordance with the plan recommended for the Oswego branch. Others interested in the use of the canal between Buffalo and Three Rivers Point repeated previous statements in favor of maintaining this section of the waterway on a parity with the condition prevailing on the eastern section. They pointed out that large amounts of capital had been invested in terminal facilities, particularly at Buffalo, which were dependent upon the continued use of that port as a transshipment point between lake carrier and barge, and that a diversion of this traffic would result in large damages to established industries and to a large number of people who were dependent for their living upon the commercial activities of the Buffalo waterfront. They also stressed the desirability of maintaining the flow of traffic now using the canal entirely within the boundaries of the United States. They definitely opposed the improvement recommended for the eastern section unless a similar improvement should be made in the Buffalo-Three Rivers Point section. A representative of the rail carriers appeared in opposition to the proposed improvement.

VIEWS OF THE BOARD OF ENGINEERS FOR RIVERS AND HARBORS

8. In the report under review the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors recommended that the United States allot funds to the State of New York in amount not exceeding $27,000,000 for the improvement of that portion of the State barge canal system connecting the Hudson River at Waterford with Lake Ontario at Oswego by deepening the canal between the locks to 14 feet below normal pool levels, widening progressively at bends and elsewhere, and increasing the minimum vertical clearances of bridges and other obstructions to 20 feet. The fundamental purpose of the proposed improvement is to afford a better water connection between the Great Lakes and the Hudson River. The advisability of this improvement is not now under review. The issue before the board is solely the advisability and justification for the extension, at Federal expense, of a like improvement of the canal to its terminus on Lake Erie at Buffalo.

9. The report of the special board shows that the cost of this extension, estimated at $48,000,000, is not justified by the economies in transportation costs to be anticipated on the present and prospective traffic through the canal. No data were presented at the hearing before the board to establish such justification. The improvement is urged primarily on the ground that the improvement of the Oswego section alone would discriminate against the port of Buffalo, the western terminus of the canal system, through which the great bulk of the canal traffic is now handled, and might lead to a diversion of this traffic to Oswego.

10. Present economic conditions, both domestic and foreign, are such that the future trends of commerce cannot be predicted with assurance. It is, however, apparent that the restricted depths, widths, and headroom of the State barge canals hamper the development of commerce thereon. The improvement of the Oswego section heretofore recommended will afford a route by which vessels of greater capacity can reach Buffalo via the Oswego Canal, Lake Ontario, and the Welland Canal. Traffic to Buffalo through the present canal system will to some extent be benefited by the increased widths and freedom of movement in the section of the canal between Waterford and Three Rivers. The extension of the improvement to Buffalo is clearly not justified at the present time, and consideration of the advisability of this extension can, in the opinion of the board, be deferred without jeopardy to the port of Buffalo or any other locality, until the benefits of the initial improvement, if authorized and undertaken, have been demonstrated by experience. The board therefore reports, in compliance with the committee resolution, that improvement of the section of the Erie Canal from Three Rivers Point to the Niagara River in a manner similar to that recommended in House Committee Document No. 20, Seventy-third Congress, second session, for the section extending from the Hudson River to Three Rivers Point, is not advisable at the present time.

For the Board:

G. B. PILLSBURY,
Brigadier General, Corps of Engineers, Senior Member.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in opposition to the amendment.

I dislike very much to rise in opposition to the amendment offered by my good personal friend and member of the committee from the State of New York. The report of the engineers in this case has recommended that the route to connect the Hudson River with the Great Lakes can be secured much more reasonably and much more economically by taking the Oswego Branch, instead of following the Western Branch to the Niagara River. If we take in this branch, as proposed by the amendment, still there is a great network of canal system in the State of New York which will be left out. We are not taking in the Lakes division, Cayuga and Seneca Lake sections, or the Lake Champlain section. All of those are a part of the New York canal system. For the present we are taking that portion, and that portion only, which serves the greatest national purpose by connecting the Atlantic seaboard with the Great Lakes. At present the waterway down the St. Lawrence has a 14-foot channel. Wheat coming from the Northwest going down through the Welland Canal naturally at this time goes down to Montreal, because they can move it down there at much less overhead cost, because the channel is 2 feet deeper. This bill will simply make it competitive, so that the St. Lawrence will be equal with the channel down the Hudson to the port of New York. Now, when grain goes down the St. Lawrence to the port of Montreal for export, we know that every grain of that wheat goes to the export market in a British ship. If half of it, or a reasonable portion of it, can be brought down to the port of New York, at least 33 percent of it will be exported in American bottoms, and it will help our merchant marine, as well as help the Nation generally otherwise.

I hope the amendment offered by my good friend will be voted down. The State of New York, which owns and operates this canal, can do this work now if it wants to do so, but if it is decided that the Federal Government shall take it under consideration, let it pass over and have another survey and a reinvestigation, and see whether or not the engineers may then report in favor of it.

Mr. BEITER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. BEITER. The gentleman has referred to the lakes in the chain system which would, of course, infer that we are coming back for additional money at a later date. The depth of those lakes at the present time would take care of the type of boats that would be used on the canal from Three Rivers to Buffalo, and no additional funds would be required and no additional depth would be required in that particular section to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Am I justified in supposing from the statement which the gentleman has made that the real purpose of this amendment perhaps is to help create a new and rival route between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean so as to ultimately defeat the project of the Northwest to develop the St. Lawrence waterway?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The gentleman is entirely incorrect in his assumption.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, it is the desire of the Speaker that the Committee rise as soon as we finish the first section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there are some other amendments on the Clerk's desk with reference to section 1.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is on the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOTT: On page 1, line 9, after the word "documents", change the colon to a period and add the following: "The Administrator of Public Works is hereby directed to allot and make available for the prosecution of said authorized works of improvement of rivers and harbors and other waterways, such sum or sums out of the funds provided in House Joint Resolution 117 as may be necessary to prosecute and complete such works or improvements."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order to the amendment. As I understand the amendment, it is the equivalent of an appropriation. It applies to a matter not within the jurisdiction of this committee. We have no jurisdiction over legislation of the Public Works Administration. Furthermore, I consider that amendment as an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MOTT. If you please, Mr. Chairman.

This amendment, Mr. Chairman, does not direct an appropriation. The appropriation has already been made in the work-relief bill, House Joint Resolution 117. In that bill there is made available some $350,000,000 for rivers and harbors improvements. This bill, which we are now considering, authorizes a long list of river and harbor improvement projects which have been approved and examined by the Board of Army Engineers, which have been approved and authorized by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, and which in a few minutes will be formally authorized by the House of Representatives. Now, all this amendment does is to direct the Administrator of Public Works to allot from this money already appropriated whatever funds may be sufficient to prosecute and to complete the projects which we are authorizing in this bill. It is my contention that it is by no means and in no sense an appropriation nor an authorization of an appropriation. The money has already been appropriated. It has been earmarked. This is simply a direction to the officer in charge of the rivers and harbors earmarked money to use that money for the projects specifically authorized in this bill to be constructed.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, as I heard the amendment read, it makes an appropriation, because it directs the Administrator of Public Works to allocate part of the funds already appropriated for these specific purposes. This is at least a reappropriation and comes within the rule forbidding appropriations coming from legislative committees.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. May I suggest this distinction, the works relief bill specifically makes available $350,000,000 and more for rivers and harbors projects. The effect of the language in that bill is that this money is to be used for rivers and harbors projects, but it does not specify approved or authorized projects. The language of my amendment will in effect specify that. If this appropriated money is used at all in any rivers and harbors projects that the Public Works Administrator may decide upon, my amendment will require the expenditure of the money to be confined to those particular rivers and harbors projects authorized by the bill we are now considering.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is the evil of the amendment, that it takes away discretion from the Public Works Administrator and appropriates and allocates to these specific projects an amount of money. It may not be done in a legislative bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

This bill, of course, cannot carry an appropriation. The gentleman offers an amendment to the effect that the Administrator of Public Works is hereby directed to allot and make available for the prosecution of such authorized works of improvement on rivers and harbors and other waterways such sum or sums from the funds provided in House Joint Resolution 117.

This, clearly, is a diversion of funds already appropriated, which is tantamount, in the opinion of the Chair, to an appropriation.

The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, may I propound a parliamentary inquiry at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOTT. The Chair's ruling on this question may obviate the necessity of offering a further amendment. I had in mind also the offering of an amendment which would prohibit the Public Works Administrator from using any of this Public Works money on projects that were not authorized by Congress.

My parliamentary inquiry is: Would such an amendment be germane?

If the Chair cares to rule on that at this time, it will determine whether I shall offer this additional amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon well knows that the Chair cannot anticipate what might be presented to the Chair, and the Chair does not care to pass judgment in advance of knowing what the amendment is.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SABATH: Page 13, line 19, after the word "Congress", insert "To dredge slip D to the depth of the channel of the west fork of the south branch of the Chicago River and to permit to erect a bulkhead approximating 276 feet from the end of said slip D, provided the cost of dredging does not exceed $10,000."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, the Sanitary District of the City of Chicago has expended about $100,000,000, the State of Illinois $20,000,000, and the National Government has expended only about $3,750,000 for the purpose of making possible a through water route from the Great Lakes to the Gulf. Notwithstanding the expenditure of this large sum of money, the deepening of slip D where a great deal of the freight is loaded on to the barges, has not been provided for. It has not been dredged and, therefore, although we have at such great expense created a wonderful waterway, the commercial houses which have a great deal of freight to move over this waterway are obliged to load it first on to small boats and transfer it from the small boats to the larger boats to make use of this great inland waterway.

The deepening of this slip D is absolutely necessary for some of the shippers of Chicago to utilize this waterway to its greatest advantage and to avoid unnecessary expenditures. The cost of deepening this slip will not exceed $5,000 or $6,000. If this improvement is neglected it may prevent the shipment to France of coal tar which is manufactured in that section. Moreover, this additional reloading cost may prevent the manufacturers from successfully competing with foreign manufacturers.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Did the gentleman from Illinois present this matter to the Rivers and Harbors Committee?

Mr. SABATH. I will answer the gentleman. I did, but it was rather late and I am guilty of negligence. I did not want to admit it, but I am obliged to do so. I plea in extenuation the fact that I have been so extremely busy. I did submit the matter to the committee, but it was rather late. The shipping season is opening up now and unless this improvement is made there will be a tremendous loss.

Mr. CARTER. Has this proposal received the endorsement of the Chief of Engineers?

Mr. SABATH. Really, I do not know whether there was sufficient time given to make the report, but I will say to my colleague that if a survey should be necessary I think the survey would probably cost more than the dredging of this 550-foot slip.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. FIESINGER. If this item has not had the approval of the Chief of Engineers, it would be subject to a point of order, I take it.

Mr. SABATH. I think it has been submitted to them, but I am not going to make a false statement or a statement of which I am not positive. As I say, it is my impression it has been submitted to the engineers; and it is one of those slips right off the main channel. The channel is about 20 feet deep, whereas the slip is only about 8 to 12 feet deep and these big vessels cannot come up to the dock.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. Does this have any bearing in any way on additional diversion of water from the Great Lakes?

Mr. SABATH. No; not at all. This is a matter that was overlooked by both the engineers and myself. That is the reason it did not get in the original bill; and I ask indulgence for imposing upon the committee and upon the House in offering this amendment and asking that it be adopted.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion let me say that I think this is the first time in 28 years that I have asked for any river and harbor appropriation for my district.

I did ask for a loan for the school board of Chicago; and may I say that that loan was made and was repaid in 4 months, the Government making $221,000 on the loan. This is the first chance I have had opportunity to give the House this favorable information.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the matter presented by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, our beloved friend and dean of the House, is a matter that might more appropriately be offered to the next section of the bill calling for a survey and investigation. No Member of the House can explain that matter; no one can know what might be accomplished by it; no Member can tell what it would cost, and before loading down a bill with miscellaneous matters of that kind we should first submit it to a survey and investigation so that it might come before us in a more intelligent manner.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. I say in my amendment "provided it does not cost above $10,000." It is about the smallest item in the bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I suggest the gentleman offer his amendment to the next section and not to this one.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BIERMANN: At the end of section 1 insert "The Administrator of Public Works is authorized to expend public funds on the projects authorized in this act, but on none other."

Mr. MANSFIELD and Mr. CARTER reserved a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment frankly is offered to stop the further expenditure of money on the upper Mississippi 9-foot channel. To the credit of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, be it said that the criminal folly called the "upper Mississippi 9-foot channel" did not originate in that committee.

In 1930, as I understand it—and I hope the committee chairman will correct me if I am wrong—the Senate imposed upon the House an amendment authorizing the making of the 9-foot channel in the upper Mississippi River, and from that day until this hour the Congress of the United States has never authorized a single penny of appropriation for this work. The purpose of my amendment is to stop the Administrator of Public Works from putting money into that project without the further permission of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I want to read what the Mississippi Valley Committee's report of October 1, 1934, to the Public Works Administration stated in regard to the upper Mississippi 9-foot channel:

It is not possible by any calculations of business accounting to discover an economic justification for the vast expenditures on the projected improvement of these waterways, especially from the prevailing viewpoint of self-liquidation, but also even from the viewpoint of complete coverage of costs of maintenance and operation. It is the more impossible when consideration is given to the fact that diversion of grain traffic from railroads, which is included in present calculations, is quite likely to be checkmated by the highly probable development of through water traffic from the Great Lakes by way of the St. Lawrence River to the Atlantic.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. To what part of the upper Mississippi River does the gentleman refer?

Mr. BIERMANN. I refer to the part from the mouth of the Illinois River to Minneapolis.

Mr. Chairman, may I give official figures on the traffic transported over the upper Mississippi River in the last generation? In 1889 the traffic was 3,947,000 tons. In 1910 it was 1,836,000 tons. In 1920 it was 630,000 tons. Last year in a letter that General Ashburn, president of the Inland Waterways Corporation, wrote to me, that traffic is stated as being 146,000 tons, and in that letter General Ashburn said: "I expect to see the upper Mississippi section show a profit in 1935", that statement in view of the dwindling trade.

The proponents of the upper Mississippi 9-foot channel contend that the saving in freight to the shippers over the upper Mississippi 9-foot channel will offset the expense the Government is put to. On February 18 and 19, 1935, there was a hearing before the Review Board of the Public Works Administrator in which it was set out by the statistics of the Government that it would cost the United States Government in interest and upkeep a little over $8,000,000 per annum to maintain the upper Mississippi 9-foot channel. I am glad to see the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHRISTIANSON] taking down the figures, and I would like to have him controvert or explain them. It was set out, as I stated, that it would cost the Government a little over $8,000,000 per year to maintain this upper Mississippi 9-foot channel, and by the rosiest figures of the proponents of the channel, who are not at all alarmed if they depart somewhat from the facts, the saving was less than $7,000,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, taking the Government's figures as to the expense and taking the proponent's figures as to the savings, the shippers on the upper Mississippi 9-foot channel would save something less than $7,000,000 per year and the Government would have an expense of over $8,000,000 per year. The Government would lose more than a million dollars each year more than the shippers would save. We should bear in mind that the shippers over this waterway, maintained by the Government, pay not one penny of tonnage taxes. They will pay absolutely nothing for the use of the locks, for the use of the channel, and for the upkeep of the channel. That is a donation and, considering it as a donation, the cost to the Government is more than a million dollars in excess of the rosiest prediction as to what the shippers will save per year.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order I made previously.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The point of order is the same as I made awhile ago to another amendment. It is the equivalent of an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BIERMANN. My suggestion is that this is an authorization.

My amendment suggests or authorizes how the P. W. A. shall spend some of the public funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The amendment of the gentleman from Iowa provides that the Administrator of Public Works is authorized to expend public funds on the subjects authorized in this act, but on none other. This would authorize the Administrator of Public Works to transfer funds already appropriated to the projects that are enumerated in this act which, in effect, would amount to an appropriation.

The amendment goes far beyond a mere authorization, and the Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: On page 4, line 11, after the word "Congress", insert "And also the branch of the New York State Barge Canal between Three Rivers Point and the city of Syracuse in accordance with the plans recommended for the Oswego branch."

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee in their wisdom have seen fit to follow rigidly the recommendations of the Army engineers and not to deviate therefrom so much as a hair's breadth. Thus far today the House has shown a disposition to follow the same course. I think we owe it to ourselves and to each other to consider the amendments that are offered on their merits rather than to show abject and humble subservience to the Army engineers. I hope that I may have your attention for a few minutes. If you will listen to my explanation and understand the merits of this amendment, you will support it.

I have been unable to get the interest of the Army engineers in this proposition. They have insisted on considering it as a part of the Buffalo project, although it is easily distinguishable from that improvement. Let me give you very briefly what is proposed by this paragraph. It is recommended that the Barge Canal of New York State be deepened and widened from Oswego, on Lake Ontario, to Three Rivers Point, where the Seneca, the Oswego, and the Oneida Rivers join, and thence eastward to the Hudson River at Waterford.

My proposition is that the short branch of the canal from Three Rivers Point to the barge canal harbor at Syracuse should be deepened to conform with the rest of the improvement. It is connected with Three Rivers Point by natural waterways, the Senaca River, the outlet to Onondaga Lake, Onondaga Lake itself, and Onondaga Creek. It is a distance of 14 miles and all of it but 4 miles has sufficient depth and width of channel to become a part of the project approved by the engineers.

The work will be relatively inexpensive, but it is a matter that is very important to the district in which I live. The manufacturers and shippers of the city are accustomed to use the canal transportation system. They have been educated by 100 years of experience. The old Erie Canal was built through the dead center of Syracuse. As a matter of fact, Governor Clinton had his strongest backing for the canal project from the people of central New York, particularly the salt producers. Over 13 percent of all the traffic passing over the New York Barge Canal is handled in Syracuse, and the rejection of the amendment would mean the absolute cutting off of the most important barge canal harbor on the canal system, except those that are also Lake ports. It is the only large city which will be entirely excluded from the use of the improved canal facilities if my amendment is not agreed to.

I have no official recommendation against it, neither have I a recommendation in favor of it. The Board of Army Engineers' report is absolutely silent on the subject. I have appeared before the Rivers and Harbors Committee and the Board of Army Engineers, but I have received no response. No one has advanced a single argument against it.

I am appealing to you to do the reasonable and just thing. There is an enormous amount of money invested in our barge canal harbor. Syracuse is in the exact center of the State of New York. It is a city where vast quantities of goods of all kinds are handled and distributed to the up-State territory. A great deal of the freight on the canal originates in the city of Syracuse. It is unfair to the people who have invested their money there, it is unfair to the people who have been taught to use this canal ever since it was built in 1820 by Governor Clinton, it is unfair to the city and the people of central New York, to exclude Syracuse from the proposed improvement.

I shall not take any more of your time, but I ask you to give my amendment more than passing thought. Do not vote it down just because the engineers would like to do our thinking for us.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York has been very persistent and energetic in endeavoring to have this project favorably reported. I commend him for the zeal with which he is looking out for the interests of his constituents. However, I must thoroughly disagree with him in his request to adopt his amendment and make his project a part of this bill.

The gentleman refers to the fact that the engineers are doing the thinking for the Rivers and Harbors Committee. I may say to the gentleman from New York that while we reserve the right to do our own thinking, we are guided by the engineering facts and figures placed before us. We are guided by economic figures and facts that are placed before us by the Chief of Engineers and his assistants, and we draw our conclusions from them. We have drawn our conclusions relative to this project. The gentleman says that we did not give him an answer. We gave him quite an emphatic answer, I think. His project is not in the bill. That is an answer in about as plain language as we can give him.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Is there any discussion whatever in the report of the engineers regarding this project, pro or con. Is it mentioned?

Mr. CARTER. No; which indicates that at least at this time we did not care to give it consideration. I can see, of course, the justice of the gentleman's argument. The branch of the canal he refers to is a feeder for the other canal, and I believe at the proper time the engineers will give it the consideration it deserves. I have some projects that I would like to have in the bill that are not there, but if we go to opening up this bill for my projects and the other projects not favorably recommended, we will have a hodge-podge of a bill; and as much as I regret it, I ask the Committee to vote down this amendment and other amendments that my colleague may present that are not in accordance with the recommendations of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ARNOLD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6732, the river and harbor bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

PURCHASES OF POTATOES UNDER AUTHORITY OF FEDERAL SURPLUS RELIEF CORPORATION

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter written by me to Hon. Harry L. Hopkins, President of the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation:

APRIL 1, 1935.

Mr. HARRY L. HOPKINS,
President Federal Surplus Relief Corporation,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HOPKINS: On Friday last I asked the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation for a statement of the number of carloads of white potatoes purchased to date by various State relief administrations under authorization from the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation. I have before me your letter of March 30, giving me this information. I also have before me the report of the United States Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, Crop Reporting Board.

I wish to call your attention to the following statement based upon the facts given in your letter and the above report. Idaho produced in 1934, 19,240,000 bushels of potatoes, or 5 percent of the total 1934 crop, and furnished 559 carloads of potatoes. Maine produced 56,280,000 bushels, or 14.6 percent of the total crop, and furnished 2,300 cars. Maryland produced 3,267,000 bushels, or eight-tenths of 1 percent of the total crop, and furnished 106.6 cars. Michigan produced 34,304,000 bushels, or 8.8 percent of the total crop, and furnished 180 cars. New York produced 32,550,000 bushels, or 8.4 percent of the total crop, and furnished 300.8 cars. North Carolina produced 10,672,000 bushels, or 2.7 percent of the total crop, and furnished 211.8 cars. Virginia produced 13,433,000 bushels, or 3.4 percent of the total crop, and furnished 1,392.3 cars. Wisconsin produced 31,320,000 bushels, of 8.1 percent, and furnished 181.4 cars. Minnesota produced 23,- 380,000, or 6 percent of the total crop, and was allowed to furnish none of the potatoes according to your letter.

I wish to call your attention to the fact that while Maine produced approximately one and a half times as many potatoes as Michigan produced, she was allowed to furnish nearly 13 times as many potatoes as Michigan furnished. While Maryland produced less than one-tenth of the potatoes Michigan produced, she was given 106 cars to Michigan's 180 cars. While Michigan produced two and a half times as many potatoes as Virginia, Virginia was allowed to furnish more than seven and a half times as many as Michigan was permitted to furnish. In view of the fact that Michigan stood third in the amount of potatoes produced and Michigan farmers and produce men are holding this tremendous surplus on their hands, I feel that the above method of handling this surplus is not fair and just to the growers of my State.

I want to ask you to go over this matter personally with a view of giving Michigan, Wisconsin, and other Northern States an equitable share of this business proportioned according to the surplus crop in those States.

Very truly yours,

ALBERT J. ENGEL.

PARCELING OUT THE MINNEAPOLIS AND ST. LOUIS RAILROAD

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, the proposal to parcel out the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad among eight other railroad companies is, in my judgment, a suggestion fraught with great potential injury.

The plan would throw out of employment some 3,000 employees scattered over the 1,600 miles of this railroad, for it is a certainty that the other roads could not and would not absorb these 3,000 employees. At the best, only a small portion of them could get work on the other roads.

On November 27 last I wrote Hon. Jesse H. Jones, Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, protesting against this parceling-out scheme. Mr. Jones replied on December 11 that the purpose of the plan was to put the Minneapolis & St. Louis in strong hands, instead of having the railroad continue to operate independently. This answer was not a convincing one, in my judgment. I fail to see where the strong hands are. I also fail to see where security or stability could be assured by such a transfer.

The eight competing roads that would under the proposal take over the Minneapolis & St. Louis are: The Chicago & North Western, which has borrowed $46,000,000 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Puget Sound, which has borrowed from the R. F. C. $14,000,000 and has paid back the stupendous sum of $358 up to this time; the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, now in receivership; the Chicago & Great Western, another receivership road; the Wabash, also in receivership; the Illinois Central; the Burlington; and the Great Northern. Aside from the roads that are now in the hands of receivers, it may safely be said that the Chicago & North Western, as well as the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Puget Sound, are not far ahead of the sheriff.

The claim that the older employees of the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad would be taken care of is without substantiation, in my opinion, despite assertions that the railroads will protect displaced employees. I am satisfied that only a small portion of them would receive such protection.

Not only would many employees suffer through losing their jobs, but the plan would be injurious to many business men depending on the existing road for service.

Objections will come from many other sources as well. I am confident that the Congressmen and Senators from the four States affected will oppose the transfer. The bondholders will naturally do likewise. Of course the courts will also have something to say about the matter, likewise the Interstate Commerce Commission and the State railway commission. If, as is probable, hearings are held, there will undoubtedly be general opposition. If this takes enough time, the present receivers will be able to take the Minneapolis & St. Louis out of the "red", proving that it can be made to pay by continuing independent operations. In that event the 3,000 employees will retain their positions instead of being forced to join the increasing ranks of the unemployed. However, I feel that, since Chairman Jones seems to view with favor the consolidation, it ought to be discussed widely and publicly and its weak points exposed.

Government ownership of railroads as the eventual solution of the problem has been urged by Senator WHEELER and was suggested by Federal Coordinator Eastman sometime ago. A large number of the people believe this is the only way out of the dilemma. Until that comes, I certainly do not believe it would be wise or just to parcel out the Minneapolis & St. Louis among eight competing roads that are plainly in shaky condition, throwing nearly 3,000 workingmen out of their jobs and forcing them to augment the ranks of the jobless.

I may say that I have devoted considerable time and investigation to this proposal, so that my statements are generally the outcome of information I have had from reliable sources. I am advised that Gov. Clyde Herring, of Iowa, is deeply interested in the matter and is expected to sign a resolution that either has been or will be proposed in the Iowa Legislature protesting against the parceling out.

J. W. Devine, general manager of the Minneapolis & St. Louis, with offices in Minneapolis, writes me that off-line loading or strictly competitive traffic has increased 3,130 cars from January 1 to April 1 over the corresponding period for last year. During the same period, he says, basic or permanent economies have been put into effect which, on an annual basis, total approximately $150,000.

Mr. Devine's letter says:

Now, it is true the increase in competitive traffic and decrease in operating costs haven't as yet been reflected into substantial net returns. This is entirely due to drought conditions which had practically paralyzed the current grain and stock movements, which normally are depended upon to create a substantial share of our gross business. You are undoubtedly aware of the extent to which the movement of farm products has receded, and naturally this decline has a detrimental effect upon our general situation, but the increase in other traffic has been so pronounced that a relatively better showing than most of our larger neighbors and competitors has been the net result.

I just returned from a trip to the territory adjacent to our line in South Dakota. The prospects are said to be the best in 3 years. Moisture conditions are favorable and the people in that locality are looking forward to a good crop.

A committee representing the Federated Labor Legislative Council of Iowa, with headquarters in Des Moines, has written Chairman Jones in protest against the merger. A copy of the letter has been furnished me, and I quote some extracts:

The owners of the securities recognize that the present bond structure will have to be scaled down. When this is done this property will, beyond question, be able to earn its fixed charges, pay its taxes, and leave a substantial amount of earnings.

We appeal to you to use the power vested in your office to postpone or secure the postponement of the plan approved by the R. F. C. whereby the sum of $7,200,000 will be loaned to these eight railroads for the parceling of this railroad and abandonment of considerable trackage. This, with an attendant loss of investment and employment. We feel that the corporations who have proposed purchasing this property with lesser amounts, with the thought in mind to reorganize the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad, keeping it intact with a saving to investors, and the giving of employment to the full quota of 3,500 men, should receive your most earnest and serious consideration. The petition of the above-mentioned corporation will conserve much of the present bondholders' interest, while the plan referred to as that of the eight railroads will have the effect of destroying practically all of their equities.

This letter adds that the commercial and shipping interests join in the petition of Iowa organized labor and are represented on the joint committee opposing dismemberment. Patrons of the railroad are quoted as taking the same position.

In view of these and many other facts that I could cite, I certainly believe that the dismemberment plan should be abandoned.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. KEE, for 1 day, on account of important business.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS USING THE PANAMA CANAL

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 195

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 5292, "A bill to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes." That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 2881. An act authorizing the adjustment of contracts for the sale of timber on the national forests, and for other purposes.

WAR PROFITS

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the reading of the engrossed bill (H. R. 5529) to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war and thus provide for the national defense and promote peace. The Clerk will read the engrossed bill.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the bill as amended has been read and is in the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the engrossed bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is it the intention of the gentleman to have a vote on this bill tonight?

Mr. McSWAIN. It is our desire to have a vote.

Mr. SNELL. Many gentlemen have understood that there would not be a vote on the bill tonight, and several Members have left the Chamber.

Mr. McSWAIN. If a roll call should be demanded, I propose to move to adjourn and have the roll call in the morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to dispensing with the further reading of the engrossed bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment: Page 2, line 9, strike out all of the first sentence of section 3.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, on that I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. O'MALLEY and Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH) there were—ayes 60, noes 110.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote upon the ground that there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, April 9, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARING

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

(Tuesday, Apr. 9, 10 a. m.)

Committee will hold hearings on bill (H. R. 6795) pertaining to legalizing residence of certain aliens and deportation of certain alien criminals.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

296. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting draft of a proposed joint resolution authorizing the Panama Railroad Co. to sell or exchange lands held by that company on Manzanillo Island, Republic of Panama, which are no longer needed for the purposes of the United States; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

297. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting draft of a proposed bill legalizing the acceptance of a bequest of the late Maj. Gen. F. C. Ainsworth to provide a permanent library at Walter Reed General Hospital to be known as the "Fred C. Ainsworth Endowment Library"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

6802. By Mr. TRUAX: Petition of the Ohio Engineering Society, Columbus, Ohio, by their president, T. S. Brindle, and secretary, John Laylin, urging and recommending that Ohio engineers be appointed to fill staff and consulting positions on Ohio projects as there are many positions to be filled by engineers in the several Federal agencies in Ohio, and there are many capable unemployed engineers in Ohio; to the Committee on Labor.

6803. Also, petition of the Ohio Engineering Society, Columbus, Ohio, urging that provisions be made in future agreements between local public bodies and the Federal Government to advance Federal funds for the preliminary engineering expenses in order to permit prompt preparation of plans and specifications and letting of contracts, because in the past many public bodies desiring to carry on projects to be financed jointly by the local public body and the Federal Government have been unable to finance the cost of preparing plans and specifications prior to letting contracts; to the Committee on Labor.

6804. Also, petition of the Ohio Engineering Society, Columbus, Ohio, endorsing the Scioto-Sandusky conservancy project and recommending it for inclusion in the program of work relief now before the Congress, as it has been formed for the purpose of flood control, water conservation, and water supply, and has been proposed to submit this project to the Federal Government for inclusion in a comprehensive plan of flood control and the conservation of natural resources; to the Committee on Labor.

6805. Also, petition of the Ohio Engineering Society, Columbus, Ohio, favoring the enactment of the President's recommendations to the Congress as contained in House Joint Resolution 117 with such modifications as are agreeable to the House of Representatives and to the President, as the latter has outlined to the Congress a plan of substituting useful public works for direct relief or dole, and that such an allocation of such public works would afford a diversified employment of men in many industries in addition to those given employment directly upon the projects and would thus be an impetus to the recovery of business in general; to the Committee on Labor.

6806. Also, petition of the Ohio Engineering Society, Columbus, Ohio, urging that a specific sum of Federal funds for highway improvements be allocated to the various States for secondary roads not a part of the designated Federal highway system, or of the primary State systems, and that such secondary roads shall include United States post roads, rural-school bus routes, and unimproved rural roads leading to community centers, and that these specific sums be expended on a mileage basis in proportion to potential traffic requirements and that a specific sum of such Federal funds be allocated for the extension of Federal and State routes into and through municipalities; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

6807. Also, petition of the Ohio Engineering Society, Columbus, Ohio, urging that a substantial portion of the $4,880,000,000 appropriated for work relief by the Congress of the United States be expended for highways through the several State highway departments and the already established agencies; to the Committee on Labor.

6808. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Self Culture Club; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6809. Also, petition of the California Cosmetic Association, Inc.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATE

TUESDAY, APRIL 9, 1935

The Reverend Harry Lee Doll, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who art the giver of all good things, so rule our hearts and minds by the indwelling of Thy Holy Spirit that no deceit may mislead us, no temptation corrupt us. Assist us mercifully to look unto Thee for guidance, that from Thy brooding love there may flow into our lives and work the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and ghostly strength, the spirit of knowledge and true godliness; and fill us, O Lord, with the spirit of Thy holy fear. We ask it all in the name and for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, April 8, 1935, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Senate Concurrent Resolution A–E

Whereas the economic distress of North Dakota and South Dakota is in a large measure due to the long-continued drought; and

Whereas the receding ground-water tables and the disappearance of surface waters present a most serious problem to the people of our State; and

Whereas the Missouri River frequently carries an enormous amount of flood waters, dangerous and destructive to property and life to the lower Missouri and Mississippi Basins; and

Whereas the impounding of the flood waters would be of material benefit in restoring ground-water tables and furnishing surface waters to North Dakota and would materially aid in preventing the recurrent floods in the lower Mississippi Basin; and

Whereas competent engineers have made a study of the problem of constructing a Missouri River dam and diverting the waters for the benefit of North Dakota and South Dakota, showing that such a dam and diversion project are feasible; and

Whereas the construction of such a dam and the diversion of such waters properly come under Federal jurisdiction; and

Whereas the construction of the Missouri River dam and the diversion project in connection therewith would furnish employment for several thousand people now on Federal relief through no fault of their own: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house concurring therein), That we petition the United States Congress, now assembled, and the President of the United States, the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, to construct a dam on the Missouri River at Big Bend, between Mannhaven and Garrison, for the purpose of impounding the waters of the Missouri and diverting the same in accordance with the report and recommendations of Burns & McDonnell, consulting engineers; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the State of North Dakota be, and is hereby, instructed to forward an authenticated copy of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt; to the President of the United States Senate; to the Speaker of the House of Representatives at Washington, D. C.; to the United States Senators; and the two Representatives from North Dakota in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Senate Concurrent Resolution A–G

Whereas equal educational opportunity for all children, although essential to true democracy, is today unfairly denied to millions of American children; and

Whereas the welfare of the entire Nation depends on an alert and educated citizenry; and

Whereas many school districts have so little taxable wealth that despite heavy tax rates they will continue to be unable to maintain adequate schools, while in other parts of the Nation vast amounts of taxable wealth have been accumulated which are truly the result of the toil of people throughout the Nation; and

Whereas the North Dakota Federation of Teachers and the American Federation of Teachers, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, have adopted resolutions asking for national support of education: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the opinion of the Senate of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring) that the National Government should as a permanent policy share the financial cost of education of all school children; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senate of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring) most respectfully urge upon the Congress of the United States the early enactment of legislation providing that the National Government pay to each school district $25 a year for each child enrolled; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of North Dakota be, and is hereby, instructed to forward a duly authenticated copy of this resolution to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each representative of the State of North Dakota in the United States Senate and House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation:

Senate Joint Memorial 4

A memorial to the Secretary of the Interior relative to the Buffalo Rapids reclamation project and requesting the aid of the Federal Government in the construction of said project

To the Honorable Secretary of the Interior of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the members of the Twenty-fourth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, the senate and house concurring, respectfully represent:

Whereas as a result of a period of drought, the residents along the Yellowstone River extending from Miles City to Glendive have exhausted approximately all their credit; and

Whereas there is within said area an acreage of approximately 120,000 acres which can be reclaimed and made available for the settlement and the creation of prosperous homes for 2,000 families, thus relieving distress and rehabilitating those now in need of Federal relief; and

Whereas said Buffalo Rapids project has been under consideration since the year 1894 and has been surveyed and its feasibility and practicability established by several experienced engineers; and

Whereas said tract of land is at present, and will continue as unavailable for useful purposes, until and when the same shall be reclaimed by the construction and operation of said Buffalo Rapids project: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the judgment of the Legislative Assembly of Montana that the best interests of the residents of the Yellowstone Valley extending from Miles City to Glendive and of the people of the State of Montana that said project be constructed and the lands included within said tract be made available for settlement and the restoration of prosperous homes thereon; and be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to direct the Reclamation Department to make an investigation as to said project, to approve of the construction thereof, and to assist in securing Federal aid for said construction of said project; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives of Montana and the Congress of the United States be requested to use all honorable means to aid in obtaining the purposes and objects hereof; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the state send to the Secretary of the Interior and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Montana and the Congress of the United States a copy of this resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a petition of several citizens of the State of Kentucky, praying for the enactment of old-age pension legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of the California Cosmetic Association, Inc., praying for the continuance of the National Industrial Recovery Act, with particular reference to the code of fair competition governing the perfume, cosmetic, and toilet preparations industry, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by Branch 165, I. W. O., and the Office Workers' Union, both of Greater New York City, N. Y., protesting against the enactment of proposed alien and sedition legislation, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the secretary of the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico, transmitting, on petition by Hon. José H. Cora, a member of the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico, and by order of the speaker of that house, a copy of petition no. 240, being a protest against certain actions of the administrator of the Puerto Rican Emergency Relief Administration, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate two letters from the secretary of the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico, transmitting, on petition by Hon. Adolfo Dones Padró, a member of the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico, and by order of the speaker of that house, copies of two petitions numbered 226 and 227, being protests against certain actions of the administrator of the Puerto Rican Emergency Relief Administration, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

DEEP WATERWAY FROM ST. LAWRENCE RIVER TO THE HUDSON

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, the General Assembly of the State of Vermont has adopted a memorial requesting support of Senate Resolution 84, now pending before the Committee on Commerce. This resolution seeks to direct the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors to review the report contained in House Document No. 149, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, on a deep waterway involving a canal connection between Lake St. Francis on the St. Lawrence River and the Hudson River by way of Lake Champlain, with a view of determining the advisability and cost of such connection.

The Senate resolution further directs the Board of Engineers to make an examination and report with respect to any feasible canal route from the harbor of Montreal south to Lake Champlain.

I desire to present the memorial, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorial will be received and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

(See memorial printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 8th instant, p. 5206, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2213) to define the exterior boundaries of the Navajo Indian Reservation in New Mexico, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 436) thereon.

Mr. O'MAHONEY (for Mr. WAGNER), from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 1776) granting a leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the year 1935, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 437) thereon.

Mr. BULKLEY, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6021) to provide additional home-mortgage relief, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and the National Housing Act, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 438) thereon.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 2538) granting an increase of pension to Jerry S. Fish; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ADAMS:

A bill (S. 2539) to amend sections 1, 8, and 15 of, and to add section 17 to, the act of June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), commonly known as the "Taylor Grazing Act"; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. WHITE (by request):

A bill (S. 2540) for the relief of the F. P. Weaver Coal Co., Ltd.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RUSSELL:

A bill (S. 2541) to prohibit statements and publications advocating overthrow of the Government by violence, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 2542) to authorize the prompt deportation of criminals and certain other aliens, to guard against the separation from their families of certain law-abiding aliens, to further restrict immigration into the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ISSUANCE OF PASSPORTS AND FOREIGN LOANS IN TIME OF WAR

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and I have joined in introducing two joint resolutions having to do with the neutrality of the United States in the event of an emergency. I send to the desk the two joint resolutions and ask that they may be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolutions will be received, read, as requested, and both referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The first joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) to regulate the issuance of passports to American citizens in time of war was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas the success of belligerent nations has been shown to depend upon their successful transportation of munitions and other contraband; and

Whereas citizens of neutral nations traveling on ships into the war zones have in the past not been notified and warned that the ships on which they have traveled have carried munitions and other contraband; and

Whereas the sinking of ships carrying munitions and other contraband increased greatly in the last war by reason of the unrestricted submarine warfare and may be expected to increase still further by reason of the unrestricted use of bombing planes in any future war; and

Whereas the sinking of the Lusitania and other ships carrying munitions involved the loss of American lives: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That upon the outbreak of war in any part of the world in which the life and safety of the citizens of the United States may be placed in jeopardy by travel on the high seas the President shall withhold the issuance of passports to citizens of the United States traveling in war zones or traveling on any vessel of any belligerent power except under such regulations as the President may prescribe.

The second joint resolution (S. J. Res. 100) to prohibit the extension of credits and the issuance of foreign loans under certain conditions was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That upon the declaration of war by any foreign government it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, partnership, or corporation to make any public or private loan of money or to extend any credit for the purchase of any articles declared to be contraband of war by any belligerent government, either directly or indirectly, to a government or the national of any government engaged in armed conflict or to any firm, partnership, association, or corporation acting for on behalf of such belligerent government or national thereof: Provided, however, That this act shall not apply to renewals or adjustments of existing indebtedness, and shall not apply in case the United States is engaged in such conflict as an ally of such belligerent government.

SEC. 2. Whenever the President finds that a state of armed conflict exists in any part of the world other than the outbreak of declared war which may involve the United States in international complications the President shall, by proclamation, declare section 1 of this resolution to be in effect.

SEC. 3. Any person violating or aiding or abetting in the violation of the provisions of this resolution shall upon conviction thereof be imprisoned for not more than 10 years and shall be fined not more than $100,000.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. ASHURST, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6323) to provide for the custody of Federal proclamations, orders, regulations, notices, and other documents, and for the prompt and uniform printing and distribution thereof, and it was referred to the Committee on the Library.

On motion of Mr. STEIWER, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 491) for the relief of Fred Herrick, and it was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

DETAILED REPORTS ON OCEAN MAIL CONTRACTS

Mr. BLACK. I ask unanimous consent to submit a simple Senate resolution and ask that it lie on the table until tomorrow. It is very short, and I should like to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 116), as follows:

Whereas the report of Hon. James A. Farley to the President of the United States dated January 11, 1935, as published in Senate Document No. 118, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, refers to detailed reports made on 43 ocean mail contracts by Mr. Farley, which detailed reports are necessary in order for the Senate to consider and pass upon legislation regarding an American merchant marine: Now, be it

Resolved, That Postmaster General Farley be requested to send a copy of such detailed reports to the United States Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Alabama that I do not anticipate a session of the Senate will be held tomorrow. It is my expectation to move an adjournment or a recess until the day after tomorrow when we shall have completed the consideration of the calendar.

Mr. BLACK. Then I shall ask that it lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

PUERTO RICAN SUGAR PRODUCERS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 105) submitted by Mr. VANDENBERG on March 15, 1935, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is requested to inform the Senate regarding contemplated plans, if any, for new loans, grants, or subsidies to sugar producers in Puerto Rico or for supporting sugar production in Puerto Rico with public money drawn from the sugar processing tax or any other source.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief statement regarding this resolution because of what I conceive to be its importance if Congress continues in any aspect to be the policy-forming branch of the Government.

On March 6 the Senate adopted Senate Resolution 95, which I introduced, and which requested the Secretary of the Interior for much the same information presently called for by Senate Resolution 105, now pending. Senate Resolution 95 was addressed to the Secretary of the Interior because the Interior Department was presumed to have jurisdiction over this phase of Puerto Rican activities. As originally written, it referred presumably to the so-called "Chardon plan of Puerto Rican rehabilitation" or any kindred prospectus. I am sure some of the Department understood that the resolution referred to the Chardon plan, or, at any rate, some officials so understood, because Mr. Chardon immediately put himself in courteous touch with me and offered to submit his data in detail. However, before I had an opportunity to meet Mr. Chardon the Secretary of the Interior replied to the Senate resolution under date of March 14 with a very conclusive dismissal of the whole subject matter. His letter to the Senate will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at page 3689. In that reply the Secretary of the Interior stated:

There are no proposals pending in this Department for supporting sugar production in Puerto Rico with public money drawn from any source whatever.

I am not clear, by any means, that this is a disingenuous statement, because I have very great respect for the Secretary of the Interior. Perhaps the resolution itself was ineptly drawn, and perhaps it did not identify the precise information sought. But the fact remains that the Chardon plan unquestionably does contemplate the use of public money in a highly novel connection with the sugar problem in Puerto Rico, because, as the pending plan is understood in Puerto Rico, as disclosed in the Puerto Rican newspaper El Imparcial on the 11th of March, a general summary of the plan is paraphrased as follows, quoting from the newspaper:

I wish to call your attention to that part of the so-called "Chardon plan" which refers to the purchase of sugar factories to be operated by the Government, a thing that I have always considered dangerous.

I ask that the entire item may be printed in the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks simply for whatever incidental light it may throw upon this latest novelty in administration schemes and adventures.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From El Imparcial, Mar. 11, 1935]

WASHINGTON TO MAKE PHILIPPINE MISTAKE IN PUERTO RICO, SAYS FAJARDO SUGAR EXECUTIVE

(Editor's note.—We reprint herewith an open letter from Mr. Gorge Bird Arias, of the Fajardo Sugar Corporation to Gov. Blanton Winship without comment. Its contents would appear to be of considerable public interest, having to do, as it does, with a basic concept of the rehabilitation plan as visualized by Chancellor Carlos Chardon and associates.)

HON. BLANTON WINSHIP,
Governor of Puerto Rico,
La Fortaleza, San Juan, P. R.

SIR: I wish to call your attention to that part of the so-called "Chardon plan" which refers to the purchase of sugar factories to be operated by the Government, a thing that I have always considered dangerous, and which in this case, besides being dangerous, is also unethical due to the competition that the plan threatens to establish against the sugar companies. This, besides being unethical, is also incomprehensible, for a government should not try to destroy its best source of income.

There is another powerful reason to oppose it, and it is the precedent of the disastrous results following government organization and management of private enterprises in the Philippines. You, sir, are much more familiar than I with the facts surrounding the establishment of the Philippine Development Co., the Philippine Coal Co., the Philippine Cement Co., and the Philippine National Bank, under which the so-called "Government centrales" were created and operated. I am informed that the loss incurred by these enterprises exceeded $40,000,000. All of these organizations were supposed to be absolutely divorced from politics, and when Governor General Wood, with his wide experience in the administration of affairs of tropical countries, assumed sole control and management of the centrales through the Sugar Centrals Agencies, it was with the sole purpose of disposing of them at the earliest possible opportunity to private parties, as he realized that economic operation of the same was possible only in this way. The taxpayers had to bear the undeserved punishment of these fantastic experiments and are even now paying for them. This same fear haunts us.

I wish to make it clear that I am not opposed to the rehabilitation of the island, provided it is done in a fundamental and intelligent manner.

I firmly believe that the coffee industry should be rehabilitated, due to the importance this would mean to the island, and because the coffee growers are more than worthy of help, under present circumstances as they have been consuming American products highly protected by the tariff since the American occupation, without ever receiving any protection for their product, because coffee was and is on the free list.

I also wish to make it clear that above everything else and as a Puerto Rican I wish the best for Puerto Rico and for the welfare and happiness of the majority of its inhabitants, and if anyone should convince me that there is a product offering better advantages than the sugarcane, I would immediately declare myself in favor of the sugar restriction, even though I personally should suffer damages, since the general welfare should be always above private interest.

I have opposed the sugar restriction in the way in which it has been enforced, first of all, for ethical reasons, because as an American citizen I could not but protest at the unfair and abusive discrimination against Puerto Rico not only by Congress but, even worse, by the Secretary of Agriculture also, and this in spite of the offers made to us, and suggestions made to said Secretary of Agriculture by the President, of which you are well aware. And secondly, for economic reasons because the benefits, if any, to be derived from the so-called "Chardon plan", would only reach a few, while the damages due to restriction would practically reach everybody.

It is the object of this letter, and my most sincere wish, to help you as Governor of the island, not only in the success of any rehabilitation plan that may be put in force, but also to prevent that that dangerous and doubtful measures be adopted which might later result detrimental rather than beneficial.

Praying to God that He may enlighten you and those that will be called to put in force the rehabilitation measures, proposed by the Washington administration, I remain,

Respectfully and sincerely yours,

JORGE BIRD ARIAS.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Now, I call attention to the fact that the able Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] presented to the Senate on April 3 a letter, printed in the RECORD at page 4901, in which Mr. Chardon, addressing the Senator from Maryland, indicated that there is contemplated an expenditure of $103,000,000 upon this plan in Puerto Rico. Further, Mr. Chardon said in his letter which the Senator from Maryland presented in the Senate that—

The President has made formal public commitment to this program and the plan itself has been approved by the Departments of Agriculture and the Interior.

Please note it is said to be approved by the Interior Department.

If Mr. Chardon's letter to the Senator from Maryland is correct and the plan has been approved by the Interior Department, involving the expenditure of $103,000,000 in Puerto Rico and contemplating Government operations in sugar, it is somewhat mystifying to me why the Secretary of the Interior's reply to the Senate resolution of March 14 should have dismissed so abruptly the entire inquiry with the obvious implication that nothing of this general character is pending. The Senate resolution must have been dense or the Secretary must have been inadequately advised. If a plan is pending to spend $103,000,000 in Puerto Rico for any such purpose, and if by any stretch of the imagination the plan includes any such socialistic enterprise as is described in the local newspaper from which I read and which is now a part of the RECORD, certainly it is highly important for the Senate and the Congress and the people that we should know precisely what is contemplated. I do not prejudge the plan. It may be good. But I feel that Congress should have official information on the subject.

Therefore, reverting again to the letter of the Secretary of the Interior in which he suggests that we might well inquire of the Secretary of Agriculture respecting the entire matter, I have submitted Senate Resolution 105. I wish to perfect it by making it more specific so there can be no possibility of renewed misunderstanding hereafter. I desire to say again that I am sure it is only a misunderstanding so far as the able Secretary of the Interior heretofore has been concerned. I suggest that the resolution be modified to read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is requested to inform the Senate regarding contemplated plans, if any, for new loans, grants, or subsidies to sugar producers of Puerto Rico or for supporting or reorganizing sugar production by the so-called "Chardon plan", or otherwise, in Puerto Rico with public money drawn from the sugar-processing tax or any other source.

I do not imagine the passage of the resolution will be resisted. I assume we are not yet foreclosed from information, even though we are quite successfully separated from power these days.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Michigan whether the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] has been appraised of the pendency of the resolution?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I believe not. I know of no particular reason why the Senator from Colorado should have any hostile or other interest in it, except as he may share my anxiety to know what is going on if Uncle Sam is going to become a sugar producer and enter the sugar business.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am not asserting that he has a hostile interest in it or that he is hostile to it, but he was intimately concerned with the passage of the so-called "sugar bill", as the Senator will recall.

What amount, by way of loans, grants, or subsidies, has been made to sugar producers in Puerto Rico?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am not advised as to that aspect. It seems to me that the present contemplation is unrelated to the Jones-Costigan Act, except as purely incidental. The problem here, as I understand, is the probable use of P. W. A. funds or of funds out of the new $5,000,000,000 appropriation in connection with the so-called "Chardon plan."

Mr. ROBINSON. My last question was prompted by the statement that the resolution relates to new loans, grants, or subsidies.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There seems to be no certain information as to the source of the contemplated $103,000,000 which is to be expended. Some seem to think it is to come from a diverted processing tax. Others seem to think it is to come from the new P. W. A. fund.

Mr. ROBINSON. The point of my question escapes the Senator from Michigan. It was in relation to loans or grants which are impliedly alleged to have been already made to sugar producers in Puerto Rico.

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; I do not intend any such implication.

Mr. ROBINSON. The language of the resolution, as the Senator must see, clearly implies that loans have been heretofore made because it inquires as to "new" loans to be made. If that does not imply that old loans have been made, I am unable to understand the English language.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the Senator's point is well taken. I suggest that the word "new" be eliminated. I am only interested in information respecting the contemplated plan. I ask that the word "new" be eliminated from the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be further modified as requested by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not object to the Senator or the Senate being supplied with the information for which the resolution calls. I think it may be helpful in our studies.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In connection with the discussion, I ask that certain cablegrams be printed in the RECORD in conjunction with my remarks.

There being no objection, the cablegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAN JUAN, P. R., March 18, 1935.

Senator VANDENBERG,
Washington:

As acting president Cane Farmers Association of Puerto Rico wish to inform you that Puerto Rico rehabilitation program encompasses permanent sugar reduction as basis rehabilitation.

Farmers fully support this program because reduction will be made of public agency purchasing cane lands wiping out cane from said lands and distributing them to workers for food production under condition not raise cane for 23 years. Therefore no grower will reduce, but island will permanently lower sugar production. We earnestly hope you will support rehabilitation program as justice to Puerto Rican farmers and workers and as a means of permanently establishing Puerto Rico's contribution to sugar stabilization in American market for the benefit of all growers of cane and beets.

OSCAR NEVAREZ,
Acting President Cane Farmers Association of Puerto Rico.

SAN JUAN, P. R., March 9, 1935.

Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

The House of Representatives of Puerto Rico requests that any rehabilitation plan established by the national administration in Puerto Rico be implanted through the legislature and the executive departments of the insular government determined by the Organic Act in order to avoid duplication of government or the creation of a supergovernment in the island.

MIGUEL A. GARCIA MENDEZ,
Speaker House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

PEACE INSURANCE—ADDRESS BY SENATOR REYNOLDS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, on Army Day, April 6, at Pittsburgh, I delivered an address in the Soldiers' and Sailors' Memorial Hall under the auspices of the patriotic organizations of that city, at which time I was provided with a coast-to-coast hook-up over the National Broadcasting Co.'s network. I ask unanimous consent that the address be printed in the RECORD. It is an address dealing with preparedness, and is entitled "Peace Insurance."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Pittsburgh's contribution to the insurance of peace through its resources of the brain and brawn of its citizens and its material wealth is written in a fascinating chapter in American history.

In the struggle for independence your garrison within the stockade of your little fort here at the headwaters of the Ohio was the bulwark of defense for the western frontier. Here in the infant days of the Republic "Mad Anthony" Wayne drilled his famous legion for the recovery of the Northwest. In the conflict of 1812 Commodore Perry came here for his cordage and munitions to equip his squadron that won everlasting renown in its victory on Lake Erie, and supplies from Pittsburgh strengthened and heartened Jackson's army for that glorious day at New Orleans.

The Allegheny Arsenal was one of the first in the country and for a century supplied the sinews of national defense. It was one of the chief sources of supply in the Mexican War. Ever since that day Commodore Perry came here for rope and cannon balls the American Navy has been dependent on the mills and shops of Pittsburgh. You armored the White Squadron, whose ships carried the Stars and Stripes into Manila Bay under Dewey and defended America's honor at Santiago, and in the modern Navy you supply its motive power as well as armament.

In the World War Pittsburgh won the title of the "Arsenal of America." Without the munitions you furnished it is doubtful if the Allies could have won that struggle. With the advent of aircraft and chemical warfare, Pittsburgh today has an even more prominent place in providing the implements of national defense.

Adequate defense has been a cherished tradition in Pittsburgh since the days of the pioneers. Your "Pittsburgh Blues" date back to the days of "Tippecanoe" Harrison. Your Duquesne Grays, Hampton's Battery, and the Washington Infantry are units that have furnished trained men for many branches of the service. Every American is familiar with the history of the Old Tenth Pennsylvania for its service in the Spanish War, the Philippine Insurrection, and the World War, where it served with the old Fourteenth, the old Sixteenth, and the old Eighteenth with the famous Twenty-eighth Division under a different numerical classification. Your Eightieth Division, composed of the Blue Ridge boys from Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Virginia gained renown in the Argonne, and in every branch of the service—Army, Navy, and Marines—your defenders represented the best blood of this stanch old Commonwealth, so ably represented by my colleagues, Senators DAVIS and GUFFEY, for whom I have affection and respect. If we remain true to the heritage these men have bequeathed us we need have no fear for the future. With stout hearts and just cause in maintaining pure Americanism and adequate defense our peace is assured.

This is Army Day, and Army Day could well be called "peace day", for on this day we take an inventory of our forces and review the personnel and equipment which insures our peace. Army Day is not a day of jingoism and militarism. It is a day of calm consideration amid the Nation-wide celebration, and a day for the review of our assets of land defenses.

Army Day has been best described by the President of the United States, who is by virtue of his office Commander in Chief of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, when he said:

"The general observance of Army Day on April 6 should bring back to our minds the efforts and sacrifices of our soldiers which have been so decisive in the creation, preservation, and development of this great Nation; it should be an occasion for the Army to rededicate itself to its glorious heritage of service to our country, both in times of peace and in times of war."

Just 10 years after our entrance into the World War the first Army Day was celebrated. The annual occasion was instituted by the Military Order of the World War "to foster the ideals of the American Army and to bring to the people of the country a clearer, more intelligent, and more sympathetic understanding of our land forces, both in times of peace and in time of national emergency."

Eighteen years ago today the American Congress voted for American participation in the World War. That day—Good Friday—the House of Representatives adopted a resolution which had already been passed by the Senate. By that act we became a participating power.

Only three Members of Congress remain in the national legislative body who voted against our entrance into the war. They are Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska, and Representatives LUNDEEN and KNUTSON, of Minnesota.

The late Senator La Follette, of Wisconsin, denounced the war in stirring words in the Senate debates. Congressman Claude Kitchin, their majority leader, a North Carolinian, voted against the war. Statutes to the memory of these two men are in the United States Capitol, and I understand that today delegations from Wisconsin and North Carolina paid homage to the courage of these men, who, true to their convictions, voted for peace.

In those fateful days preceding our entrance—in fact, preceding the very beginning of this international conflict—the Old World had gone mad. Germany, leading member of the Central Powers, had constructed a military machine which menaced the peace of Europe. Conflicts both in Europe and in the colonial markets increased the tension of the Old World before the fateful day when an assassination in the Balkans lighted the fuze.

Today the world arms as never before. This week Germany, after sensationally scrapping the Treaty of Versailles, called 580,000 young men to the colors. Today Germany, under her Hitler, has another mighty military machine. But around her is welded an iron ring by victor powers. France, with her underground fortifications, looks with alarm at the growing peril from Berlin. Yet she sits back flanked by her almost impregnable fortresses and with an active and reserve force of more than 6,000,000 men.

Great Britain, feeling the pinch of economic depression, looks to the future with fear over possible disintegration of her proud empire. She has increased her military appropriations and seeks to negotiate compacts and agreements with continental powers in order to safeguard the peace of Europe.

Italy is aroused by the thunderous tones of her premier. Mussolini looks across the historic Mediterranean and with saber-rattling gestures threatens possible invasion of Abyssinia. Europe fears any encounter lest the slightest military skirmish prove the bomb that will blast the powder box of the Continent.

Russia carries out her new economic plan under Stalin. All the while she looks to the west for alliances with England and to the east for grounds which will preserve peace in the troubled Orient. But red Russia, hailed as the world's greatest exponent of disarmament, has a reserve force of more than 15,000,000 men, while her active forces exceed three-quarters of a million.

Japan sends her military budget to the financial stratosphere as she makes increasingly great economic inroads on the trade of occidental nations.

The world waits with bated breath as the diplomats of European nations attempt to devise new ways of heading off another world war.

In 1914 the fuze which inflamed Europe into a bloody struggle was lighted. Today smoke emerges heavily from a dozen places and all lovers of peace fear that any day some ruthless act, some inflammatory incident may lead to another and more disastrous war.

During the past 3 weeks the nerves of the world have been frayed to a razor edge lest bold headlines emblazon the daily papers with fearful news of another struggle. What the outcome of these numerous conferences will be no one knows. We all hope, for the welfare of the world, that the result will be peace—real peace and not merely an armed truce. Yet no one knows. We can only hope and pray.

Such is the world in which we live. And this is the world we see with its countless perils as we engage today in the annual Army Day ceremonies. It is fitting therefore that we reexamine our national defenses and take stock of our protective agencies at a time when no man knows what threatened action may gear these agencies into use, in coping with a new national emergency.

Today we view national defense in the light of citizens who love their country, and who want to see its institutions endure and protected. Just as self-preservation is the first law of life to the individual so is defense of one's country the first attribute of true patriotism.

If we want peace, my friends, we must pay for it. To secure and to insure peace we must have an adequate national defense. I look upon national defense in every arm of the service of the United States as peace insurance. I consider money expended to maintain our defenses and to equip and to train our personnel on land, on sea, and in the air as real peace insurance.

Had we heeded the lessons of the nineteenth century and provided for an adequate defense, we might never have been drawn into the World War. In 1917 we did not have armed strength large enough to enforce our demands for neutrality. No nation could be expected to respect fully the objections of a weak power.

So without that peace insurance, without that preparedness or defense, we were drawn into an Old World quarrel which eventually involved the greater number of powers of the civilized world. This war cost us tens of thousands in dead and hundreds of thousands in maimed and disabled. Cold figures can never assess the additional toll in broken hopes and heartaches of those back home. The horrible cost of this conflict is brought dramatically to our attention every day by new reports that veterans of this war are being cut down cruelly by the sickle of death wielded by disease, wounds, and disabilities incurred as the result of war-time service, and yet there are some who say that our soldiers and heroes of the World War are not deserving of all that their Government has given to them. I disagree, and in the strongest terms, and in so doing I unhesitatingly assert that the defenders of our country, the heroes of our land, the soldiers of our wars, are entitled to every single consideration at the hands of our Government. Much has been said about paying the adjusted-compensation certificates—in other words, the bonus—and here and now I want to declare that the bonus should be paid in full now, and in American currency, and not by way of bonds which would provide opportunities for the loan sharks and the shylocks to deprive and rob our veterans of the World War of that which they are justly entitled to. I have voted for the payment of the bonus consistently every time the question has arisen in the Senate, and I shall continue to do so, and I hope that this Congress will liquidate at least in part its indebtedness to our veterans by making now full payment of the bonus in American currency.

No one wants another war—least of all the armed forces who are manning our divisions which are guarding your peace and mine. But the only way to keep out of war is to have an Army and a Navy which can enforce our claims of neutrality and earn the respect of the entire world.

We want no quarrels with the nations of the Old World. In January the United States Senate voted to reject ratification of certain protocols which would have meant our entrance into the World Court. I voted against this World Court. I regard the safety of America as of paramount importance. American security rises above considerations of partisanship, and I sincerely felt that American safety and security would be imperiled by allying ourselves with the powers of Europe.

For precisely the same reason I do not believe we should become a member of the League of Nations, although there is a definite and forceful movement in America to secure our entrance. America has plenty to do to take care of its own affairs. We do not feel that we are the unwelcome guardians of Europe, nor do we feel that we should risk the safety and peace of our country by joining a combination in Europe—a combination which has been helpless to prevent the invader from trampling under foot sacred agreements and pacts which were to end all war. America wants no part of Europe's quarrels, nor does she care to become the helpless pawn of European diplomats.

We all want peace and we all know that the quickest way to jeopardize peace is to become involved in the controversies of the Old World by joining a court or a league in which the cards are stacked against us before we enter.

I have heard it said many times that the way to attain peace is to disarm completely. Such a statement would only be true if we had reached an earthly paradise. Such a statement would be true if we had emerged into Utopia, wherein all greeds and selfish senses were banished and no one coveted the property of his neighbor. But Utopia is not here. We have not reached the millenium.

The unrest of the world points to just the contrary. Pacts and treaties have failed to guarantee peace. Treaty obligations have been repudiated and the paper on which they are written literally torn to shreds and scattered to the four winds. Peace? Peace? There is no peace!

These lessons of the immediate past should indicate that we want to conduct our own affairs and to live in peace and harmony with the nations of the world, with friendship and good will toward all.

But to achieve even this modest goal, without interference by selfish and covetous powers, we must have an adequate national defense. The Army to which we pay homage today is an essential part of that great system of peace insurance.

In the last 15 months incidents throughout the world have terrorized all who love peace and want to remain in tranquillity with all nations. Dictatorships have risen and fallen. Despotism has tightened its grip on the peoples of the Old World. Freedom and liberty have all but been exterminated abroad, leaving the United States as one of the few remaining strongholds of these attributes.

Dictators rule with an iron hand hundreds of millions in Europe and Asia. Facism, nazi-ism, and communism subdue a growing number of people. But we want no "isms" in the United States except Americanism, and we know that our Army will be the first to help maintain true Americanism on these shores.

Changes in government, revolution, and reigns of terror have beset the people of Cuba near our own borders. Two countries of South America have been engaged in strife over the Grand Chaco—and no international appeals or no league has been able to end that war.

Spain has faced numerous states of alarm and rebellion, while the streets of Paris have run with blood in riots that threatened the Republic. Dictators of Rumania and Austria have been felled by the assassin's bullet. Bombardments have rent the air in colorful old Vienna in civil strife. King Alexander, of Yugoslavia, and Foreign Minister Barthou, of France, were slain by revolutionists 6 months ago. In both Germany and Russia there have been revolting and bloody purges. In Asia, Japan has stretched her grasping fingers further into the mainland seeking new worlds to conquer.

With all this trouble, with all this upheaval about us, America remains a stronghold of liberty wherein freedom of thought, of expression, of speech or worship, and of occupation are inviolate. Too often we fail to appreciate the blessings of liberty and freedom until they are imperiled or are completely lost.

At this hour those who are opposed to our form of government are actually holding public meetings at various places throughout the United States. Many are preaching communism, many are advocating the overthrow of our Government, and these people—these enemies—have remained thus far unmolested, and I am told that there are Communists in your own midst who have dared to preach their false doctrine and who are now daring to interfere with the enterprises of this community. There is no immediate fear of communism in this country, but unless we now nip in the bud this poisonous flower that would bloom in our midst we shall experience a greater spread of this red menace, and it is to the credit and glory and honor of William Randolph Hearst that he has undertaken to and is warning the American people of the scourge that threatens America.

The marvelous good that this publisher is doing from day to day through the columns of the Sun-Telegraph and others of his publications throughout the entire country cannot be overestimated; and we of America owe to him a tribute in the form of national thanks for the interest he is showing not only in the present emergency, wherein we are threatened by communism, but we are likewise deeply indebted for the noble, farsighted, and courageous stand which he took in opposing America's entrance into the World Court.

It is to the credit of the Army that its eternal vigilance has done much in enabling us to continue to enjoy these blessings of freedom for which our forefathers struggled.

In this world gone mad with greed, fear, bigotry, intolerance, and barbarism, let us look at our Army within the confines of our own country—our country which is free from the insidious influences of the Old World and the unquenchable thirst for conquest which threatens to plunge Europe into another war.

The officers and enlisted men of the Army should celebrate this Army Day with new optimism and new confidence and a sense of distinct recognition. For the Congress of the United States has just enacted legislation increasing the personnel of the Army to 165,000. That figure represents an increase over our present Army of 118,750 enlisted men and 12,000 officers.

As always occurs upon the passage of such legislation, there has been some criticism made against the committees of Congress and the Members who voted for the Army increase. Let me say here and now that Congress did not have in mind any thought of militarizing the United States. Careful study was given the bill by the committees, which considered all the evidence before them, much of which was confidential and not made public. The bill received full consideration by the House and the Senate and represents the deliberate judgment of Congress made after exhaustive study and investigation.

The fact is that the new increase to be made which will bring the Army up to 165,000 will be much less than the 280,000 strength which is authorized by the National Defense Act. Such comparison should help answer the charge of "militarism." Our total Army within the United States is smaller than was allowed Germany after the Treaty of Versailles.

To focus attention on the smallness of our Army in numbers I should like to indicate here some comparative strength of foreign powers. I have already mentioned Russia, France, and Great Britain. Another strong power in Europe is Italy which has nearly six and one-half million men in active and trained reserve forces.

Czechoslovakia, with a population of less than 15,000,000, has a larger regular army than the United States and boasts a reserve force of more than 1,500,000.

Japan's regular army is more than twice as large as ours, while her trained reserves number more than 2,000,000.

Poland, whose population is 33,000,000, has a regular army which triples our own. Her active, plus her reserves, numbering more than 1,700,000, makes her a formidable foe.

Rumania's regular army almost reaches the 300,000 mark, while her reserves exceed 1,600,000, and yet she has a population of only 18,000,000.

Spain's active and reserve list tops the 2,000,000 figure, while Yugoslavia has more than 140,000 regulars and 1,500,000 reserves.

As a matter of comparison the United States stands about seventeenth in preparedness among the nations of the world. We are down the list among the second- and third-rate military powers.

I sincerely hope that these few comparisons will allay some of the unfounded charges by uncompromising critics who say that we are going "militaristic."

Our Army, while relatively small, is a loyal and partiotic one. Our Army is absolutely divorced from politics and from political control. These men to whom we pay tribute today are never subject to the whims of a political opportunist. The allegiance of the Army is to the people of America and not to any political slogan. Our soldiers follow Old Glory and not some political standard.

Many of the officers of the Army are trained at the United States Military Academy at West Point. The motto of that institution is, "Duty, honor, country", and its very spirit inspires every member of our forces, both enlisted man and officer. This simple, patriotic creed of Army men represents a greater heritage than all the fabulous wealth of the maharajahs, more spirit than can be purchased through military mercenaries, and more determination than can be developed by despotic conscription.

I should like to take this occasion to refer briefly to some of the work of certain specialized branches of the Army. For example, we have hundreds of doctors and surgeons in the Army who have foregone brilliant careers in practice, in hospitals, and clinics in order to contribute their part toward the health and well-being of the Army. They have toiled not only in the unremitting necessity of maintaining health of the men, but they have also made diligent searches into the realms of the unknown in a quest for new remedies, new methods, and new cures. Controls for malaria, yellow fever, and typhoid were perfected largely as the result of experiments and sacrifices made by Army doctors. The searches and findings of the Medical Corps are contributions not only for the Army but for the entire world. Humanity is their debtor for the brilliance of their achievements in the laboratory and hospitals as well as on the battlefield.

In a like manner have contributions been made by the Army Engineers—men who for the most part might have pursued the call of their profession in civilian life and acquired much more in material wealth than their Army service will ever net them.

The Army Engineers have been in charge of ports and harbors for more than 100 years. They are constantly at work on inland-waterway development and they have made navigation on the Great Lakes second to none in the world. They supervised the construction of the Panama Canal, which is operated by the War Department. They have built numerous levees, dams, and flood-control works. These men throughout the history of the Republic have devoted their services unsparingly to the call of duty and to the challenge of enterprise and scientific experimentation, which has brought new technical developments of aid to all people.

Today a branch of the Service which is growing rapidly in importance is the Army Air Corps. That branch will be the "eyes" of the Army in any future war as well as an effective weapon of defense and attack. In a west coast airplane factory are being developed a fleet of new and powerful armored cruisers of the air. Sheathed in tempered steel these new war birds will mean a tremendous threat to a potential enemy should combat come, and will be an additional safeguard to our present peace.

New developments in design and safety are transmitted to commercial aviation when the plans are not in conflict with military strategy. Young men are trained in the Army and in reserve units to become competent pilots and thus the progress of the science of aeronautics is materially advanced.

At this point may I add a word of praise to the splendid achievements which commercial aviation has attained. Backed by American interests, it is the leading factor today in developing friendly relations with our sister republics.

The accomplishments of commercial aviation are manyfold. Through their own research and engineering they are constantly making improvements in aeronautics. These improvements are of tremendous value to the Government in time of need.

Airports and airlines are being developed throughout the United States—improvements which are of both commercial and military value. Moreover, great airlines are linking our country to other nations, for example, the Pan American Airways has done yeoman service in connecting the United States with Mexico and the Central American countries.

South America, formerly measured in terms of weeks of travel, has been brought so close that we reach the most distant points in a few days. And now Pan American is spanning the Pacific, blazing a trail to the Orient by the way of the Hawaiian Islands and the Philippines.

I believe we should lend direct aid through subsidy to commercial aviation which is the second line of defense to the air forces of our country.

Similar tributes might be paid to other branches of the Army, but I cite the Medical Corps, Engineers, and Air Corps as examples of unselfish public service which benefits all members of the general public as well as the Army itself. The incalculable good that comes to civilian life as the result of pioneering done by the Army cannot be estimated.

Ours is a volunteer Army composed of men who have willingly united their energies of hand and brain to forge for us a great weapon for our national safety. Unlike powers of the Old World, we have never had to resort to wholesale conscription to maintain our regular land forces.

Conscription as a matter of military policy has been adopted only in times of very grave national emergency, when the very threshold of our homes was in jeopardy. We do not require our young men to spend 2 years in military service. As a matter of fact, War Department executives have repeatedly informed Congress that facilities are inadequate to train the number of young men who are volunteering every summer for special camps. Our youth represents alertness and willingness to participate in service activities and to engage in the constructive work of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and the citizens' military training camp.

In response to the insistent demand from the young men of the country who want to become part of our reserve units in our national-defense machinery, Congress has increased appropriations for camps so that thousands of summer cadets can be trained. For that step I am sure the entire public feels grateful to Congress. I wish there were more time available to discuss at length some of the constructive features of the R. O. T. C., the C. M. T. C., and other reserve units.

It would, indeed, be appropriate here to make extended reference to our Navy and its place in the general plan of national defense. I should like to compliment our splendid Navy and its personnel, but time is limited, and a full discussion of our naval force would be more propitious for Navy Day, October 27, when we watch the fleet pass in review and when we take an inventory of our fighting forces of the mighty deep. But today I have been compelled to confine my remarks largely to the significance of the Army in our scheme of defense.

It is a stern fact that a nation is no stronger than its second line of defense, and that second line of defense for our Navy is an adequate merchant marine; and just as I believe we should help develop and encourage commercial aviation, we should, through subsidies, aid the merchant marine.

We must keep the American flag flying on the seven seas. Congress must realize its responsibility to the people of the country and do its part toward providing that second line of naval defense as well as its second line of air defense.

I am in accord with the President of the United States, who has already sent to Congress a message which sets forth a plan to aid distressed shipowners. In Great Britain, Japan, Germany, France, Poland, and various other foreign countries every citizen helps to support the ships as the result of their government's furnishing supplemental aid to shipowners through direct and indirect subsidies. We must take some immediate steps in order for our people to gain their rightful share in the commerce of the world.

A nation prospers and succeeds as does an individual by heeding the lessons of experience, by viewing the progress of the past, and by interpreting with accuracy the significance of events which have gone before. Mankind progresses mainly through the slow process of trial and error. Too often he does not learn from the one error; he must make many; so it has been with our history of preparedness.

The history of the Army is full of hallowed traditions and stories of high courage in the face of adversity. The evolution of the Army has been a continued succession of pronounced improvements in tactics, technique, and equipment.

In the early day of the Nation the ragged band of fighters who surrounded General Washington and won undying fame were our first Army. These courageous continentals carved a deep niche for themselves in history.

A generation later Andrew Jackson, "Old Hickory", galvanized his men into action at the Battle of New Orleans.

Still later two young men destined to win fame on opposite sides of a long interstate strife marched under one flag. These young officers were Robert E. Lee and U. S. Grant.

The Spanish-American War marked the emergence of the United States as a world power—a position from which we hope never to recede.

The story of the World War is too recent for further comment. In that conflict man brought forth his mightiest implements of destruction. We hope the Army to which we have paid our respects this day will be a great bulwark of prevention of another such disaster as that of 1917–18. Prevention of such a disaster is the duty of every American citizen both in the Army and out of the Army. It is your duty and mine.

And just as it is the Army's duty to defend, it is our duty to cooperate with and to support the Army with unswerving loyalty. While around us the world is rocked with chaos, may we add to our tributes today a toast to the men of the Army?

To the men of the Army—protectors of our homeland—builders of worthy citizenship—guardians of law and order—insurers of peace and welfare—defenders of the Nation—we salute you—may the men of the Army continue to serve with the same undying allegiance and devotion to duty which has enabled them to forge on the anvils of time their link in our Herculean chain of national defense.

PUBLIC WORKS OF THE NAVY

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5576) relating to public works of the Navy.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5576) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs without amendment.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, the bill under consideration is a House bill conforming to the recommendations of the Navy Department for certain public works and improvements designed to give greater and improved facilities to the Navy's activities. A companion bill to this was introduced in the Senate by me in the early part of this session. To expedite passage of the measure the House bill was reported. The House committee had a very thorough investigation. The hearings of the House committee were considered by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs and are also available to Senators as they pertain to the bill under consideration.

The measure provides for certain improvements in the nature of navy-yard works as, for instance, at Boston, for the Marine barracks, South Boston, $22,000. According to the testimony, this is a very necessary improvement.

Then provision is made for improvements at the Navy Yard, Mare Island, Calif., in the nature of a storehouse and accessories, $800,000; graving drydock, services and auxiliary construction, $3,500,000; time-signal station building and accessories, $35,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Has the Senator examined the hearings with respect to the item which he just mentioned, namely, $800,000 for storehouse and accessories and $3,500,000 for graving drydock, services and auxiliary construction? My recollection is, though it is rather imperfect, that there was a drydock at Mare Island when I visited it a number of years ago. Did the evidence show the necessity for the improvements which are called for here?

Mr. TRAMMELL. That was the view of the Navy Department and its representatives who appeared before the committee, in which view the committee concurred. The committee is favorable to that item as well as the other items contained in the bill.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator the total amount authorized by the bill? It is not stated in the bill.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Approximately $38,000,000 is the total amount authorized by the bill for various and sundry improvements and facilities.

Mr. KING. I suppose a naval appropriation bill will be before us within a short time.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I suppose probably it will be. This, however, is only an authorization bill, and no doubt for the facilities and improvements which it is desired to have begun immediately, an appropriation will be requested. I do not know that an appropriation will be requested to cover the entire amount; but this is the authorization, so that the different works authorized may be proceeded with during the period of some years following the passage of the bill.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do.

Mr. POPE. What is the total amount to be authorized by the bill?

Mr. TRAMMELL. $38,000,000, in round figures.

Mr. POPE. And that would have to be paid out of the naval appropriation bill?

Mr. TRAMMELL. It would have to be paid out of the naval appropriation bill when we have one. Of course the entire amount cannot come from the public-relief joint resolution. That was guarded against by a provision in the nature of an amendment offered to that measure.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. KING. In view of the statement made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] when the public-works joint resolution was under consideration, and in view of the language of the joint resolution itself, is the Senator quite sure that no part of the appropriations carried by that joint resolution may be devoted to these improvements?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, it is probable, under the amendment, which was agreed to by the Senate when the conference report was adopted, that there are certain improvements, more or less of a minor nature, which could be paid for from the relief joint resolution; but in the main the public-relief joint resolution appropriations would not apply to these purposes.

Mr. KING. My understanding was—and I hope I am in error—that the public-relief joint resolution only forbade, if it went that far, the utilization of any of the funds for new naval construction, but did not forbid the utilization of some of the funds for what the Senator calls minor improvements. I assume that all the improvements referred to in this bill would come under the category of minor improvements, although they call for an aggregate of $38,000,000.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not think many of these would come under the category of minor improvements; but under the Public Works Act the administration probably could construct barracks, for instance, some buildings that were necessary, or improve other buildings, if it should see fit to allow any of the public relief funds to be used for that purpose.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do.

Mr. MOORE. I desire to ask the Senator a question about arsenals. We have an arsenal in New Jersey which was practically demolished due to explosion several years ago. I was wondering what the committee intends to do about arsenals.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The arsenal in New Jersey is under the War Department, is it not, instead of the Navy Department?

Mr. MOORE. Both.

Mr. TRAMMELL. It is under both the War Department and the Navy Department?

Mr. MOORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not recall any particular item in the bill referring to the arsenal in New Jersey. The Senator might glance over the bill; but I do not recall an item of that character.

Mr. MOORE. It is not in the bill, but the Department has promised to make a recommendation on the subject; and I wondered if it was intended to take the necessary money out of the work-relief joint resolution, or whether it should be provided for in this bill.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I am not informed as to what policy the Navy Department will pursue on that subject. The New Jersey arsenal is not in the bill, however, which was recommended by the Department and which has passed the House and is now under consideration in the Senate. That matter, of course, would have to await the action of the Navy Department.

Mr. President, I do not know that it is necessary to go into all these items in detail. The bill embraces recommendations of the Navy Department for needed improvements and public works.

In the case of the navy yard at Puget Sound, the Department recommended a drydock and auxiliary construction there.

The largest item in the bill is for the navy yard at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii. The Department is impressed with the view that we should have proper drydock facilities at Pearl Harbor; and an authorization of $10,000,000 is asked for a floating drydock, type B, including mooring facilities and accessories. At the present time we have very inadequate facilities at that location. An appropriation of $750,000 is also asked for a floating drydock, type D, including mooring facilities and accessories. Then at Pearl Harbor $500,000 is asked for a power-plant building and accessories, which seem to be very essential.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Did the Committee on Naval Affairs have hearings respecting these items? Were naval officers before the committee, and did the committee go into the details of the bill?

Mr. TRAMMELL. The House committee had very thorough hearings. We invited some of the naval officers before the Senate committee, and at that meeting we also had the House hearings before us. It was the view of the committee that the House hearings thoroughly covered the matter, and we studied the House hearings, although we did have the naval officers appear before the committee in behalf of the measure. They endorsed all the items embraced in the House bill; and we adopted the hearings which had been held in the House, which are very thorough, and I think are on the desk of each Senator at the present time.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senate committee made no amendments to the bill?

Mr. TRAMMELL. The Senate committee made no amendments to the bill. A companion bill had been introduced in the Senate by me, and only very minor changes, if any were made in the House; so, to expedite legislation, we recommended the passage of the House bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. The bill carries, for purposes of construction, about $38,000,000?

Mr. TRAMMELL. About $38,000,000.

Mr. President, I think there is no use of attempting to go into every item. They are all supported by ample evidence from the Navy Department, and I shall not discuss the measure at length. I hope that is not necessary. Unless others desire to discuss the bill, I urge immediate favorable action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, some Senators are not present who perhaps are interested in this measure. For that reason I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Hayden	Reynolds
Ashurst	Coolidge	Johnson	Robinson
Austin	Copeland	King	Russell
Bachman	Costigan	Lewis	Schall
Bailey	Couzens	Logan	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Cutting	Lonergan	Sheppard
Barbour	Dickinson	McCarran	Smith
Barkley	Dieterich	McGill	Steiwer
Bilbo	Donahey	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Black	Duffy	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Bone	Fletcher	Minton	Townsend
Borah	Frazier	Moore	Trammell
Brown	George	Murphy	Truman
Bulkley	Gerry	Murray	Tydings
Bulow	Gibson	Neely	Vandenberg
Burke	Glass	Norris	Van Nuys
Byrd	Gore	Nye	Wagner
Byrnes	Guffey	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Capper	Hale	Pittman	Wheeler
Carey	Harrison	Pope	White
Clark	Hatch	Radcliffe

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CALENDAR

BILL PASSED OVER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar is now in order. The clerk will state the first bill in order on the calendar.

The bill (S. 944) to amend section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1404) to promote the efficiency of national defense, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was, in section 1, on page 2, line 8, after the word "as", to strike out the word "hereinafter" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "hereinbefore", so as to make the section read:

That hereafter the promotion list of the Regular Army and Philippine Scouts shall include all officers on the active list in the grades of second lieutenant to colonel, inclusive, except officers of the Medical Department, chaplains, and professors of the United States Military Academy; promotion-list colonels shall be placed immediately above the lieutenant colonels on the promotion list provided for in section 24 (a) of the act of June 4, 1920 (U. S. C., 10:553, 41 Stat. 771), in the order of their standing on the relative rank list of colonels on the date of this act; officers on the promotion list as above defined shall be known as promotion-list officers; all other officers, except general officers, shall be known as "non-promotion-list officers": Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to change the respective relative positions held by officers on the promotion list, hereinbefore prescribed, nor the method of determining the position of officers on that list as prescribed by the act of June 4, 1920, as amended, except as hereinbefore provided.

All promotions provided for in this act shall be subject to the examination prescribed by existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, in section 3, on page 4, line 18, after the word "date", to strike out the period and insert a colon and the words "Provided, That no officer shall be promoted, under the provisions of this paragraph, in advance of any officer in the same grade whose name appears above his on the promotion list", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. All vacancies, including original vacancies resulting from the operation of section 2 hereof, occurring on or after July 1, 1935, in the respective grades of colonel, lieutenant colonel, and major of promotion-list officers shall be filled by the promotion of promotion-list officers in the manner provided in section 24c of the said act of June 4, 1920: Provided, That no promotion-list officer shall be promoted in time of peace under the provisions of this act to the grade of colonel until he shall have completed 26 years' service; to the grade of lieutenant colonel until he shall have completed 20 years' service, or to the grade of major until he shall have completed 15 years' service, the service to be counted for purposes of this proviso to be only active commissioned service of the same classes prescribed for promotion-list purposes in section 24a of the said act of June 4, 1920; but this proviso shall not apply to lieutenant colonels and majors whose first appointments in the permanent service were in grades above those of captain and second lieutenant, respectively, or who were appointed to the Regular Army under the provisions of the first sentence of section 24 of the act of June 3, 1916, as amended by the said act of June 4, 1920, nor to captains whose first appointments in the permanent service were in a grade above second lieutenant, or whose present rank dates from July 1, 1920, or earlier. All officers promoted under the provisions of this paragraph shall take rank in the grade to which promoted according to the dates stated in their commissions in said grade; and when the dates of rank of two or more officers in said grade are the same, such officers shall take rank among themselves according to their standing on the promotion list.

The number of promotion-list officers that shall be in the respective grades of captain and first lieutenant at any time after the effective date of this act shall be such as results from the operation of the promotion system hereinafter in this paragraph prescribed. Promotion-list second lieutenants and first lieutenants shall be promoted to the respective grades of first lieutenant and captain immediately upon completing, respectively, 3 years' and 10 years' commissioned service in the Regular Army, but not otherwise; and all such officers in the said grades of second lieutenant and first lieutenant, respectively, who shall have completed the said respective periods of service on or before the effective date of this act shall be so promoted as of said date: Provided, That no officer shall be promoted, under the provisions of this paragraph, in advance of any officer in the same grade whose name appears above his on the promotion list.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 5, line 17, before the word "service", to strike out the word "commissioned"; on the same line, after the word "be", to strike out the words "separated from the active list" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "retired"; on line 19, after the word "President", to strike out the words "with compensation as follows: Any such officer shall have the option of retirement"; on line 24, after the word "years", to strike out the words "or honorable discharge with 1 year's pay at the rate to which he was entitled at the time of such discharge and, in addition thereto, a cash allowance of $5,500"; on page 6, line 3, after the word "computing", to insert the words "the right to retirement and"; on line 4, after the word "service", to insert the words "now or hereafter"; on line 5, before the word "pay", to insert the words "active duty"; after the word "purposes", to strike out the words "under the Pay Readjustment Act of June 10, 1922"; on line 8, after the word "officer", to strike out the words "who was originally appointed in" and insert in lieu thereof the word "of"; on line 9, after the word "scouts", to strike out the words "to rank from July 1, 1920, or prior thereto" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "below the grade of major"; on line 12, after the word "and", to strike out the words "who shall be separated from the active list" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "whose application for retirement"; on line 14, after the word "section", to insert the words "has been approved by the President"; on line 15, after the word "shall", to strike out the words "have the option of retirement or honorable discharge" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "to be retired"; on line 17, after the word "pay", to strike out the words "or honorable discharge gratuity", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That any officer on the active list of the Regular Army or Philippine Scouts who, on the effective date of this act or at any time thereafter, shall have completed not less than 15 nor more than 29 years' service may, upon his own application, be retired, in the discretion of the President, with annual pay equal to the product of 2½ percent of his active-duty annual pay at the time of his retirement multiplied by a number equal to the years of his active service not in excess of 29 years: Provided, That the number of years of service to be credited in computing the right to retirement and retirement pay under this section shall include all service now or hereafter credited for active-duty pay purposes, any fractional part of a year amounting to 6 months or more to be counted as a complete year: And provided further, That any officer of the Regular Army or Philippine Scouts below the grade of major who served as a commissioned officer in the Army of the United States prior to November 12, 1918, and whose application for retirement under the provisions of this section has been approved by the President shall be retired in the grade of major with retired pay computed as hereinbefore provided as for a major with the same length of service: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall operate to deprive any officer of the retired rank to which he is now entitled under the provisions of law: And provided further, That any officer originally appointed as of July 1, 1920, at an age greater than 45 years may, if he so elects, in lieu of retired pay at the rate hereinbefore provided, receive retired pay at the rate of 4 percent of active-duty pay for each complete year of commissioned service in the United States Army, the total to be not more than 75 percent: And provided further, That all officers retired under the provisions of this section shall be placed on the unlimited retired list.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I move to strike out section 6.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, after line 5, it is proposed to strike out section 6, as follows:

SEC. 6. That the seventh paragraph of section 127a of the act of June 4, 1920 (U. S. C., 10:553, 41 Stat. 771), as amended, is hereby further amended by adding the following: "Temporary appointments to higher rank, not above that of colonel, may likewise be made in time of peace, under such regulations as the President may prescribe; but such appointments shall confer no right to exercise command, take precedence, or receive pay or allowances prior to the recognition of a state of war, and on such recognition they shall be in full force and effect, carrying rank from date of appointment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 213) to amend section 113 of the Criminal Code of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. 1109; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 203), and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1506) to change the name of the Pickwick Landing Dam to Quin Dam was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1878) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Mack Copper Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 574) relative to Members of Congress acting as attorneys in matters where the United States has an interest was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 35) authorizing the Committee on the Judiciary to investigate certain phases of the National Recovery Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

ADDITIONAL CADETS AT UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

The bill (S. 2105) to provide for an additional number of cadets at the United States Military Academy was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] introduced this bill. I wonder whether the Senator from Utah would not be willing to hear an explanation?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to hear an explanation of the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this bill is made necessary by the fact that by the time the additional cadets would graduate an unusually large number of officers will go out of the Army, officers who came into the service during the Spanish-American War and during the World War. Unless we increase the number of cadets, by the time those officers go out we will not be able to maintain the percentage of trained officers which the War Department feels should always be maintained, that is, 60 percent of trained officers in comparison with officers coming into the service from civil life. The additional cadets would not graduate as officers for 4 years, and it is necessary now to prepare for the situation I have described.

Mr. McKELLAR. The cadets would be selected in exactly the same way cadets are now selected?

Mr. SHEPPARD. In exactly the same way.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, may I ask how large an increase in personnel there would be?

Mr. SHEPPARD. One additional cadet for each Senator and Representative and 10 for the President.

Mr. COSTIGAN. What would be the aggregate increase?

Mr. SHEPPARD. About 500.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter there shall be allowed at the United States Military Academy 3 cadets for each Senator, Representative, Delegate in Congress, and Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico, 5 for the District of Columbia, and 132 from the United States at large, in addition to the number now authorized to be appointed from the enlisted men of the Regular Army and National Guard, and the sons of deceased officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines.

WILLIAM W. DANENHOWER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 925) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of William W. Danenhower, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to add a proviso at the end of the bill so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William W. Danenhower, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $34,260 for damages caused by the depreciation in value of his property situate in square 737 in the city of Washington, D. C., which said damages were caused by the elimination of the grade crossings of railroads in pursuance to the act of Congress approved February 12, 1901 (31 Stat. L. 774), and acts supplemental thereto, as found by the Court of Claims and reported in Senate Document No. 2, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator reporting the bill, if he is present, and if not the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], who introduced the bill, whether the measure was favorably reported by the department to which it was referred.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, this is a matter which has been before the Court of Claims. A similar measure has passed the Senate six times, and always failed in the House. The bill is in accordance with the findings of the Court of Claims.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SQUAW ISLAND FREIGHT TERMINAL CO., INC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1817) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgment on the claim of Squaw Island Freight Terminal Co., Inc., of Buffalo, N. Y., against the United States in respect of loss of property occasioned by the breaking of a Government dike on Squaw Island.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I find an adverse report on this bill by the Secretary of War, and would like to have an explanation of it. Otherwise, I shall object to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have the bill go over?

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

Mr. COPELAND rose.

Mr. KING. I withhold the objection pending an explanation.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator may not recall, but I had a colloquy with him at the last session in regard to this measure. It would permit the claimants to go into the Court of Claims because of a loss of property occasioned by the breaking of a dike on Squaw Island. It was the attitude of the Department, to which the Senator has referred, that it is assumed that the loss of property referred to was occasioned by the break mentioned, but that has not been verified. The Department was not satisfied that sufficient evidence had been presented, and the purpose of the bill is to enable the claimant to go into the court to determine whether or not the failure of the Government to provide proper dikes on the Niagara River was the cause of the loss. I think the Senator last year, after the explanation, felt that it was proper to let the bill pass.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none, and the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations or other limitations upon the jurisdiction of such court, to hear, consider, and render judgment on the claim of Squaw Island Freight Terminal Co., Inc., for just compensation to it for loss of property and/or damage occasioned by the breaking of an inadequate and/or improperly and insufficiently constructed Government dike on Squaw Island between Black Rock Canal and the Niagara River in December 1921 and January 1922.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 875) for the relief of Michael F. Calnan was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2029) to authorize naval and Marine Corps service of Army officers to be included in computing dates of retirement was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

JAMES A. FARLEY

The resolution (S. Res. 74) to investigate the public and official conduct of James A. Farley was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHEELER. Let that go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in regard to Senate Resolution 74. The committee is perfectly willing to have a vote on the resolution at any time. I understand the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] is not here today, and, of course, in his absence I would not insist upon the resolution being taken up; but I did not want it to be called without saying that the committee is entirely ready to have a vote on it at any time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being heard, the resolution will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2119) for the relief of Amos D. Carver, S. E. Turner, Clifford N. Carver, Scott Blanchard, P. B. Blanchard, James B. Parse, A. N. Blanchard, and W. A. Blanchard, and/or the widows of such of them as may be deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

REGULATION OF LOAN BUSINESS IN THE DISTRICT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1162) to regulate the business of making small loans in the District of Columbia, and to amend an act to regulate the business of loaning money, etc., approved February 4, 1913, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 2, to strike out the words "bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan" and to insert in lieu thereof the words, "bankers, credit unions established under the act approved June 23, 1932 (47 Stat. 326, c. 272, sec. 1), and under the act approved June 26, 1934 (48 Stat. 1216, c. 750), trust companies, savings banks, building and loan", and on line 11, after the word "loan", to insert the words ": Provided, That any of the above-excepted national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, and savings banks may operate under the provisions of this act upon securing a license so to do", so as to make the section read:

DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1. (a) "Lender", as used in this act, is any individual, copartnership, firm, association, or corporation engaged in the District of Columbia in the business of lending money upon which interest, fees, and charges totaling more than 6 percent per annum upon the unpaid principal balances of such loan are paid or charged, whether with or without security of any kind, direct or collateral, tangible or intangible, except national banks, licensed bankers, credit unions established under the act approved June 23, 1932 (47 Stat. 326, c. 272, sec. 1), and under the act approved June 26, 1934 (48 Stat. 1216, c. 750), trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, or real-estate brokers, as defined in chapter 4, title 20, of the Code of the District of Columbia, and pawnbrokers. Pawnbrokers are those who lend money upon physical security and keep possession of such security during the period of the loan: Provided, That any of the above-excepted national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, and savings banks may operate under the provisions of this act upon securing a license so to do.

(b) "Procurer", as used in this act, is any individual, copartnership, firm, association, or corporation engaged in the District of Columbia in the business of procuring or securing money or its equivalent for another when said person, copartnership, firm, association, or corporation is paid anything of value for the procurement of said money or its equivalent.

(c) "Person", within the meaning of this act, includes individuals, firms, partnerships, associations, and corporations.

(d) "Superintendent", as used in this act, means the Superintendent of Insurance for the District of Columbia.

(e) For definitions of "interest", "charges", and "fees" see section 12.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will wait until the amendments shall have been acted on, and then I should like to have an explanation of the bill by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, my memory has been refreshed that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] objected to this bill when it was called up on a previous occasion, or at least I objected in his behalf; and I think it might be well, may I suggest to the Senator from Utah, to have the Senator from Minnesota summoned to the floor and allow the bill to be passed over for a moment without prejudice.

Mr. KING. I have no objection, assuming that the Senator will assent to taking up the amendments and agreeing to them; and if the Senator from Minnesota shall object to any of the amendments agreed to I will consent to a reconsideration.

Mr. McNARY. Are there many amendments?

Mr. KING. Just a few.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment of the committee was in section 12, on page 10, at the beginning of line 12 to insert "(A)"; on page 11, line 5, to insert "(B)"; on page 12, after line 12, to strike out "The superintendent is hereby authorized and instructed from time to time, as his investigations and the reports made to him shall justify, to increase or decrease the rates of interest and the fees (or either the interest or the fees) hereinbefore provided, or to disallow the fees, in order that lenders may derive from the loaning of money a reasonable profit but that borrowers may not be subjected to exorbitant charges for such loaning. Such rates or fees may not be thus increased to allow a lender more than twice the amounts herein allowed or decreased to less than half such amounts. Such increases or decreases shall be made only by regulation duly published, and after approval thereof has been had from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia"; on page 13, at the beginning of line 3, to insert "(C)"; on the same page, line 4, to strike out "(or such amounts as may be prescribed by the superintendent as herein provided)"; and on page 13, line 16, to strike out "pay amounts greater than the installments specified in the contract of loan and in the event of such greater payments", and to insert in lieu thereof "pay in advance of the date specified in the contract of loan one or more installments and in the event of such greater payments", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 12. (A) "Interest" as used in this act means an amount of money or other thing of value required to be paid as compensation for the loan of money or credit. It includes any and all charges, fees, expenses, demands, discounts, commissions, brokerage, bonuses, including notarial and examination fees, and all other charges of any character made, directly or indirectly, for any purpose by any lender, procurer, appraiser, or any other person in connection with the lending or procuring of money or credit; except the fees hereinafter specified.

The total interest (as above defined) which may be charged or received by a lender, his agents, representatives, officers, and employees (total for all such persons concerned in the loan) in respect to any loan shall not exceed 2 percent per month on the monthly unpaid principal balances of the loan. Interest shall not be compounded. Neither interest nor fees shall be deducted from the principal of the loan.

(B) "Fees" as used in this act means the fees specified in the following schedule.

For the purposes of determining the fees allowable hereunder, loans are divided into three classes and the fees allowable are as follows:

(a) Loans of $35 or less for a period of 30 days or less without collateral (so-called "character loans"). In these loans a fee not to exceed $1 (in addition to interest and charges as above defined) may be charged and received for a credit report or investigation, but only if such report or investigation is actually secured or made by the lender or procurer. In these loans a total of 50 cents as interest and other charges (in addition to the $1 just referred to) may be allowed on each such loan.

(b) Loans of any amount for more than 30 days and loans of more than $35 for 30 days or less, without collateral (so-called "character loans"). In these loans fees not to exceed $3 (in addition to interest and charges as above defined) may be charged and received for credit reports or investigations at the rate of $1 per report or investigation, but only if such reports or investigations are actually secured or made by the lender or procurer. Such credit reports or investigations may concern either the borrower or proposed endorsers.

(c) Loans on collateral. On these loans the following fees may be charged and received:

For the recording of chattel mortgage, not to exceed $1;

For the examination of titles, not to exceed $3.

Insurance premiums actually paid for insurance protection of the collateral security where such protection is necessary and does not already exist. The insurance which the borrower may be required to take shall not exceed the amount necessary to protect the total amount of the loan.

(C) No interest or fee of any kind or description, in addition to the foregoing schedule may be charged or received by any lender, procurer, or any other person in connection with any loan.

Such fees as are allowed under the foregoing schedule may be charged only upon the original loan and may not be charged upon any renewal thereof.

The borrower shall be permitted to repay the full amount of the loan, with the interest, fees, and charges due, at any time, and in the event of such payment shall not be charged interest on the loan beyond the date of the payment. Likewise the borrower shall be permitted to pay in advance of the date specified in the contract of loan one or more installments and in the event of such greater payments no further interest on that amount so paid shall be charged or received.

In cases of loans upon collateral security where the physical property supporting the collateral remains in the possession of the borrower (such as loans upon automobiles or other personal property) and the borrower is in default on the due date and the lender has a right to repossession of the property and does so repossess the property, the lender may charge and receive the actual fees incurred and expended by him in such repossession, but only in the amount so actually expended by him and actually paid by him to some other concern for the services rendered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the bill will go over without prejudice, to be called up later.

Mr. KING. Later during the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to that arrangement? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS—APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints the following conferees on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, as ordered by the Senate last night: Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. GLASS, Mr. COPELAND, Mr. KING, Mr. NYE, and Mr. KEYES.

The Chair would like to make a statement concerning the future policy of the present occupant of the chair in the matter of appointing conferees.

It has been the custom for a long time for the Senator having charge of an important House bill which passes the Senate with amendments, to ask for a conference with the House of Representatives and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate. He sends to the Chair the names of the conferees. So far as the RECORD shows, the occupant of the chair appoints the conferees, whereas, as a matter of fact, he exercises no discretion and does not even see the names of the conferees until they are sent to the Chair.

Hereafter the present occupant of the chair expects to exercise some discretion in the matter of selecting conferees when the Senate authorizes him to make the appointments.

The Chair mentions this now so that no Senator in the future may think he is slighted or otherwise discriminated against if he asks unanimous consent that the Chair appoint conferees and sends up his list, and those named on the list are not appointed. The Chair merely desires to give notice of his course in the future. If there is any reaction to the contrary the Chair would like to know it, and then some rule ought to be made as to how conferees should be appointed, because the Chair is advised there is no specific rule of the Senate concerning the appointment of conferees.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I cannot agree with all the Chair has said regarding a rule. There may not be a specific rule, but precedents have certainly established a rule in the absence of one formally adopted by the Senate. I have no doubt that the rule provides that the selection of the conferees must be by a majority vote of the Senate as such.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That would be parliamentary law, but, so far as the Chair has been able to find—and he has made an investigation of the question in connection with the parliamentary clerk—there is only one specific rule with reference to the appointment of conferees. In the appointment of conferees to consider appropriation bills the rule requires that in connection with the agricultural appropriation bill, for instance, one of the conferees must be selected from the Committee on Agriculture; in the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, one of the conferees must be selected from the Committee on Naval Affairs; one from the Committee on Military Affairs when the War Department bill is being considered; and so on with the various other appropriation bills. Outside of that, the Chair has been unable to find a single reference in the rule as to the method by which the Senate may select its conferees. Parliamentary law undoubtedly would indicate that the selection of the majority should prevail.

Mr. McNARY. I cannot agree in full with that statement of the Chair, much as I dislike to disagree. I call the Chair's attention to rule XXIV, which specifically provides that the selection of the managers on the part of the Senate must be made by majority vote of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator refer to that rule now and state it?

Mr. McNARY. I speak from memory, but, as I recall, it is rule XXIV.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That rule deals with the appointment of standing committees of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. That has been interpreted, under Hinds' Decisions, as including in the Senate conferees as well as committees; but whatever the rule may be, Mr. President, the practice has grown up here, as stated by the Chair, of appointing the conferees whose names have been submitted to the Chair by the Senator in charge of the particular bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator permit the Chair to read rule XXIV, to which he referred?

1. In the appointment of standing committees, the Senate, unless otherwise ordered, shall proceed by ballot to appoint severally the chairman of each committee, and then, by one ballot, the other members necessary to complete the same.

That refers to standing committees. The Chair does not think that language could possibly be construed to mean conferees.

Mr. McNARY. That particular construction has been given, I call attention of the Chair, to the note on page 204 of the rules and manual of the United States Senate.

Mr. COUZENS. Will the Senator from Oregon read it, please?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have it here, and I shall be glad to read it.

Mr. McNARY. Just a moment. I do not yield for that purpose. I am addressing the Chair in an orderly way.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thought the Senator said he did not have it before him, and I have it before me.

Mr. McNARY. I have the note before me, and I am calling it to the attention of the Chair. I call the Chair's attention to the note under section 17, Appointment of Conferees. Then, again, I direct the attention of the Chair to the interpretation of that rule in some of the precedents found in Hinds' Precedents.

Mr. President, I have no doubt whatever the interpretation of the rules of the Senate is bottomed upon precedents. The majority Members of the Senate may at all times select their own committees and conferees. If there is any doubt about that, the matter should be referred to the Senate Rules Committee to make it definite and certain; but, so far as I am concerned, from the study and research which I have made, I am convinced that that is and has been the attitude of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is in thorough sympathy and thorough accord with the view of the Senator from Oregon that the Senate can appoint its conferees by a majority vote of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there is another matter which strikes vitally at this subject, which I think is also covered by the rule. That is, that in the selection of conferees, whether undertaken by the Senate or, by unanimous consent, by the Chair, consideration should be given to those friendly and in sympathy with the bill which goes to conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will be the purpose of the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. McNARY. I say that without reflection upon anyone. I have no reason to reflect upon the motives or the attitude of anyone; but it looks better to have those who act as conferees friendly to the bill. I think that is covered by the rule; and I call the Chair's attention to the statement found at the bottom of page 204, on the subject of conferences and conference reports, which I interpret to mean that the majority, at least, of the conferees must be sympathetic with the prevailing opinion, which must be the majority of the Senate who support the measure; otherwise, it would not go to conference.

So, Mr. President, if there is any doubt in the mind of the present Presiding Officer or others who may from time to time temporarily occupy the chair, I feel certain that in the future the Chair will be quite guided by the precedents, and if he should appoint those whom he pleases, or those who may be selected by the majority of the Senate, will bear in mind particularly those who are in sympathy with the bill as it goes to conference. If that is the attitude of the Chair, I think he is abundantly supported by precedents; and I shall be very glad, in my humble way, to support the Chair in that determination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will certainly be the policy of the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not know that it is necessary to attempt to add anything to what has been said. After the discussion which has taken place, I do not know that there is any substantial difference between the Chair and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] as to the true interpretation of the rule. Without doubt, the Senate has the right to elect all its committees; but the practice has arisen, by unanimous consent, of the Chair appointing conferees, and those appointments are made on the recommendation of the Senator in charge of the bill. Nevertheless, the rule contemplates that when conferees are appointed, a majority of the members of the conference shall reflect as nearly as may be the conclusion of the Senate, and the minority is entitled to representation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the next bill on the calendar.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before the next bill is called, I wish to read the note referred to, and I think Senators should listen to it. The note on page 204 of the Rules and Manual of the United States Senate reads as follows:

NOTE.—The Senate members of conference committees, called the managers on the part of the Senate, are appointed by the Presiding Officer, by unanimous consent, under the custom of the Senate. Rule XXIV, clause 1, provides that all committees of the Senate shall be appointed by ballot unless otherwise ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. That simply means that when the request is made that the Chair appoint the conferees, any Senator may object, in which case the Senate would elect its conferees.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no doubt about that. I think the suggestion of the Chair that this matter be taken up with the Rules Committee, and a definite rule be fixed, is entirely proper; but I do not think the custom ought to be changed until the Committee on Rules shall have had the matter before it and shall make a report to the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I say that there is no necessity for changing the rule. The rule now provides for the election of all committees by the Senate and for the election of committee chairmen. It also authorizes the same procedure in cases of conferees. We follow by custom a different procedure even with respect to standing committees; but there always exists the right on the part of a Senator to object to the appointment of conferees by the Chair, in which case they will be elected by the Senate. I do not see how the rule could be improved.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understand the practice heretofore to have been that the Chair appoints the conferees at his own discretion, according to his own judgment, except there must be representatives from both parties.

Mr. ROBINSON. Unless there be objection on the part of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think it is generally known, and that there is no dispute about the fact, that the Chair has no right to appoint conferees unless the Senate authorizes the Chair to do it. What happens ninety-nine times out of a hundred is that the motion is adopted by the Senate agreeing to the conference asked by the House, or asking a conference, as the case may be, and authorizing the Chair to appoint the conferees. What is done is in the shape of a motion, which is agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Ordinarily it is by unanimous consent.

Mr. NORRIS. It could be, but I should say that ordinarily it is by motion, and the Chair says, "Without objection, the motion is agreed to." However, if anyone insisted on such action, as in the case of any other motion, we could have a roll call on the question. We could debate it. It is debatable. As the practice has existed, however, almost universally it goes through by unanimous consent. That action then becomes the authority for the Chair to appoint the conferees, and he has no other authority.

It is true that the chairman of the committee or the subcommittee having charge of the bill sends up a little paper with the names on it and the Chair appoints the Senators thus named conferees on the part of the Senate, but the RECORD does not show that the Chair's discretion has in anywise been interfered with. The little pink slip which goes up to the Chair never appears in the RECORD, and there is not a record of it, but the Chair follows out the direction, and that has become a custom which is practically universal. The Chair has the legal right to disregard that custom entirely, take his authority from the motion which is adopted, and appoint anyone he sees fit. He has the authority to do it when that motion is agreed to; but the other custom runs back a great many years, and the Chair would get into trouble right away if he disregarded it; he would find himself in hot water; and probably not many motions of that kind would be made after that.

It is a custom which has become almost a law, and yet it is unwritten, and no Presiding Officer would want to disregard the little slip. In the present instance we have the incident of the Chair calling to the attention of the Senate what he proposes to do in the future, and stating that the Chair will exercise a discretion. Under general parliamentary law I think it is always understood that the conferees on the part of a body appointing conferees should fairly represent the ideas of that body. They should represent the majority who supported and passed the bill. Often, almost every day, bills are passed which are composed of very many items, and it would be impossible, perhaps, for the Presiding Officer to select as conferees Senators who favor everything that has been done by the Senate. So discretion must be allowed. He cannot go further than in a general way appoint those who are favorable to the legislation and appoint a minority on the committee who are opposed to the views of the majority that secured the passage of the measure.

I wish to hail with delight the announcement made by the Vice President that he intends to exercise a discretion when he is authorized by the Senate to appoint conferees. I understand him to say that in the exercise of that discretion he will appoint a majority of conferees who are favorable to the general legislation. It does not mean that he must appoint someone who was in favor of every feature of a given bill, because that would be an impossibility; but I myself think that we would do better if we always had as conferees a majority who were in a general way favorable to the legislation which was the subject matter of the conference.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, if any Senator desires to have those named on a certain list appointed conferees when the motion is made requesting a conference he may submit the list. Then if any other Senator desires to take issue as to the name of anyone upon that list he may offer an amendment to substitute another name. If it becomes a contested question, that brings the question clearly before the Senate for determination as to who the conferees shall be.

However, the position of the Chair is that under the general practice, if there is criticism of the conferees as appointed, the public does not know that he has simply followed the old custom of appointing those whose names the chairman of the committee sends up to him. So I think that the statement the Chair has made makes it quite clear that, if the responsibility is placed on him, he will assume the responsibility and will appoint whom he sees fit.

BILL PASSED OVER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the next bill on the calendar.

The bill (S. 509) to prevent the use of Federal official patronage in elections and to prohibit Federal office holders from misuse of positions of public trust for private and partisan ends was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

OMAHA AND WINNEBAGO INDIANS OF NEBRASKA

The bill (S. 612) for the benefit of the Omaha and Winnebago Indians of Nebraska was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. NORRIS subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask permission to recur to Calendar No. 321, being Senate bill 612, which has already gone over on objection. The bill was reported by the committee without any opportunity for the taxing authorities of certain counties in Nebraska to be heard. I took up the matter with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], who does not happen to be in the Chamber at the moment. He said he would not resist the motion which I am about to make if I found on investigation that the taxing authorities desired to be heard. Accordingly I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs so that it may again be considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the motion is agreed to, and the bill is recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (S. 1476) to provide for unemployment relief through development of mineral resources; to assist the development of privately owned mineral claims; to provide for the development of emergency and deficiency minerals, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

DAMAGE CLAIMS AGAINST CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 553) to authorize the settlement of individual claims for personal property lost or damaged arising out of the activities of the Civilian Conservation Corps, which have been approved by the Secretary of War, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 2, line 3, after "$5", to strike out "Andy McKelvey, Grand Junction, Colo., $65.35", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Kenneth R. Betts, Chillicothe, Ohio, $14.45; Frank W. Brunner, Springfield, Ill., $38.55; W. J. Conley, Dunsmuir, Calif., $99.80; H. B. Clifton, Savanna, Ill., $60.75; Frank E. Daley, Severna Park, Md., $84.70; Mazie J. Donaldson, Oakland, Calif., $49.10; F. T. H. Kelley, Thompson, Conn., $7.10; Meriam H. Lyter, Williamsport, Pa., $5; Robert E. Patnaude, Deer River, Minn., $25; Van's Battery & Electric Co., Inc., Green Bay, Wis., $92.28; and Earl W. Williams, Bennington, Vt., $15.35, in full settlement for damages sustained by reason of the operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, in which claims have been approved by the Secretary of War: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PREVENTION AND PUNISHMENT OF LYNCHING

The bill (S. 24) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws by discouraging, preventing, and punishing the crime of lynching was announced as next in order.

Mr. RUSSELL and Mr. McKELLAR asked that the bill go over.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Was exception taken to the immediate consideration of Senate bill 24?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Does the record show by whom the objection was made.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was one of those who objected, I take great pleasure in saying to the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. I also asked that the bill go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the bill ought to go over, because it ought to be debated and not passed under the 5-minute rule. There is no secret about it at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 164) for the relief of Donald L. Bruner was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1452) providing for the employment of skilled shorthand reporters in the executive branch of the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1453) to create a board of shorthand reporting, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PAYMENT OF AWARDS TO SIOUX INDIANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2241) to authorize an appropriation to carry out the provisions of the act of May 3, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 484), which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an appropriation is hereby authorized in the sum of $79,002.19 to pay various Sioux Indians enrolled at the different agencies the amounts which have been awarded to them by the Secretary of the Interior under the act of May 3, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 484), on account of allotments of land to which they were entitled but did not receive.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], who is unavoidably absent, I wish to offer an amendment which will make the Senate bill conform to a House bill which is on the calendar of the other body in the matter of providing for payment to attorneys who have helped in the case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, at the end of line 8, it is proposed to strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to determine what attorney or attorneys have rendered services of value in behalf of said Indians and to pay such attorney or attorneys on such findings when appropriation is available the reasonable value of such services, not to exceed 10 percent of the recovery on each individual claim, which payment shall be in full settlement for all services rendered by such attorney or attorneys to said claimants in said claims.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think there should be an explanation of this bill. I do not wish to object to it, but, if the Senator from North Dakota is prepared to analyze it, I should be glad to have him do so.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the bill simply provides for the payment of funds which were found necessary following investigation ordered by the Congress. The interior Department has made the investigation and recommends this bill. Previously, back in 1933, a portion of the appropriation was made in payment of these claims. Under an act passed by Congress in 1928 investigations were made to ascertain what Indians were entitled to payment for property losses which were sustained under an old treaty. The bill merely provides for payment. The Secretary of the Interior recommends the bill providing for the payments. It affects Indians in Nebraska, South Dakota, and one claim in North Dakota. The bill was reported by the committee without any objection, and a similar bill has been reported from a House committee and is on the calendar of that body.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] in behalf of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 363) to increase the efficiency of the Veterinary Corps of the Regular Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BAIL IN CRIMINAL CASES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 18) to amend section 1015 of the Revised Statutes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, line 3, after the word " cases ", to insert the word " such ", so as to read:

SEC. 1015. Bail shall be admitted upon all arrests in criminal cases where the offense is not punishable by death, except that in cases of robbery, burglary, kidnaping, extortion, or any crime of violence not punishable by death it shall be the duty of any person authorized to take bail to inquire into the source of the moneys, securities, or collateral offered, and if it shall appear that the moneys, securities, or collateral offered, either as cash bond or as fees to bondsmen, are the proceeds of any unlawful act of the accused, such bail shall be refused.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, let us have an understanding of the purposes of this bill. Is this one of the bills which was reported by the so-called " Crime Committee " of which the Senator from New York was a member?

Mr. COPELAND. It is. The bill makes it the duty of the judge or other person authorized to take bail to ascertain the source of the moneys or securities offered, and if it shall appear that any moneys or securities offered are the proceeds of a robbery, burglary, kidnaping, or any form of violence, or other unlawful act on the part of the accused, the judge or other person may refuse to accept such bail.

When the Dillinger gang was arrested in Arizona a year ago over $28,000 in money, which was ascertained to have come from robberies of banks, was used as bail money. The purposes of this bill, as well set forth, it seems to me, in the bill itself, is that bail shall be admitted upon all arrests in criminal cases where the offense is not punishable by death, except in such cases as I have recited, and it shall be the duty of any person authorized to take bail to inquire into the source of the money offered as bail.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. As I understand, the effect of the bill is to provide that money or property procured by burglary, robbery, or theft may not be used by the thief, or burglar, or robber for the purpose of making bail?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think it has a good purpose, and I am for it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I dislike to take issue with the distinguished Senator from New York, and the leader on this side, but I think it is a well-established principle that no one ever has any title to anything which he obtains through theft, or burglary, or any other crime, and, of course, no officer of the law, it seems to me, would accept for purposes of bail property to which the principal or the surety on the bond had no title or had no just claim. The difficulty——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thoroughly agree with the Senator as, of course, all lawyers would, that a thief or a robber acquires no title by his seizure of property in the ownership of others, but where a person is under arrest and he is found in possession of, say, cash, in order to avoid the delay which will occur in the adjudication of the ownership of the property, I think the officers might very well be authorized to confine the accused in jail so long as there appears to be reasonable evidence to show that the property or the money or other property offered for bail does not belong to him.

Mr. GEORGE. I would take no issue with the Senator, but that is just the vice of this proposed amendment to the law. It converts the arresting officer into a judicial officer. He is to determine if the citizen accused of crime is in possession of certain property which, in his judgment or as the result of his investigation and finding, he thinks the accused came by through thievery or robbery or some other criminal offense. I believe that the purpose of the bill, of course, is good, but the effect of it will be unfortunate in many cases. There is no need of clogging up the administration of the criminal law with legislation of this character. There are now too many officers in the country who are too free to exercise to the utmost their discretionary powers, and it seems to me the bill is unwise.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator in the statement just made, but the condition could be immediately corrected by the judge at all times and no harm could be done. For instance, if an officer is mistaken in not accepting bail, the prisoner would have a right through his attorney immediately to apply to the court, and the mistake, if one had been made by the arresting officer, could be corrected immediately.

Mr. GEORGE. This bill proposes to amend the law under which the prisoner has a right to bail. If the arresting officer or the officer whose duty it is to take bail exercises the power, the court would not interfere unless there be a clear arbitrary exercise of power. The objection I make is that the bill is wholly needless. It is cumbersome and will put into the hands of arresting officers a vast discretionary power which will be most burdensome to the citizen who is entitled to bail and who has the means of providing bail, but who, in the opinion of the arresting officer, has come by the property which he proposes to use as security in an illegal manner. All officers have the right anyway to refuse to accept anything in the nature of a cash bail if there be any question as to the validity or right of the party offering it to offer the property as a cash bail.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. The dreadful thing about this is, however, that such a thing has actually happened.

Mr. GEORGE. It may have happened.

Mr. COPELAND. We are attempting in every way we can to do away with kidnaping and extortion and modern crimes of violence which have to do with the invasion of the rights and lives of citizens. It actually has happened that money or securities in the way of negotiable Government bonds which bank robbers have taken from banks have actually been used for bail. It is to do away with that possibility that our committee thought it wise to recommend the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I should not question that it may have happened, but what will happen under the terms of the bill is that an arbitrary officer will in effect deny a citizen the right to bail by acting in the capacity of a judicial officer and determining that the man has come by the property in some one of the illegal ways set out in the bill. I cannot see any necessity for this kind of legislation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The word "unlawful", it seems to me, is very broad. It says, "money which is the proceeds of any unlawful act." It might require a trial to determine whether or not it was obtained unlawfully.

Mr. GEORGE. That is exactly my objection. I think if Senators will simply scrutinize the bill with the degree of care that it ought to have applied to its consideration, they will reach the conclusion which I have reached.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I entirely agree with what the Senator from Georgia has said. This bill would simply turn over to a police officer the right to deny bail to someone arrested on suspicion. Certainly we have not reached such a point in the United States that we want to give to policemen and people of that type the power which the bill unquestionably would grant. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I take it from what was said by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that they agree with the spirit of the proposal, but object to its language. It will be observed that the bill was introduced by the entire membership of the committee, consisting of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], and myself. I hope that we who introduced the bill may have the assistance of the Senators from Georgia, Montana, and Idaho to correct the language so we may reach this particular kind of devil. He is abroad in the land, and we have to find some way to deal with him. It seemed to us that this was the way to do it, and that was the view of the Judiciary Committee when our committee reported the bill to the full committee. I am satisfied to let the matter go over, and shall confer with the various Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On objection, the bill will go over.

AMENDMENT OF CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar 128, the bill (S. 213) to amend section 113 of the Criminal Code of March 4, 1909, Thirty-fifth Statutes, 1109—United States Code, title 18, section 203—and for other purposes. I asked the Senator who objected to withhold his objection until I can make a brief explanation of the bill. I shall not ask for action on it at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Kentucky may proceed.

Mr. LOGAN. When this bill was reached on the calendar recently the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] objected and made a statement which I hardly think was justified, although I do not like to disagree with him. He said the bill would make it a felony for a Senator to attempt to speed up action or ascertain the status of a matter pending before a department. I do not think that is a proper construction of the bill, and I know it was not the intention of the bill. I desire to explain in a very few words the purpose of the bill.

Section 113 of the Criminal Code at this time prohibits a Member of Congress from appearing for a fee or receiving consideration or compensation for his appearance before any department to aid any person, association, or corporation in any matter in which the United States Government is interested.

The bill would make some very slight changes in that law. In the first place, it proposes to include national committeemen, the chairmen of State committees, and the officers of the national committees, and to place them on the same basis on which section 113 of the code now places Members of Congress and provides that they may not appear before the departments for compensation.

The bill goes further. It would not allow Members of Congress to appear before the various establishments, commissions, and corporations in which the Government owns capital stock, either for compensation or without compensation. I receive hundreds of requests every day from constituents asking me to do things I cannot do and which I do not believe any other Senator would do. I do not believe, because no Senator is going to commit murder, that we ought not to have a statute against murder; or because no Member of Congress is going to commit burglary that we ought not to have a statute against burglary.

I know I have requests to go to the Attorney General of the United States to ask him to intervene or interfere in some prosecution. We are requested to go before departments and bureaus to appear in the interest of some particular person or corporation about a private matter. In other words, we are requested hundreds of times to do things, not because we are familiar with the facts, not because we are as competent to do it as a lawyer would be, but for the sole reason that our political influence is sought to appear before someone who will be afraid to deny our request when we make it.

We ought not to be allowed to recommend men for appointment to office and then appear before them and ask for some favor for a constituent of ours, or for anyone else.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point, as a part of my remarks, the report of the committee on Senate bill 213, which is Calendar No. 128.

There being no objection, the report (No. 126) submitted by Mr. LOGAN on the calendar day February 19, 1935, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred S. 213, proposing to amend section 113 of the Criminal Code of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. 1109 (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 203)), and for other purposes, report the same to the Senate with various amendments and recommend the adoption of the amendments and the enactment of the bill as amended.

The committee recommends the following amendments:

Amend by inserting in line 9, page 1, after the word "committeewoman" and before the word "of", these words: "or State or national officer."

Amend by striking out all of the language after the word "shall" in line 11 down to and including the word "whatever" in line 20 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "before any such department, independent establishment, board, commission, or other instrumentality of the United States, including corporations in which the United States may own any part of its capital stock whatever, render any service or assistance of whatever character for or on behalf of any person, firm, corporation, or any other association in relation to any proceeding, contract, claim, controversy, charge, accusation, arrest, imprisonment, or other matter or thing in which the United States is a party or directly or indirectly interested."

Amend by striking out the word "and" in line 21 and substituting therefor the word "or."

Section 113 of the Criminal Code of March 4, 1909, is substantially the same as section 1782, Revised Statutes, which was enacted on June 11, 1864. Section 113 of the Criminal Code as it now exists is as follows:

"Whoever, being elected or appointed a Senator, Member of or Delegate to Congress, or a Resident Commissioner, shall, after his election or appointment and either before or after he has qualified, and during his continuance in office, or being the head of a department, or other officer or clerk in the employ of the United States, shall, directly or indirectly, receive, or agree to receive, any compensation whatever for any services rendered or to be rendered to any persons either by himself or another, in relation to any proceeding, contract, claim, controversy, charge, accusation, arrest, or other matter or thing in which the United States is a party or directly or indirectly interested, before any department, court martial, bureau, officer, or any civil, military, or naval commission whatever, shall be fined not more than $10,000 and imprisoned not more than 2 years; and shall, moreover, thereafter be incapable of holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under the Government of the United States."

Section 1782, Revised Statutes, was before the Supreme Court for consideration in the case of Burton v. United States (196 U. S. 283 and 202 U. S. 344). A United States Senator had acted as attorney for compensation on behalf of a certain corporation which had violated the postal laws. In that case the Court held that the proper discharge of legislative duties "does not require a Senator to appear before an executive department in order to enforce his particular views, or the views of others, in respect of matters committed to that department for determination. He may often do so without impropriety, and, so far as existing law is concerned, may do so whenever he chooses, provided he neither agrees to receive nor receives compensation for such services. Congress, when passing this statute, knew, as indeed everybody may know, that executive officers are apt, and not unnaturally, to attach great, sometimes, perhaps, undue weight to the wishes of Senators and Representatives. Evidently the statute has for its main object to secure the integrity of executive action against undue influence upon the part of members of that branch of the Government whose favor may have much to do with the appointment to, or retention in, public position of those whose official action it is sought to control or direct. The evils attending such a situation are apparent and are increased when those seeking to influence executive officers are spurred to action by hopes of pecuniary reward. There can be no reason why the Government may not, by legislation, protect each department against such evils, indeed, against everything, from whatever source it proceeds, that tends or may tend to corruption or inefficiency in the management of public affairs. A Senator cannot claim immunity from legislation directed to that end, simply because he is a member of a body which does not owe its existence to Congress, and with whose constitutional functions there can be no interference. If that which is enacted in the form of a statute is within the general sphere of legitimate legislative, as distinguished from executive and judicial, action, and not forbidden by the Constitution, it is the supreme law of the land—supreme over all in public stations as well as over all the people. 'No man in this country', this Court has said, 'is so high that he is above the law. No officer of the law may set that law at defiance with impunity. All the officers of the Government, from the highest to the lowest, are creatures of the law, and are bound to obey it.' (United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196, 220.) Nothing in the relations existing between a Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress and the public matters with which, under the Constitution, they are respectively connected from time to time, can exempt them from the rule of conduct prescribed by section 1782. The enforcement of that rule will not impair or disturb those relations or cripple the power of Senators, Representatives, or Delegates to meet all rightful or appropriate demands made upon them as public servants."

By comparing the provisions of the proposed bill with the provisions of section 113 of the Criminal Code of March 4, 1909, it will be noted that the principal changes are in effect to place members of the National and State committees and certain officers of any political party under the same disabilities in the matter of practicing before the executive departments, boards, bureaus, and establishments of the Government as Senators and Representatives are placed by the provisions of section 113, Criminal Code, where any fee is charged for the rendition of such service. The proposed bill extends the prohibitions to all corporations where the United States owns any stock. Within recent years the Government has organized many corporations, either by act of Congress or through some other agency, for the performance of governmental functions. In the case of Strang v. U. S. (254 U. S. 491) the Supreme Court held that there was a distinction between cases where the Government was defrauded directly and where a Government corporation was defrauded.

The evils pointed out by the Supreme Court in the Burton case with respect to the practice of Members of Congress before governmental agencies for fees are not less when members of National or State political committees appear before such agencies in behalf of clients. Such powerful political figures may have been instrumental in causing the appointment of the particular Government officer before whom the controversy may be brought. It is apparent that those holding powerful positions in political organizations might exercise an undue influence before a governmental agency under our present system, which allows many Government officers to be appointed out of political consideration. President Roosevelt saw this evil as one that should be corrected when he called attention to it during the last session of Congress.

Section 113 of the Criminal Code prohibits a Member of Congress from making any appearance directly or indirectly on behalf of someone having a controversy with the United States before a Government agency for a fee. The evil exists whether a Member of Congress makes his appearance for a fee or gratuitously. Such appearances on the part of persons having political influence may operate to the detriment of the public service whether or not he receives compensation. It is generally true that when a Member of Congress is requested by a constituent to appear for him before a Government agency that it is the political influence of the Member that is sought. It may be true in some cases that those who have the power to act in determining a controversy are apt to attach great, and sometimes perhaps undue, weight to the wishes of Members of Congress or the wishes of members of national or State committees.

The purpose of the bill is to prevent the improper use of political influence in behalf of individuals, corporations, or associations having a controversy with the Government. Its passage would, to a large measure, maintain the separation of the legislative and executive branches of Government, which were required by the provisions of the Constitution to be kept separate.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, in order to meet the objection which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] thinks is a valid one, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill and ask that it be printed and lie on the table. I may say to the Senator from Arkansas that I desire his support for this bill. I have voted for all the bills he has asked me to vote for at this session, and I want him to help me get this one through. Therefore, I am trying to meet his objection. I have offered an amendment reading as follows:

Provided, however, the words "render any service or assistance of whatever character" shall not be construed as including (a) a request for information as to the status of any proceeding, contract, claim, controversy, charge, accusation, arrest, imprisonment, or other matter or thing in which the United States is a party or directly or indirectly interested; or (b) any request that any such matter be expedited; or (c) any transmittal of papers, briefs, or other matters to a department, independent establishment, board, commission, or other instrumentality of the United States, including corporations in which the United States shall own any part of its capital stock; or (d) the making of engagements for any person to discuss such matters with such instrumentalities of the Government of the United States; or (e) appearing before any department, independent establishment, board, commission, or other instrumentality of the United States, including corporations in which the United States shall own any part of the capital stock, concerning any such matter in which the people have a common interest: Provided further, That in doing the things herein allowed, except in (e), there shall be no expression of opinion as to the merits or demerits of any such matter pending before such instrumentalities of the United States herein mentioned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, in conclusion let me say that I have not the slightest desire to interfere with any Senator rendering legitimate service to any constituent. What I have in mind is to prevent, if it can be done, a Senator from being placed—to use the robust language of old Henry Watterson—" between hell and the iron works ", his constituents on one side asking him to do something which he knows he ought not to do, and his conscience on the other side telling him he must not do it. The only thing that we who favor the bill are trying to accomplish is to prevent the use of political influence to secure special favors against the best interests of the public to any particular individual, corporation, or association.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the amendment which the Senator proposes relieves in part the objection which I on a previous occasion asserted to his bill. He has questioned the correctness of the construction which I heretofore placed on the language of the bill as reported by the committee. Reading it again, I am convinced that it can have in law no other construction than the one which was placed upon it when I first spoke about the matter.

In order that Senators may have a picture of the view which is now being expressed, I call attention to the language itself. It provides that—

> Whoever, being elected or appointed a Senator, Member, or Delegate to Congress, or a Resident Commissioner, or a National or State committeeman or committeewoman, * * * shall * * * render any service or assistance of whatever character for or on behalf of any person, firm, corporation, or any other association in relation to any proceeding, contract, claim, controversy, charge, accusation, arrest, imprisonment, or other matter or thing in which the United States is a party or directly or indirectly interested, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 2 years; and shall, moreover, thereafter be incapable of holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under the Government of the United States.

It is true, as the Senator from Kentucky has stated, that a great many requests for intervention by Senators and Representatives are made by their constituents; but there are also numerous instances in which the constituents have no other opportunity of having their requests or their interests considered than through their Representatives in the Congress.

I recall that within the past few months a lady residing in a State other than Arkansas wrote me in regard to her boy, who had been convicted of a felony. The time had arrived for his parole. She had no lawyer. She had no money with which to employ a lawyer. She happened to have read my name in the press, and she wrote to me asking if I could not assist in getting her son paroled.

I wrote a letter to someone connected with the Government service, asked the status of the boy's application, asked the prospects of his securing a parole, and asked, if it be consistent with the interests of justice, that he be granted a parole.

That was a service to the poor woman which she regarded as of great value, and I was glad to perform it for her, even though it imposed upon me a task which was no part of my official duty as a Member of the Senate of the United States; and when, after months, I had succeeded in getting the boy's case considered, and a parole was granted, I received from her a letter expressing her gratitude, and stating that she did not know what she would have done but for the appeal to me which she had made, and my response to it.

If there is anything wrong in a Senator or a Representative attempting to get action, attempting to cut red tape, it is all right to enact this bill; but if we have confidence in and respect for ourselves, we ought not to be constantly providing penalties for harmless acts which would result in imprisonment and in heavy fines.

I sympathize with the purpose to relieve Senators and Representatives from the burden of performing unofficial tasks for their constituents, but there is another side to the controversy. So long as a Senator or a Representative does not receive compensation—and if he receives compensation for such a service he is unworthy of the name of Senator or Representative and violates existing law—and so long as he does not attempt to exert improper influence, but merely asks for the disposition of matters that may be delayed and for fair consideration of them, I think he ought not to be penalized as a criminal for the performance of such services to his constituents.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. The bill does not attempt to prevent any Member of Congress from rendering any assistance he desires to render to a constituent or otherwise. What the bill attempts to do is to prevent Members of the House or Senators from going before the Bureau of Internal Revenue, for instance, and asking that someone be refunded a million or two million or ten million dollars. It is to prevent Senators and Representatives and others from appearing before a bureau chief and saying, " If you do not award this contract to a particular friend of mine I will have you investigated." It is to prevent them from going to the Attorney General and saying, " I am the United States Senator from Kentucky and I want you to interfere."

What the Senator from Arkansas did, of course, was legitimate, and nobody is attempting to prevent action of that kind.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, what the bill seeks to do is to be determined by the language employed in the bill. The Senator from Kentucky, of course, will concede that to be so as a matter of law.

Mr. LOGAN. I will.

Mr. ROBINSON. The language is that if any Senator, Member, or Delegate to Congress, and so forth, shall " render any service or assistance of whatever character for or on behalf of any person, firm, corporation, or any other association in relation to any proceeding ", and so forth, he is to be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment.

What does " assistance " mean? It means aid. If a person asks a Senator to find out what the status of his case is before a bureau or a department, and the Senator does that, he renders a service or assistance to that person, and in doing so under this bill he would make himself liable to a fine of $10,000 or imprisonment for 2 years. As a matter of law, whatever may be the intention of the framers of the bill, no other conclusion, I think, is justified from the language employed in the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. With the Senator's last statement I can have no quarrel, when he says that he thinks that is a proper construction of the language; but I think I have perhaps had more experience in construing statutes than has the Senator from Arkansas, although he is a great lawyer and I admire his great legal mind. He is wholly wrong in this case, because he has not given to the bill the thought which he probably would give to it before voting upon it.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who is one of the great lawyers in the Senate, took a long time in considering this bill and revised the language and went over it time after time; and we decided that there is not a court in the world which would hold that it was rendering service before a department, if some man simply made an inquiry as to the status of a claim.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, for my part I do not desire to continue argument on the matter. The Senator from Kentucky has stated that other lawyers differ from the viewpoint which I express, and he has indicated that he has more confidence in their judgment than he has in my own.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not mean that, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is his privilege. I have great appreciation for the legal ability of the Senator from Kentucky. What I cannot understand is how, with all his experience as a judge and with all his ability as a lawyer, he could place on the language reported by his committee a construction which would mean that a Senator had to do something unethical or unlawful before he would bring himself within the inhibition of the bill.

The inhibition of the bill is that he shall render no service whatever to anyone—any person, firm, or corporation—in connection with any subject matter in which the Government is interested. The whole question hinges on the interpretation of the word "service." Whenever you do anything that gives assistance to any person, whenever you obtain information for him, whenever you get action for him, you are rendering a service, both within the meaning of the dictionary and within the meaning of the decisions of the court.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield the floor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire to submit a question to the Senator from Kentucky. The bureaus of the Department of the Interior administer the homestead law and various other laws having to do with public lands, such as the general leasing act. The Bureau of Reclamation administers the laws having to do with settlement of reclamation projects. The Indian Bureau administers laws having to do with leases and Indian reclamation projects, and so forth.

I should like to ask the Senator if a constituent of a Senator from a public-land State should write to that Senator and request him to make representations to the Commissioner of the General Land Office with respect to a homestead application pending before that Bureau, or to make representations with respect to an application for the extension of an oil and gas prospecting lease, would that activity on the part of a Senator not be prohibited by the terms of the bill which the Senator has brought to the attention of the Senate?

Mr. LOGAN. After mature consideration I might say the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary reached the conclusion that it would not; but, in order to meet the objections which some Senators have thought might flow from the language, I have prepared an amendment which will state specifically what we are trying to do.

I did not desire to start an argument at this time, but if any Senator who is interested in a question of this kind—and they all must be interested—will prepare an amendment to remove any objection he may have to the bill, I shall be very glad, so far as I am concerned, to recommend its acceptance. What I am trying to do, and what the others who are interested are trying to do, is to prevent Members of Congress from using their political influence to secure from other instrumentalities of the Government favors for individuals or others to which they are not entitled. That is the purpose of the bill. We do not want to go any further; but political influence should not be sold.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the purpose of the measure is all right; but, under the language of the bill, does the Senator think it would be a violation of the law for a Senator to go to see the Attorney General, for instance, and recommend a certain candidate for judge? That would be performing a service before a department, and I believe it would come within the terms of the wording of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, no. What has been said by the Senator from Arkansas and some of the others is illustrative of how dangerous it is to consider legislation without proper thought.

This measure first presupposes a controversy with the United States on one side and a citizen on the other, and a Senator, we will say, perhaps someone else, going before the department interested and interfering with a private claim in an effort to get the claim allowed in behalf of some particular person through political influence.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the language were limited to that, there would be great reason for passing the bill; but the bill as drawn, it seems to me, goes far beyond that.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator, perhaps, has not seen the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. McKELLAR. I heard the amendment read, and that makes some extension; but I do not think it covers the case.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I did not hear the language of the Senator's amendment, but notwithstanding the great ability the Senator says the Senator from Vermont possesses, and notwithstanding how great a lawyer he is, I submit that any lawyer who examines this language, "render any service or assistance of whatever character for or on behalf of any person, firm, or corporation", must reach the conclusion that it would prevent any Senator from writing to a department and saying, "Here is a claim from a veteran", or saying to the Indian Bureau, "Here are some Indians who have a claim, and I would like to have you look into the matter", or going to the Pension Bureau and calling attention to a claim for pension.

I recall to the Senator an instance in my own experience, where I rendered a service that would certainly come under this measure. A widow of a Civil War veteran asked me to try to secure a pension for her. I went to the Department and looked the matter up, and the Department and the officials of the Department said that she was not entitled to a pension. I introduced a special bill, and then my clerk went to the Department and discovered by examining the records that the widow was entitled to a pension. My clerk went to the Department again and found not only was she entitled to a pension but that she was entitled to back pension, and the Department then paid the back pension.

A valuable service was rendered to that woman, not through saying to the Department, "You have to do this because I am a Senator", but by going to the Department and examining the records of the Department and discovering that the head of the Department was wrong. We meet with that kind of cases.

With reference to what the Senator is trying to accomplish, an organization in my State wrote to me to this effect, "We want you to go to the Attorney General and ask him to dismiss an appeal which he has taken to the Supreme Court." I replied that I would not do that, and that I could not do it. Of course, such a thing would be wrong. It would not only be morally wrong, in my judgment, but it would be legally wrong to do that sort of thing. I cannot conceive of any Senator or any Representative who is right-minded going to a department and doing that sort of thing, and if one does such a thing as the Senator has pointed out, then he is not fit to sit in this body as a United States Senator.

After all, every Senator knows what is wrong and what is right; and if one goes to a department and demands, because he is a United States Senator, that the department do something that is wrong, or tries to get a refund of a tax when it is wrong, I would say there are laws upon the statute books at the present time which could reach that type of man and that type of act. However, the department heads become so arrogant that sometimes when an ordinary citizen writes to them his letter is ignored. But if he writes to his Senator, the Senator immediately looks into the matter; and if it is a just request, the department pays some attention to the Senator.

The language of this measure, without a question of doubt in my mind, goes far enough to cover any activity of any Senator in behalf of any constituent before one of the departments.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator—and then I shall have finished—that if it were left to me individually I would say that no Senator, being a member of the legislative department of the Government, and having been elected for the purpose of making laws for his country, had any business setting his foot in any other branch of the Government at all. He has no more right to go before the executive branch of the Government and ask for favors of any kind than he has to go before the Supreme Court. As a matter of fact, I realize that the things which the Senator mentions have to be done, and I do not want to interfere with them.

We have a civil-service law, and we are prohibited from doing anything about that except to recommend a man's character, and I have never heard of any complaint. That has solved many difficulties. We likewise have a Court of Claims. No Senator or Representative can go before the Court of Claims, either with or without compensation, without subjecting himself to the penalties of the law.

There ought to be some way of preventing what may be an abuse, because the people would not write thousands of letters here annually asking Members of Congress to do something which they know they ought not to do unless there is a belief in the minds of the public generally that Senators and Representatives get favors for their constituents.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. The mandate of the bill is as follows:

> Whoever, being elected or appointed a Senator, Member, or Delegate to Congress, or a Resident Commissioner, or a National or State committeeman or committeewoman, * * * shall * * * render any service or assistance of whatever character for or on behalf of any person, firm, corporation, or any other association in relation to any proceeding, contract, claim, controversy, charge, accusation, arrest, imprisonment, or other matter or thing in which the United States is a party or directly or indirectly interested, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 2 years; and shall, moreover, thereafter be incapable of holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under the Government of the United States.

I realize that the Senator has been on the bench for a great many years of his life, and as a judge and as a lawyer he realizes that it is unethical to approach a judge with regard to any subject which he has under consideration.

Mr. LOGAN. That is very true.

Mr. PITTMAN. But it must be remembered also that there are methods recognized by the courts by which one can approach a judge and present any matter over which the judge has jurisdiction. No one can approach a judge ethically except in the manner provided by law.

Let us see the difference between judges and administrative departments. The Senator says no department should be approached. That is absolutely true with regard to the judiciary, and is perfectly clear. But we have the administrative and the legislative branches of our Government, besides the judicial.

When a United States Senator is elected to the Senate he is elected to represent a sovereign State. At least that was the theory when the Government was established. A Senator was assumed to represent, as a part of the Federal Government, every citizen and every interest in his State. From the beginning he was the ambassador from a State to the Federal Government. His State had reserved every power and every right except those expressly granted to the Federal Government. As ambassador from his State to the Federal Government he was to see that the rights of his State were protected under the Constitution, and not only was he to see that the rights of his State were protected, but he was to see that the citizens were protected in their rights.

Now, we have created an executive department to carry out the law. I say to Senators that my State and the people of my State are just as much interested in the administration of those laws as they are in their enactment; and when we find that an executive officer whom we have directed through congressional act to do a certain thing is not doing it, it is our duty to go to him and say to him, "You are not performing your duty", or "You are violating your duty", as the case may be.

Mr. LOGAN. As an individual Senator?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. LOGAN. Should that not be done through the proper channels? Should a Senator not have an investigation ordered and the matter investigated by a committee, rather than have individual Senators giving orders? A Senator ought not to be hurling thunderbolts like Jove. He should not go around and say, "I am a Senator, and I will hurl my thunderbolts at you!" Let us do it in a proper way.

Mr. PITTMAN. Why should I call upon the Senator from Kentucky, together with some other Senators, to represent the State of Nevada and its interests, when he and they know nothing about them? I say that it is my duty, knowing my State, knowing its interests, knowing the laws which have been passed in its interest, when I see an executive officer of the Government neglecting his duty or violating his duty, to go to him, not only as an officer but as a citizen of my State, and as an honorable man, not afraid that I am going to do something dishonorable, because I am not, and tell him wherein he is wrong, and tell him that I demand that he do his duty. If he does not, then I will use such other remedy as the law may provide.

Mr. President, I dislike to have Members of this body constantly by innuendo, through legislation to cast suspicion on the honor and integrity of its Members, to leave the impression that this body is composed of dishonorable men, that this body has in it men who would go down to the Treasury Department or go down to the Board of Tax Appeals and say, "Render a decision for my client on this claim, or I will do something to you." It is too dishonorable ever to think of a man in this body doing such a thing as that. It is inconceivable. It is as inconceivable as to think that a reputable lawyer—and I say every lawyer in this body is reputable—would go to the Senator from Kentucky, while he was on the supreme bench, and say to him, "If you do not render a decision for my client, I will fight you in the next election." Did any lawyer ever do that to the Senator when he was a judge on the bench?

Mr. LOGAN. No lawyer ever did.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; and no lawyer would ever go down to the Treasury Department and make a threat there, or to the bodies of the executive departments determining whether a claim should be allowed.

Mr. LOGAN. Allow me to ask the Senator a question, since he is speaking in my time.

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. Why is it, then, if there is no such deceit throughout the country, that every Senator—I make no exception—has requests from people asking him to do things which he knows he ought not to do, and refuses to do, unless it be that the idea is wide-spread that favors are granted to Members of Congress, which have the effect of conferring certain privileges upon certain individuals and corporations to which they are not entitled, to the disadvantage of the public? Why are we continually asked to go and do such things if there is a wide-spread idea in the land that no Senator would do anything which would interfere with his purity?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say to the Senator that I have been asked time and time again by constituents to do unethical things. I have been requested to go to the Attorney General and ask him to dismiss a criminal proceeding. I incurred no embarrassment in denying such requests. I have, in the time of my practice, even been requested to go to the court trying a case and ask him to do something. I was not embarrassed by spurning such request. Oh, yes; we are constantly asked to do unethical things. Sometimes we might even be approached to do a dishonorable thing. But the fact that there is ignorance throughout the country, the fact that the masses of people may not understand ethics, the fact that they may not understand what the Senator and I understand, is no reason why we should handcuff ourselves and put ourselves in a cell for fear that, being persuaded by ignorant or dishonorable people, we are going to descend to dishonorable or unethical acts.

Mr. LOGAN. Let me say to the Senator that I do not believe there is a dishonorable man in the Senate or in the House. I do not think so. But would the Senator favor an investigation among the departments to find out what Senators and Representatives have sent to courts and have sent to departments and have sent to establishments in order to get some favor for a particular State or individual?

Mr. PITTMAN. I would not vote to pass such a resolution without some evidence, because I think such a charge would be false. I do not think there is a man in this body who is guilty of such a thing. I do not think anyone could bring a solitary bit of evidence here even to justify such a resolution as that. I challenge anyone to submit any evidence of such a charge.

Mr. LOGAN. Let me say to the Senator that I once knew very well a Member of Congress, who is now dead, whom I heard make a political speech urging as a reason why he ought to be sent back to Congress that he wanted certain things done for his constituents, that he made it a practice to go to the bureaus or departments every morning and tell them that if they did not comply with his requests—and he told what they were—within a certain time, he would get up on the floor of the House every day and denounce them and would ask for an investigation.

Such things might happen. I do not say they do happen, because I do not know. I believe the Members of Congress are honorable; but a Member is placed in a very awkward position when a powerful constituent, who may be a man controlling thousands of votes, who may be a man of untold wealth, who may be a man who contributes to your political campaign or mine, demands of a Senator of the United States that he appear before some department and make a demand for something in his interest. I believe Senators ought to be protected against such requests. I do not believe Senators will comply, but such requests sometimes place them in rather an embarrassing position.

I have said all I care to say about the matter.

Mr. PITTMAN. One dishonorable Congressman should not subject admittedly honorable Congressmen to libel of suspicion.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that I do not desire any protection to enable me to do what is ethical and to be honorable. I ask no protection, either by law or from the Senator from Kentucky or from any committee of this body. If I were not able to resist the bribery of wealth or the intimidation of power, I should not be here, nor should I deserve to be here, nor should I ever want to come back to this body again.

It is the position of the Senator from Kentucky that we must constantly prohibit people from saying things to us or asking us to do things for fear that we may yield to some improper request. But I shall pass that.

My State is as much interested in the administration of the laws we pass as in the passage of those laws. We realize that it is a fact that hundreds of bureaus in this country are destroying these laws. We realize that not only are they destroying these laws but under powers of making rules and regulations they are legislating. Therefore, when we pass a law, and we find that the Secretary of this department or the Secretary of that department has made a regulation repealing that law, am I to sit silently by and not go and call in his attorneys around him and tell him that he has repealed the law, and tell him that his regulation is wrong? Certainly I have that right, and I always want that right, and I intend to use that right.

I have found department after department in the Government violating the law which we have passed, and I have brought in their counsel and in some cases have been successful in having them change their regulations and change their practices. But the Senators say I cannot appear in behalf of an individual, a citizen of my State, or a corporation of my State, or a partnership of my State in any of these matters, even though I accept no compensation. Existing law prohibits a Senator from receiving any compensation for such services.

Suppose, for instance, there is a test case. Suppose, for instance, the ruling in regard to an individual in my State results in a violation of the whole law which we have passed, which will affect all the citizens of my State. Am I to say nothing? Am I to do nothing? Am I to cry out like a baby and say, "I have voted for a resolution to tie my hands; to prevent me from defending the rights of the citizens of my State"?

I say that we know today that if it were not for the independence we maintain here, if it were not for the fight which we make for our States, for our citizens, and our rights under legislation, the bureaus of our Government, which are arbitrary now to the greatest extent, would ignore the laws we pass. They would make their own laws. It is because the legislative body and the Members of the legislative body constantly watch them, criticize them, fight with them for the rights of an individual or anyone else, that such rights as we possess have been protected.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I assume the Senator has great respect for the American Bar Association. The committee on legislation of the American Bar Association has approved this bill as it was originally introduced.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have great respect for the Senator from Kentucky. I have as much respect for him as I have for any member of the bar association; but I have more respect for the United States Senate than I have for any individual or for the American Bar Association. I think I know more about the ethics of the United States Senate than does the American Bar Association. I think I know more of the duties of a United States Senator than does the American Bar Association. I think I know more about our Government than does the American Bar Association. I think I know more about what we as legislators, as Senators representing sovereign States and our constituents, have to contend with in all the departments of the Government, than does the American Bar Association itself. I should never vote for anything which would take any honorable, ethical power out of the hands of any United States Senator to fight for his State, to fight for his rights, to fight for enforcement of the laws which we pass, whether for a group of citizens or a single citizen. I think it is shameful that we should constantly desire to pass laws to place ourselves in monks' cells so that our constituents could not ask us to protect their rights under the law, against misfeasance or malfeasance upon the part of administrative officers.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the calendar be proceeded with until it shall be completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did Calendar No. 128, being Senate bill 213, go over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That bill was passed over some time ago.

PENALTY FOR FAILURE OF APPEARANCE AFTER BAIL

The bill (S. 17) making it a felong to willfully fail to appear after having been admitted to bail was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHEELER. Over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. WHEELER. I withhold the objection in order that the Senator from New York may make a statement.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this bill is another of the series introduced as a result of the so-called "Committee on Crime", and was approved at the last session, as I recall. It is designed to prevent the delay of trials by criminals who willingly forfeit bail until they have successfully intimidated the witnesses for the prosecution. A criminal who faces a heavy fine and long imprisonment is perfectly willing to forfeit bail, which, in many cases, is inadequate, in order that he may deprive the prosecution of the necessary witnesses to bring about conviction.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I am going to object to this bill at this time, but I merely wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that any accused person who jumps his bail can be apprehended at any time and prosecuted. So, I cannot understand how anything can be accomplished by making the jumping of bail a contempt of court, when, if a man jumps his bail and can be found he can be brought into court and kept in jail, for his bond may be fixed so high that he cannot get out again; he can be incarcerated indefinitely. Therefore, nothing would be accomplished, it seems to me, by the enactment of this bill.

As the Senator knows, for a considerable period I was prosecuting attorney, and I cannot see anything to be gained by providing that a man shall be brought in and punished for contempt of court and fined $10,000 when he cannot be found. Of course, if he can be found, he can be brought back and prosecuted for the original crime.

Mr. COPELAND. Do I understand the Senator is going to object to the bill anyway?

Mr. WHEELER. I am going to object anyway.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator is going to object anyway, I have no disposition to pursue the discussion, but I do wish to say that what the bill seeks was requested by many prosecuting attorneys and lawyers who have had wide experience in such cases. They thought that this would be a helpful bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I cannot conceive how any attorney could say that it would be helpful to punish a man for contempt of court unless he could be apprehended. In the first place, if he jumps his bail, they have got to catch him; and if they can catch him, they can prosecute him on the original charge, and the fact that he jumped bail and skipped would be evidence of his guilt.

Mr. COPELAND. If he jumped his bail because of a criminal charge brought in a State court and then crossed over into another State, under this bill, if it were enacted, there would be a way to bring him back under the Federal law, which now does not cover such a case.

Mr. WHEELER. There is now a method. At the present time if a man jumps bail and skips and goes to another State, he may be arrested in that State and extradited back to the State from which he came.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, if the Senator is going to object anyway, there is no use of discussing the bill. But I wish to say that it is utterly discouraging to a group of men who are striving, and have been striving for a long time, to try to protect the American people against crime and against criminals, when, in the most offhand way, objection is made to these bills. When they are presented they are objected to, passed over, without serious consideration.

I have no more interest than has any other citizen of this country who desires to protect his own family in the enactment of laws of this kind. But it has been pointed out to the committee by innumerable witnesses—not laymen, as I am a layman, but by eminent attorneys, district attorneys, criminal laywers, and members of the bench—that these bills would be helpful. They were brought here as a result of conferences held with some of the most eminent legal minds in the country. I would not ask anybody to take my opinion on a matter of law, but I do ask the Senate to have respect for the men who actually formulated these measures and have asked that they be presented for consideration.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the Senator tell me one eminent lawyer who approved of the bill which was discussed previous to the one we are now discussing, which proposed to turn over to a police officer the right upon suspicion to deny bail to an American citizen?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; at the right time I will give many names.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the Senator tell me now?

Mr. COPELAND. I cannot tell the Senator now. We listened to several thousand witnesses. I will be glad to collate the material; but there is no use even of doing that if the Senator simply says, "Oh, my own experience is sufficient to tell me that that is all nonsense." So we will let the measure go over for the time being.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I am not going to let the Senator put me in the position of objecting to bills which are for the protection of the American citizen. I submit that sometimes there is a great deal of fanaticism in the country and a desire to put upon the statute books bills which have no place there. After all, we are protecting American citizens when we keep them from being harassed by crooked police officers and that kind of people, as would happen in the event some of these bills were passed without any great thought being given to them except by someone who has been studying crime.

I am perfectly willing to follow the doctor in medical matters, but I refuse to take his advice and his judgment upon legal matters, and particularly matters which affect the prosecution of cases of this kind, because I was a prosecuting attorney for a considerable period of time, and I know something about the criminal laws now upon the statute books of the United States and what can and what cannot be done under them. It is perfectly foolish, in a period of hysteria, to place a lot of laws upon the statute books which would make prosecuting attorneys look ridiculous.

I come back again to the pending bill, which proposes to punish a man for contempt after he has jumped his bail. In the first place, it is necessary to catch him, and if he is caught he can be taken back. He has forfeited his bail; whatever the amount of money may be involved or whatever the bail is, he has forfeited that, and that is punishment for his action in fleeing. Then he can be taken into court on the original charge and prosecuted for that; and the fact that he has jumped his bail, left the State and run away, may be used as evidence against him. Nothing can be accomplished by this proposed legislation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I will suggest that such a man would be guilty of contempt of court, anyway, when he fled.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, let me say that one of the greatest difficulties prosecuting officers have in dealing with crime is to apprehend the witnesses. The principal can be extradited but the witnesses cannot be brought back; and one of the favorite practices in the cities—I do not think it is so in rural towns in Montana——

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Did the Senator say the witnesses cannot be apprehended?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; not when they cross the State line.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that he is wrong as to the Federal courts, because the witnesses can be apprehended.

Mr. COPELAND. I am not talking about the Federal courts.

Mr. WHEELER. I am talking about them.

Mr. COPELAND. I am talking about State courts.

Mr. WHEELER. But this is a Federal law which it is sought to pass.

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly. We are seeking by Federal law to try to get hold of someone who cannot be gotten hold of under State law. I repeat that when there is a fugitive witness who flees from the site of the crime, where he saw the crime committed, and crosses the State line, there is no power in the world to bring back that witness. If he was the principal, yes; but not the witness.

We have sought to bring here for the consideration of the Senate these bills. They have passed the scrutiny and judgment of the Judiciary Committee. My friend from Georgia stated a few moments ago that the bill we were just now talking about is a good bill. He said, "I disapprove of the other one." However, Mr. President, I have no disposition to continue the debate, but I am going to do what I can, in a modest way, to attempt to protect the people of our country against kidnapers and extortionists and burglars and murderers. However, I am frank to say that we get little encouragement from the United States Senate. Senators are more interested in economic questions than they are in questions which have to do with the social welfare, and also,

I may say, in view of recent experience, with the health of the country.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator is looking at me, I wish to say to him that I have very great sympathy for his bill and expect to vote for it, but I think we ought to complete the calendar. If the debate has not been finished on the measure last called, I hope that it may be speedily finished so that we may proceed with the calendar.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I merely wish to add a word, because there is nothing in Senate bill 17, if it should be enacted, that in any wise would help to bring back witnesses who have left a State. It has nothing to do with that.

Mr. COPELAND. I did not say so. I said that this was one of a series of bills seeking to accomplish something in the way of the protection of the American home.

Mr. WHEELER. The trouble is when doctors draw up bills they sometimes make mistakes. I am willing to follow the doctor on questions of health, as I did yesterday, without knowing much about it, but I am not willing to take his advice when it comes to legal matters, particularly a matter of this kind, with which I myself have had considerable experience.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator may laugh it off if he wishes, but this bill happens to have been prepared in the office of the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. WHEELER. That does not add very much to it, in my judgment.

Mr. COPELAND. That may very well be, but I at least want to absolve myself from the charge of having written this bill or any other, even the bill which the Senator supported so valiantly yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

GEORGE YUSKO

The bill (S. 566) for the relief of George Yusko was read, considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army George Yusko shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private, Company D, One Hundred and Fifty-seventh Regiment United States Infantry, on April 20, 1919: Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued by reason of this act prior to its passage.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein; to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics; and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BRIDGES OVER NAVIGABLE WATERS OF THE UNITED STATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1988) to revive and reenact section 5 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of certain bridges and to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of other bridges over the navigable waters of the United States", approved March 4, 1933, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "that", to strike out the words "section 5 of the act approved March 4, 1933, granting the consent of Congress to" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved March 4, 1933, to be built by"; in line 8, after the word "assigns", to strike out the words "to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto"; on page 2, line 2, after the word "Nebraska", to strike out the words "be, and the same is hereby, revived and reenacted" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from March 4, 1935", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by an act of Congress approved March 4, 1933, to be built by John C. Mullen, John H. Hutchings, and William Shepherd, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, across the Missouri River at or near Rulo, Nebr., are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from March 4, 1935.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Rulo, Nebr."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 87) to prevent the shipment in interstate commerce of certain articles and commodities, in connection with which persons are employed more than 5 days per week, or 6 hours per day, and prescribing certain conditions with respect to purchases and loans by the United States, and codes, agreements, and licenses under the National Industrial Recovery Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

OCEAN MAIL CONTRACTS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 93) to extend the time within which contracts may be modified or canceled under the provisions of section 5 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, before any objection is raised to the joint resolution, as, perhaps, there may be, although I hope not, I desire to state its purposes.

Under a provision of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act of last year the President of the United States was given until the 30th of April 1935 to amend or cancel ocean mail contracts. That is the very limit of time within which he may take action. It will be recalled that the President sent a message to the Congress requesting legislation providing for a ship subsidy. In the Senate the bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce. As chairman of that committee I received a letter from the Postmaster General a couple of weeks ago calling my attention to this provision in the independent offices appropriation act, saying it is necessary that the bill should be prepared, considered, and passed by the 30th of April.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not had time to go into the matter. It is a very important matter. I suggest to the Senator that it go over today and the next time the calendar is called I shall be glad to go into it thoroughly.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator permit me to complete my explanation?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; indeed.

Mr. COPELAND. I think when it is completed the Senator may be willing to let the joint resolution be passed today.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand what it is, but I have not examined the provisions of the act with which it deals, and for that reason I feel I should have an opportunity to do so before the joint resolution shall be passed. I hope the Senator will let it go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me explain it to the Senator first, if I may.

The Senator will remember that in the investigation which was made by the Black committee certain charges were made against some of the shipping lines. Acting upon information so gained, the Appropriations Committee determined to end ocean mail contracts. In the independent offices appropriation bill of last year it was provided that the President must give at least 60 days' notice of cancelation. He gave that notice and authorized the Post Office Department to make an investigation. That investigation was made and the information was passed on to the President who now has all the material before him.

As I said a moment ago, the Postmaster General jogged my memory by reminding me that the President had only until the 30th of April to make modification or cancelation of these contracts.

Mr. McKELLAR. It may be that the President ought to be given additional time, but this measure would repeal the existing law.

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, no.

Mr. McKELLAR. It strikes out "April 30, 1935", and so we must fix a new time.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me complete my statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. After I received the letter from the Postmaster General I went to the White House and had an hour's discussion with the President on the matter of the ship-subsidy bill and the whole question. I pointed out to him that I had this letter from the Postmaster General and told him it is utterly impossible for us even to formulate a bill before the 30th of April. As a matter of fact, we are a little ahead of that time. I hope that by next week we will have the bill ready for committee hearings and perhaps to report.

It is not reasonable to believe we can enact a new subsidy law and have it become a law before the 30th of April. The President discussed with me, if I may say so with propriety, the question of how long we should defer the date which is now fixed as of the 30th of April. We talked about a 1-year extension. The President indicated his desire to have the law enacted at this session of Congress. We discussed how long we might be in session. Finally, it was suggested that the time should not be extended longer than 6 months.

I was requested to have the joint resolution prepared, which I had the legislative bureau do. It does not change the law giving the President the right to cancel or modify the contracts, but pushes the date forward from the 30th of April to the 31st of October. Then our leader in the Senate discussed the matter with the President and reported that that was the expressed desire of the administration. I see no other way than to have a date fixed which is somewhere beyond the 30th of April.

Mr. McKELLAR. It may be I shall agree with the Senator, but I ask that the joint resolution go over in order that I may examine it.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator will do that speedily, will he not?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall do so.

Mr. COPELAND. It seems important because of the early expiration date. I shall ask the Senator at an early opportunity, as soon as he is ready, to give his permission to take up the matter, even though we may not have the calendar before us.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be glad to do that, but let the joint resolution go over now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). On objection, the joint resolution will be passed over.

SAN ANTONIO ARSENAL, TEX.

The bill (S. 1726) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant a right-of-way for street purposes upon and across the San Antonio Arsenal, in the State of Texas, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement relative to a situation now existing in my State, and I ask that the clerk may read it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if it can be read in 5 minutes I shall have no objection, but if it takes longer than that I must object.

Mr. SCHALL. The Senator from Tennessee has been taking longer than 5 minutes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest to the Senator that it be done after the call of the calendar shall have been completed.

Mr. SCHALL. It may be possible to read it in 5 minutes, but I think probably it will take 10 minutes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Minnesota may be allowed to have the statement read at the conclusion of the call of the calendar. It will not take long to conclude the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield for that purpose?

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, that is evidence why we should adopt the amendment to the rules which I offered months ago. It seems to me I ought to have the right to use the eyes of the clerk to have my statement read. I do not see why any Senator should object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Minnesota permit the Chair to say that we are now operating under a rule which limits debate to 5 minutes?

Mr. SCHALL. I know that, and I could use that 5 minutes to advantage to explain why a Senator who cannot see to read must be subjected to the will of some other Senator who rises and says, "I object."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair begs to say to the able Senator from Minnesota that the Senator from Tennessee apparently merely desired to call attention to the fact that we are working under a rule which limits debate on the part of any Senator to 5 minutes. The Chair will say, however, to the Senator from Minnesota that if the 5 minutes were exceeded in the reading of his statement, immediately upon the calling of the next bill on the calendar another 5 minutes would be available to him, and the Chair assumes that would not be denied to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SCHALL. I do.

Mr. WALSH. We have not adhered to the 5-minute rule during the calling of the calendar today, and I think it is rather unfortunate that it should be applied to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the reading of the speech will not take over 10 minutes, I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to inform the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senator from Tennessee withdraws the objection.

Mr. WALSH. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will have all reasonable time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the remarks will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

DIRTY WORK AT THE POLITICAL CROSSROADS

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial in the Minneapolis Tribune of March 30 under the caption "Dirty Work at the Political Crossroads." It describes the flight-by-night trip of the Federal seed-loan agency across the Mississippi to St. Paul with 30 truckloads of equipment "in the dim light of a waning moon", and is typical of the stealth of this administration in all its moves.

Every bill that has been crowded through Congress has contained a censorship, a secrecy clause. Twenty-five days after the President took the oath to defend the Constitution he stealthily crowded through the lower House, without even allowing it to be printed, a bill which would have put a publisher in jail for 10 years for daring to publish anything of which the administration did not approve. Treaties with foreign nations are today being made in star chamber, where the people concerned in this country are not even allowed to be represented. Every department is clothed in secrecy. All moves are made in the dark. The administration's secretly planned moves have had for their purpose a planned chaos that would so befuddle and bewilder the people that they might without protest be led into a fascistic or communistic form of government before they knew what had happened to them.

About a year and five months ago six great corporations, great holding companies, were organized in Delaware by order of this administration through four Cabinet members and nine bureaucracy heads. These great holding companies were organized in secret and in stealth—in the night without even a waning moon. Only a few of the chief conspirators were taken in upon the project, but Minnesota was honored with a representative.

These corporation papers were marked "Secret. Do Not Publish." These secretly organized holding companies were fashioned to make permanent the tremendous power given to our Executive by Congress under the guise of emergency, and were set in secrecy, like a trap in the dark, to catch the unsuspecting public and tie him tight to a fascistic form of government, while the planned chaos bewildered him and left him unresisting; but the chaos did not come as soon as contemplated, as will be seen if we remember the words of our Governor, the favored of the new deal in Minnesota. He went back to Minnesota from a conference here in Washington undoubtedly knowing of the organization and the purpose of the Delaware corporations, and caused to be drawn a Farmer-Labor platform in keeping with the purpose of the creation of these Delaware corporations; and he said at the time of the adoption of this fascistic platform of the Farmer-Labor Party that he, its candidate for Governor, was not a liberal, but was what he wanted to be, a radical; and he predicted that within 6 months the Federal Government would be taking over the key industries of the country. But the chaos planned by the administration and the Governor did not mature as soon as contemplated, and another 6 months were forced to slip by before the administration could secure the necessary funds with which to equip the contemplated machinery of attack, and these funds, $5,000,000,000 lump, are to be spent in secret, and punishment meted out to any publisher or anyone who dares at any time to criticize the method of expenditure.

These Delaware corporations, so secretly organized, are equipped to take over every industry in the country. I placed these articles of incorporation in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on February 6, and I have diligently inquired of those who should know what their purpose is, but again secrecy closes in about, and no one knows, for if the people knew they would protest being moved in the night to Moscow and Siberia by way of Delaware, as do the people of Minneapolis and elsewhere protest the stealth, the secrecy of the removal in the night of the Federal seed-loan agency.

The editorial pictures the "melodramatic secrecy" of sneaking down river without public notice to the farmers seeking seed loans. It refers to the successful functioning of the Federal seed-loan agency since its establishment by a former administration and a former Congress in 1931. It conjures up the "burglarious manner" by which Government agents, behind locked doors, with the possible cooperation of the War Department, the Secret Service, and Mr. Farley, with "brassy disregard of decency", folded up their tents like Arabs an silently slunk away.

We are under a new deal. The present purpose under the A. A. A. is not to aid agriculture, but to destroy it. The major offense of that Federal seed-loan agency was that it was efficient. It aided agriculture right along for 4 successive years.

Minneapolis, as the world's leading primary wheat market, was the logical place to locate a Federal seed-loan agency, where the wheat growers could get the seed from which they grew the 40,000,000 bushels of Minneapolis wheat receipts marketed from the threshing machines. Located at Minneapolis, the Federal seed-loan agency was a distinct factor in the farm-relief program of a Congress which stood for farm production instead of the A. A. A. idea of agricultural maladministration and assassination.

Though St. Paul is not a wheat market of note, nor yet a milling center for the extensive processing of cereals, St. Paul has been one of the leading shoe-manufacturing and shoe-jobbing centers of the West since the pioneer days of the Northwest Fur Co. A fly-by-night establishment needs footgear to execute its political maneuvers, and St. Paul has the shoes. Those Arabs directed by Farley, the sheik, and captained by Olson, his Bedouin tribesman, needed seven-league boots to escape the Twin City reporters; and St. Paul, though short of farmers, had the boots.

Have we considered the problem of Capt. Floyd Bedouin Olson, the commanding general who led the 3,000 tin hats down Nicollet Avenue and, at a loss of only 6 lives and 150 prisoners, inflicted upon the enemy—the business men and wage earners of Minneapolis and the farmers of the State—an expense conservatively estimated at $1,000,000 a day for 6 weeks? General Olson planned his campaign with great strategy. He confined his attack to Minneapolis, the principal market of the farmers' crops. He made no attack upon St. Paul, where 10,000 Olson officeholders were entrenched. He destroyed the farm market in violation of the Federal and State Constitutions, but carried out the fundamental aims of the A. A. A. and the N. R. A., as laid down by General Johnson and Under Secretary Tugwell.

Now, General Olson, as I have stated, derived his communistic platform, issued from his St. Paul convention, from the Federal charters written by Wallace, Ickes, Tugwell, Hopkins, and Morgenthau to give perpetuity to the A. A. A. and N. R. A. by incorporation in Delaware. Olson was familiar with those Delaware charters, as will be seen when we find that every word in Governor Olson's platform was derived from those Delaware charters. That is why he was so confident that the Washington Government would be putting over his communistic plan within "6 months." He got his St. Paul platform from those Delaware charters.

As a student of history, you will recall that General Washington laid the foundation of his great fame by breaking the ice to Delaware. Thus General Olson, instead of following the example of Eliza, as the editorial suggests, was doubtless aiming to follow the example of General Washington on the trip to Delaware. Thereby the 30 truckloads of patronage plunder and Federal politicians were moved successfully by the use of the superior shoes of St. Paul, and crossed the Mississippi by night to a safe sanctuary, where Kid Gleason and his pals stood ready on guard under the eaves of the State capitol.

For this feat of fly-by-night heroism, General Olson and General Farley are entitled to leather medals made from the hides of the 6,500,000 pigs which Wallace slew with the jawbone of Tugwell to make a Roman holiday—or, at least, from the hides of the 200,000 sows. St. Paul, in making shoes, does not need pig leather. That is better adapted to the Federal and Olson officeholders.

Thus, our new-deal history will record as the most melodramatic feat of this age of corn-hog checks and tin hats the night when General Olson crossed the Mississippi with 30 truckloads of Farley patronage and Delaware charters, and received a pigskin medal from Farley and a corn-hog check from Wallace—our new "Corn-Wallace."

The present rubber-stamp Congress might well be disposed to erect a statue of the "raw deal" on the capitol campus to displace that of Washington receiving the sword of Cornwallis at Yorktown. Surrender of the corn-hog check would take the place of the surrender of Cornwallis' sword. A cemetery for the 6,500,000 pigs and 200,000 sows would give us our "Porktown", where the "raw deal" revolution was concluded. It being a "left wing" affair, General Olson should be pictured as taking his medal with his left hand, while holding out his right hand behind him for the corn-hog check of our new "Corn-Wallace."

However, I doubt if the people of St. Paul, who are patriotic citizens, would want that statue located in Ramsey County. Perhaps if they had been consulted, they would have objected to the removal of the Federal seed-loan agency to their midst by the ambitious generals in charge. It is certain that they object to the sly, stealthy, secret method of removal, as they object to the general duplicity, fraud, and hypocrisy of the "slippery deal", the "raw deal", the "double deal", known as the new-deal administration, even though the administration's chief generalissimo, Hopkins, said Friday last that the people are "too damn dumb to understand."

Mr. President, may I have permission to have the editorial printed in the RECORD?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection being heard, permission is granted.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Minneapolis Tribune of Mar. 30, 1935]

DIRTY WORK AT THE POLITICAL CROSSROADS

The slinking of the northwest Federal seed-loan office to St. Paul, unlike Napoleon's retreat from Moscow, will probably not go down in history, but as a contemptible example of political racketeering, Minneapolis will not soon forget it. It seems they can still deal from the bottom of the deck in the new deal.

How many Federal departments collaborated on this fly-by-night removal of the seed-loan office we do not know, but if the War Department contributed the strategy, the Secret Service the tip-toeing technique, and Mr. Farley the brassy disregard of common decency, we should not be astonished.

It may be, after all, but another incident wherein the unctuous glad right hand of the administration is nonchalantly oblivious of what the political left hand does. And not the least amazing fact of all is the ignorance all those officially concerned profess on their solemn word. One could believe that this skulking transfer was what the insurance companies term "an act of God", so devoid of official responsibility does it appear. Nobody knows anything about it. It just happened. One of those things.

To believe that this transfer was made in good faith, and for public and sufficient reasons, would be considerably less idiotic if it had not been veiled in more melodramatic secrecy than attends a Dillinger movement of gold bars from a bank.

The truth of the matter is that the transfer of this office from Minneapolis, where it has been located since 1931, suggests anything but a straightforward, honest decision on the part of the responsible officials.

It had all the cheap smartness of a dead beat stealing a march on his landlord. One has but to consider United States Government agents in their official capacity turning out the lights and cowering behind locked doors to avoid reporters, to realize how pathetically shameful was the whole procedure. What a pitiful exhibition of the practical politics of the new deal.

Protest as Federal officials may, there is a nauseating odor of political jobbery about the whole business.

So far as we know, it is not the custom of Federal agencies to sneak out of town at night, with no advance notice, and in the jittery manner of a small boy racing a hobgoblin through a cemetery.

Compared to the furtiveness with which the seed-loan agency folded its tent and stole away to St. Paul, Mr. Longfellow's Arabs were a noisy lot of side-show barker. Eliza crossing the ice ahead of a pack of bloodhounds was reputed to have made good time; but the seed-loan agency, with no one in pursuit, and with 30 truckloads of equipment to cart across the Mississippi, made Eliza just a dawdling loiterer.

The Tribune believes that it is entirely possible that Minneapolis will somehow manage to survive without the Federal seed-loan office. Since the 1930 census gave this city a population nearly 200,000 greater than that of St. Paul, it is fairly plain that the removal of that office does not seriously threaten our civic security, nor for that matter involve an irreparable loss of business or prestige. The fact remains, however, that there was every good reason for keeping the seed-loan office in Minneapolis, where it was solidly established, and none whatsoever for moving it to St. Paul. As the larger city, this was the logical place for it. Every consideration of convenience and accessibility dictated that it be kept here. Yet the administration, without any notice, has seen fit to move it to St. Paul in the dim light of a waning moon.

If nothing else condemned the transfer, the stealthy, covert, and burglarious manner in which it was effected would.

In the Presidential election Hennepin County gave Mr. Roosevelt 119,234 votes, and Ramsey County 66,128.

What a fine show of political gratitude it is, then, to steal the Federal seed-loan office away from Minneapolis, where it has been functioning efficiently, without a word of warning.

If the administration has any sense of the fitness of things, if it does not wish to place the stamp of its approval on such a skulking and dubious political maneuver, it will restore that office immediately.

No excuses, no explanations, no wide-eyed protestations of innocence will take the place, so far as Minneapolis is concerned, of a full reparation of the wrong it has been done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of Senate bill 1726?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant an easement for a right-of-way to the city of San Antonio, State of Texas, to construct and maintain a street to be known as "Main Avenue", on the San Antonio Arsenal Military Reservation, Tex., on such terms and conditions as the Secretary of War may prescribe: Provided, That the construction and maintenance of said thoroughfare shall be without expense to the United States, and whenever the lands within said right-of-way shall cease to be used for street or highway purposes they shall revert to the United States.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN MILITARY RESERVATIONS

The bill (S. 2394) to authorize the transfer of certain military reservations to other departments of the Government, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby authorized to transfer to the departments of the Government hereinafter set forth the following military reservations, or any portions thereof, upon determination by him that said military reservations, or portions thereof, are no longer needed for military purposes: Provided, That in case any of these reservations, or portions thereof, shall at any future time become surplus to the needs of the department to which transferred, the head of such department is hereby directed to transfer the same back to the Secretary of War to be sold under the provisions of the act of March 12, 1926 (44 Stat. 203): Provided further, That in the event the transfer of any of these reservations, or portions thereof, is not desired by the departments hereinafter set forth, then the Secretary of War, after the expiration of 90 days following the passage of this act, shall be, and is hereby, authorized to sell such reservations, or any portion thereof, under the provisions of the act of March 12, 1926, supra.

To the Department of Justice: Park Field, Tenn.; Fort Eustis, Va.; Camp Lee, Va.; Alcatraz Island, Calif.: Provided, That the President may designate as migratory-bird refuges, to be administered under the provisions of the Migratory Bird Conservation Act of February 18, 1929 (45 Stat. 1222), such transferred portion or portions of Fort Eustis and Camp Lee aforesaid, as he may in his discretion determine to be desirable for such purpose.

To the Department of Agriculture: Fort DeSoto, Fla., to be held and administered by the Secretary of Agriculture as migratory-bird refuges under the provisions of the Migratory Bird Conservation Act of February 18, 1929 (45 Stat. 1222).

To the Veterans' Administration: Fort Miley, Calif.

To the Department of Commerce: Gasparilla Island, Fla.; Fort Popham, Maine; Fort Livingston, La.; Salisbury Beach, Mass.; Fort Dade, Fla., to be used for lighthouse purposes.

To the Treasury Department: Fort Caswell, N. C.; Fort Dade, Fla., less the portion to be transferred to the Department of Commerce.

To the Navy Department: A portion of the Mariveles Reservation, P. I., containing approximately 390 acres; Sequantum Reservation, Mass.

To the people of Puerto Rico: That certain tract or parcel of land within the Main Military Reservation, San Juan, P. R., containing 46.04 acres, more or less, known as the "Escambron Tract."

EXCHANGE OF LANDS AT MILITARY RESERVATIONS

The bill (S. 2395) to authorize exchange of lands at military reservations, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to convey by quitclaim deeds the tracts of real estate now owned by the United States hereafter described, and in exchange therefor to acquire the title to the tracts hereafter described, or rights pertaining thereto or interests therein, for the purposes named:

(a) Approximately one and seventeen one-thousandths acres of land at Randolph Field, Tex., in exchange for a like area of land adjoining Randolph Field, for the purpose of straightening the boundary of said flying field.

(b) Approximately 12.93 acres of land at Hamilton Field, Calif., in exchange for a like area adjoining Hamilton Field, for the purpose of straightening the boundary of said flying field.

(c) A strip of land comprising part of the Quartermaster Depot Military Reservation at Jeffersonville, Ind., lying along the right-of-way of the Louisville and Jeffersonville Bridge & Railroad Co. as part of the consideration for land now owned by said railroad company lying adjacent to the main section of said depot.

(d) To enter into and execute an agreement or agreements with the owners or claimants of adjoining land to fix and establish a location for the western boundary line of that part of the Plattsburg Barracks Military Reservation, N. Y., acquired from Pliny Moore, and others, by deed dated December 30, 1814, and he may, if he deems it advisable, give to or receive from such owners or claimants appropriate releases, by way of quitclaim deeds or otherwise.

SEC. 2. That in conveying property of the United States under authority contained in this act, the Secretary of War shall determine that the exchange is to the best interest of the Government.

MILEAGE PAYMENTS TO BUREAU OF RECLAMATION EMPLOYEES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1402) providing payment to employees, Bureau of Reclamation, for mileage traveled in privately owned automobiles, which had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation with amendments, on page 1, line 9, after the word "suspended", to strike out "and/or" and insert "and"; and on page 2, line 2, after the word "suspensions", to strike out "and/or disallowances" and insert "and disallowances", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General is hereby authorized and directed to credit disbursing agents of the Bureau of Reclamation for payments made as mileage reimbursement for the use, during the period of February 14, 1931, to April 30, 1932, of privately owned motor vehicles, in accordance with the act of February 14, 1931 (46 Stat. 1146), which payments were suspended and disallowed pursuant to the decision of the Comptroller General of April 30, 1932 (A–41688). In those cases where collections have been made from employees pursuant to such suspensions and disallowances, refunds are authorized.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DR. PAK CHUE CHAN

The bill (S. 2013) to provide for the issuance of a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. Pak Chue Chan, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any limitation relating to the time within which an application for a license must be filed, the Commission on Licensure to Practice the Healing Art in the District of Columbia is authorized and directed to issue a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. Pak Chue Chan, of Washington, D. C., in accordance with the provisions of the first paragraph of section 24 of the Healing Arts Practice Act, District of Columbia, 1928.

PREVENTION OF BLINDNESS IN INFANTS

The bill (S. 2153) to provide for the prevention of blindness in infants born in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, at the request of the author of this bill, the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], I ask that it go over. The Senator said he desired to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CONSTRUCTION OF PIPE LINES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2197) to permit construction, maintenance, and use of certain pipe lines for petroleum and petroleum products in the District of Columbia, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 2, line 10, after the word "therewith" and the comma, to insert the words "and all plans and specifications for such construction shall be subject to their approval. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have full authority to designate the location and to cause such repairs or relocation of said pipe lines as the public necessity may require, any such repairs or relocation to be at the expense of the Smoot Sand & Gravel Corporation, its successors, or assigns", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered to grant permission to the Smoot Sand & Gravel Corporation, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, the owner of squares 705, 707, and east of 708, and part of square 708, in the District of Columbia, its successors and assigns, to lay down, construct, maintain, and use pipe lines for the carriage of petroleum and petroleum products from any point or points within any such square or such part of square, in and through Half Street, First Street, P Street, Q Street, R Street, Potomac Avenue, reservation 246 and reservation 247, to any point or points within any such square or such part of square, or to the pierhead line of the Anacostia River.

SEC. 2. All the construction and use provided for herein shall be under such regulations and rentals as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may make and establish in connection therewith, and all plans and specifications for such construction shall be subject to their approval. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have full authority to designate the location and to cause such repairs or relocation of said pipe lines as the public necessity may require, any such repairs or relocation to be at the expense of the Smoot Sand & Gravel Corporation, its successors, or assigns.

SEC. 3. No permission granted or enjoyed hereunder shall vest any right, title, or interest in or to the land within the streets or reservations referred to in section 1.

SEC. 4. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask whether the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has examined the bill?

Mr. KING. Yes; it was introduced by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and is approved by the District Commissioners. It is merely to grant a right-of-way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOMICIDES CAUSED BY NEGLIGENCE IN THE DISTRICT

The bill (S. 2100) to amend an act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, as amended by adding three new sections to be numbered 802 (a), 802 (b), and 802 (c), respectively, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah state how this bill proposes to change the present law? What is the penalty now for homicide caused by negligence?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, representations have been made by Mr. Prettyman, corporation counsel of the District of Columbia, based upon his experiences, to the effect that convictions cannot be secured under the present law because of the fact that the grade of the offense as determined by willfulness is not always apparent. It has been suggested that for negligent driving, and for homicide which results by reason thereof, the offenses be differentiated, and where the charge is merely negligent driving it shall be held a less serious offense.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LOANS FOR MUNICIPAL BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2035) to amend an act approved June 25, 1934, authorizing loans from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works for the construction of certain municipal buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, on page 2, line 9, after the word "court", insert the words "the recorder of deeds", and at the end of the bill add a new section, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act approved June 25, 1934 (Public, No. 465, 73d Cong.), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to borrow for the District of Columbia from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, created by the National Industrial Recovery Act, and said Administration is authorized to lend to said Commissioners the sum of $10,750,000, or any part thereof, out of funds authorized by law for said Administration, for the acquisition, purchase, construction, establishment, and development of a tuberculosis hospital, a sewage-disposal plant, an extension of or addition to Gallinger Municipal Hospital, a jail or other enclosure for prisoners at Lorton, Va., and a building or buildings for the police court, the municipal court, the recorder of deeds, and the juvenile court, or any of them, said court buildings to be located on such portions or parts of Judiciary Square, or the area bounded by Fourth and Fifth Street, D and G Streets, NW., as shall be approved by said Commissioners, and the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, or any one or more of said projects as the said Commissioners may determine."

SEC. 2. That section 3 of said act is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Provided, That whenever the District of Columbia is under obligation by virtue of the provisions of section 4 of said Public Act No. 284 (71st Cong.) reimbursement shall be not less than $300,000 in any one fiscal year."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATISTICS AS TO PEANUTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 81) to provide for the collection and publication of statistics of peanuts by the Department of Agriculture, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to collect and publish statistics of raw peanuts, shelled, unshelled, and crushed, and peanut oil, in the United States, in the possession of warehousemen, brokers, cleaners, shellers, dealers, growers' cooperative associations, or owners other than the original producers of peanuts. Such statistics shall show the quality of peanuts in such details as to kinds—Virginias, Runners, Spanish, and imported varieties—as the Secretary shall deem necessary for the purposes of this act. All reports except those required from persons owning or operating peanut picking or threshing machines shall be submitted monthly in each year.

SEC. 2. The Secretary is hereby authorized to collect and publish statistics of the quantity of peanuts picked or threshed by any person owning or operating peanut picking or threshing machines.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of every warehouseman, broker, cleaner, and/or sheller, dealer, growers' cooperative association, owner and/or operator of peanut picking or threshing machines to furnish promptly upon request of the Secretary, within the time prescribed by him, completely and correctly to the best of his knowledge, a report of the quantity of peanuts on hand and in the case of an operator of peanut picking and threshing machines the quantity picked or threshed, segregating in accordance with forms furnished for the purpose by the Secretary. Any person required by this act, or the regulations promulgated thereunder, to furnish reports or information, and any officer, agent, or employee thereof who shall refuse or willfully give answers that are false and misleading, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $300 nor more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or to be subject to both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 4. The Secretary is hereby authorized to establish and promulgate grades and standards for the classification of peanuts, whenever in his discretion he may see fit.

SEC. 5. That the information furnished under the provisions of this act shall be used only for the statistical purposes for which it is supplied. No publication shall be made by the Secretary whereby the data furnished by any person can be identified, nor shall the Secretary permit anyone other than the sworn employees of the Department of Agriculture to examine the individual reports.

SEC. 6. The Secretary may make rules and regulations as may be necessary in the administration of this act and may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, any State, Territory, District, or possession, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or any person; and shall have the power to appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees not in conflict with existing law, and make such expenditures for rent outside the District of Columbia, printing, binding, telegrams, telephones, law books, books of reference, publications, furniture, stationery, office equipment, travel, and other supplies and expenses, including reporting services, as shall be necessary to the administration of this act in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and as may be appropriated for by Congress; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for such purpose.

SEC. 7. That when used in this act—

(1) The term "person" includes individuals, partnerships, corporations, and associations;

(2) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Georgia explain what this bill would accomplish?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the bill is recommended by the Department of Agriculture. A similar bill has hitherto passed the Senate, and received a favorable report in the House of Representatives.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

Mr. GEORGE. The amendment is the substitution of another bill having the same purpose in mind, a bill which I prepared and introduced at a previous session of Congress, and the Secretary of Agriculture has in his report stated that he prefers the other bill. For that reason all after the enacting clause is recommended to be stricken out, and the bill introduced at the previous session of the Congress substituted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSETTA LAWS

The bill (H. R. 2128) for the relief of Rosetta Laws was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers William Laws, who was a member of Company F, Twentieth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organziation on the 6th day of October 1865: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I wish to submit a request. Shortly after the beginning of the present session I introduced Senate bill 491, for the relief of Fred Herrick, and the bill was referred to the Committee on Claims. Earlier in the session a similar bill had been introduced and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry made a very careful inquiry concerning the measure, held formal hearings, and filed a report, and after its consideration I am sure that committee had a very complete understanding of the bill. I think it unfortunate that Senate bill 491 should have been referred to the Committee on Claims under the circumstances, and I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRANSFER OF LANDS TO THE YAVAPAI INDIANS

The bill (S. 1469) to transfer certain lands from the Veterans' Administration to the Department of the Interior for the benefit of Yavapai Indians, Arizona, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction over that tract of land, identified under a metes-and-bounds description beginning at the intersection of the west boundary line of the former Whipple Barracks Military Reserve and the south line of section 28 in township 14 north, range 2 west, Gila and Salt Lake meridian, Arizona, thence northwesterly along said west boundary line 880 feet; thence northeasterly at right angles 1,760 feet; thence southeasterly parallel with the said west boundary line 1,760 feet; thence southwesterly at right angles 1,760 feet; thence northwesterly along said west boundary line 880 feet to point of beginning, containing approximately 75 acres, is hereby transferred from the Veterans' Administration to the Department of the Interior, and the title to said described lands shall remain in the United States in trust for the Yavapai Indians.

SAMUEL KAUFMAN

The bill (H. R. 3105) for the relief of Samuel Kaufman was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

WATER USERS ON IRRIGATION PROJECTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1305) to further extend the operation of the act entitled "An act to further extend the operation of the act entitled 'An act for the temporary relief of water users on irrigation projects constructed and operated under the reclamation law', approved April 1, 1932", approved March 27, 1934, which had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation with an amendment to add a proviso at the end of the bill so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all of the provisions of the act entitled "An act to further extend the operation of the act entitled 'An act for the temporary relief of water users on irrigation projects constructed and operated under the reclamation law', approved April 1, 1932", approved March 27, 1934, be, and all of the provisions thereof are hereby, further extended for the period of 1 year: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not take effect as to a reclamation district or project when the Secretary of the Interior finds from the evidence at hearings held within a district or project, at which hearings representatives of such district or project are given an opportunity to testify and be heard, that such district or project, or the homesteaders thereon, are financially able to meet the obligations due, or to become due, to the Government and without undue burden: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall immediately report to the Congress the districts or projects that he has by his findings excluded from the benefits of the provisions of this act, together with the evidence submitted at such hearings.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I desire to offer a further amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add at the proper place the following:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to extend to water users on Indian irrigation projects during the calendar years 1934 and 1935 like relief to that provided in the acts of January 26, 1933 (47 Stat. 776), and March 3, 1933 (47 Stat. 1427), applicable to the calendar years 1931, 1932, and 1933.

Mr. HAYDEN. I might explain, Mr. President, that on two former occasions Congress has extended relief to water users on Federal reclamation projects, and subsequently, on two separate occasions, has extended like relief to water users on Indian irrigation projects. I have taken up the matter with the Senator in charge of the bill, and it seemed to me that the proper thing to do was to care for the entire situation in one piece of legislation without requiring Congress to act twice on the same subject matter. For that reason I have offered the amendment.

The two acts referred to in my amendment are as follows:

[PUBLIC—No. 320—72D CONGRESS]

S. 3675

An act relating to the deferment and adjustment of construction charges for the years 1931 and 1932 on Indian irrigation projects

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to defer the payment of such of the construction charges as are in default for the calendar year 1931 on irrigation projects under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and to adjust the construction charges for the calendar year 1932 on such projects, in the same manner and under the same terms as provided by the act of Congress for the temporary relief of water users on irrigation projects constructed and operated under the reclamation law, approved April 1, 1932 (Public, No. 70, 72d Cong.).

Approved, January 26, 1933.

[PUBLIC—No. 417—72D CONGRESS]

S. 5525

An act to extend temporary relief to water users on irrigation projects on Indian reservations, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to extend to water users on Indian irrigation projects like relief to that provided in an act approved April 1, 1932, applying to water users under the reclamation law for the remaining half of such charges due for the calendar year 1932 and for all similar charges to become due for the calendar year 1933, the said Secretary to issue appropriate regulations for the carrying out of the provisions of this act.

Approved, March 3, 1933.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to further extend relief to water users on United States reclamation projects and on Indian irrigation projects."

WALTER L. ROSASCO

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1789) for the relief of Walter L. Rosasco, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the Veterans' Administration is authorized and directed to pay Walter L. Rosasco, a former flying cadet, Air Corps, United States Army, in the form of compensation, the sum of $100 per month as long as his present rate of disability continues, and to readjust this compensation in accordance with further findings as to said Rosasco's condition under existing compensation laws.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I recall to the Senator from Utah that the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] previously brought this bill up in different form and the Senator from Utah suggested a certain line of action, which line of action was adopted as an amendment to the bill, and it passed the Senate in that shape in the last Congress.

Mr. KING. Then, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Walter L. Rosasco."

STEPHEN SOWINSKI

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2045) for the relief of Stephen Sowinski, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "Battery D, Second Regiment", and to insert in lieu thereof "Casual Detachment, Second", so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Stephen Sowinski, late of Casual Detachment, Second United States Field Artillery, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 4th day of August 1909 for disability of epilepsy (grand mal) incurred in the service in line of duty: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACCOUNT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND CONNECTICUT

The bill (S. 993) directing the Comptroller General to adjust the account between the United States and the State of Connecticut was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General is hereby authorized and directed to investigate and reexamine the account between the United States and the State of Connecticut with respect to advances and expenditures made by such State for military purposes during the War of 1812–15 with Great Britain, and after applying to such account the rules applied to the settlement of a similar account between the United States and the State of Maryland under the act entitled "An act authorizing the payment of interest due to the State of Maryland", approved May 13, 1826, as amended by section 12 of the Civil Appropriation Act, approved March 3, 1857, to submit to the Senate a report containing a restatement of such account with interest computed according to such rules.

PURCHASE OF UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT DECISIONS AND DIGEST

The bill (S. 1589) authorizing the purchase of United States Supreme Court decisions and digest was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Librarian of the Congressional Library is hereby authorized and directed to purchase in the open market at the lowest and best price for the respective offices of each member of the Senate and House of Representatives, the complete United States Supreme Court Reports, with Rose's notes, bound in first 60 books and the current supplement to Rose's notes and the complete digest of all decisions to date. Said books are to remain and be the property of the United States of America and to be left in said offices by said Senators and Representatives at the expiration of their term of office for the use and benefit of their successors in office.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, my attention has been called to Senate bill 1589, Order of Business 418. I intended to ask that the bill go over unless an explanation were made of it. My understanding is that the bill provides for the purchase of the Supreme Court Reports, with Rose's notes for all Senators and all Representatives, and perhaps for other officials of the Government. I should like to have the bill go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. I notice that the Government would retain title to the books, however.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah would have to ask for a reconsideration of the votes by which the bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], I think, made an objection, but the Chair did not hear the objection. I ask unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill was read the third time, and passed, be reconsidered.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I inquire what bill is referred to?

Mr. KING. It is Senate bill 1589, Calendar No. 418, authorizing the purchase of United States Supreme Court decisions and digest. I ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the votes by which the bill was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. I now ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AVIATION CADETS IN NAVAL AND MARINE CORPS RESERVES

The bill (H. R. 5577) to provide for aviation cadets in the Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the grade of aviation cadet is hereby created in the Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve. Aviation cadets shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy from male citizens of the United States under such regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That each aviation cadet shall sign an agreement, with the consent of his parent or guardian, if he be a minor, to serve for a continuous period of 4 years on active duty, unless sooner released: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to discharge at any time any aviation cadet, or to release him from active duty. Aviation cadets shall, if qualified, be eligible after completion of their period of active duty, for commission in the Naval Reserve or in the Marine Corps Reserve, with date of precedence as of date of appointment as aviation cadet.

SEC. 2. The pay of aviation cadets while on active duty undergoing training shall be at the rate of $75 per month, which pay shall include extra pay for flying risk, as provided by law. The pay of aviation cadets while on active duty not undergoing training shall be at the rate of $125 per month, which pay shall include extra pay for flying risk, as provided by law. The determination of the Secretary of the Navy as to the period during which aviation cadets are undergoing training shall be conclusive for all purposes. Aviation cadets shall be paid, in addition, a money allowance for subsistence of $1 per day. While traveling under orders to or from active duty, or while in the performance of such duty they shall, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, receive transportation and other necessary expenses incident to such travel, or cash in lieu thereof: Provided, That when traveling by air under competent orders, they shall receive the same allowances for traveling expenses as are now or may hereafter be authorized by law for officers of the Navy.

SEC. 3. Aviation cadets shall, while undergoing training, be issued necessary uniforms and equipment at Government expense. Upon first assignment to duty after the completion of training, aviation cadets shall, in addition, be paid a uniform allowance of $150.

SEC. 4. Aviation cadets shall, except as otherwise provided in this act, be subject to all the laws and regulations prescribed for other members of the Naval Reserve or the Marine Corps Reserve. They shall take precedence next before warrant officers of the Naval Reserve or Marine Corps Reserve: Provided, That when aviation cadets contract sickness or disease or suffer injury in line of duty while performing active duty, they may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be retained on such active-duty status beyond the specified date of termination thereof.

SEC. 5. During their period of active duty aviation cadets will be issued Government life insurance in the amount of $10,000, the premiums on which shall be paid out of current appropriations as provided in section 7. Upon discharge or upon completion of active duty, aviation cadets will have the option of continuing such policies at their own expense.

SEC. 6. Aviation cadets of the Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve shall, upon release from a period of active duty of 4 years or more, be paid a lump sum of $1,500, which sum shall be in addition to any pay and allowances which they may otherwise be entitled to receive.

SEC. 7. The pay and allowances of aviation cadets of the Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve and the premiums on their life insurance shall be paid from the current appropriations "Naval Reserve" and "Pay, Marine Corps", respectively.

BITTER ROOT IRRIGATION PROJECT

The bill (S. 946) to amend sections 3 and 4 of the act of July 3, 1930, entitled "An act for the rehabilitation of the Bitter Root irrigation project, Montana" was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I do not see the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] in the Chamber. If there is no Senator here familiar with the bill, I will ask that it go over.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think there should be an explanation of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, a bill similar to this passed the Senate at the last session and was tied up in the last hours of the session in the House. It is a bill which gives the Secretary of the Interior the power to enter into a contract with the Bitter Root Irrigation District identical with the power which he has with reference to other irrigation districts throughout the country.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why does he not have that power now?

Mr. WHEELER. Because of the fact that this irrigation district was taken over by the Government subsequent to the taking over of the other irrigation districts which are under the control of the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 8, after the word "Provided", to strike out "That interest now due and unpaid, and interest become due and payable July 1, 1934, shall be added to and merged with the principal sum advanced under component (1)" and in lieu thereof to insert "That all interest now due and unpaid on component (1) shall be added to and merged with the principal sum advanced under that component"; in line 15, after the word "paid", to strike out "on component (1)"; and in line 16, after the word "under", to add "the", so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to negotiate and execute a contract with the Bitter Root Irrigation District, amending as provided herein aricles 3 and 6 of the contract dated August 24, 1931, between the United States of America and said irrigation district. The amended contract shall segregate the district's obligation into two components: (1) All money advanced to the district under section 2, subsection (1) of the act of July 3, 1930, for liquidating bonded and other outstanding indebtedness of said district; and (2) all moneys advanced or used under section 2, subsections (2) and (3) of said act for construction, betterment, and repair work. All money advanced under component (1) shall be repaid to the United States within the period fixed in said contract, with interest at 4 percent per annum until paid: Provided, That all interest now due and unpaid on component (1) shall be added to and merged with the principal sum advanced under that component. Nothing herein contained shall be construed as authorizing a modification in said amendatory contract of the interest charges heretofore paid by the district under the contract of August 24, 1931.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 20, after "United States", to insert "without interest", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. The amended contract shall provide also that all money advanced or used under section 2, subsections (2) and (3) of the act of July 3, 1930, shall be repaid to the United States without interest within the period fixed in said contract, and in the case of default in the payment when due of any installment fixed by the Secretary for repayment of money advanced or used under said section 2, subsections (2) and (3), there shall be added to the payment unpaid a penalty of one-half of 1 percent of the amount unpaid on the 1st day of each month thereafter so long as such default shall continue.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPRESSION OF PROSTITUTION IN THE DISTRICT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 405) for the suppression of prostitution in the District of Columbia, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the words "for any", to strike out "female" and insert "person"; in line 9, after the word "follow", to insert "him or"; in the same line, after the words "her to", to insert "his or"; on page 2, line 1, after the word "any", to strike out "female" and insert "person"; in line 5, after the word "follow", to insert "him or"; in line 11, after the word "any", to strike out "woman" and insert "person"; and in line 12, after the words "ill fame", to strike out "or who associates with women of bad character for chastity, either in public, or at a place which men of bad character frequent or visit", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall not be lawful for any person to invite, entice, persuade, or to address for the purpose of inviting, enticing, or persuading any person or persons, in or upon any avenue, street, road, highway, open space, alley, public square, or inclosure in the District of Columbia, to accompany, go with, or follow him or her to his or her residence, or to any other house or building, inclosure, or other place, for the purpose of prostitution, or any other immoral or lewd purpose, under a penalty of not more than $100 or imprisonment for not more than 90 days, or both. And it shall not be lawful for any person to invite, entice, or persuade, or address for the purpose of inviting, enticing, or persuading any person or persons from any door, window, porch, or portico of any house or building to enter any house, or go with, accompany, or follow him or her to any place whatever, for the purpose of prostitution, or any other immoral or lewd purpose, under the like penalties herein provided for the same conduct in the streets, avenues, roads, highways, or alleys, public squares, open spaces, or inclosures.

SEC. 2. Any person who frequents or lives in houses or other establishments of ill fame, or who (whether married or single) engages in or commits acts of fornication for hire, shall be considered a vagrant, and subject to the penalties provided in section 8 of an act entitled "An act for the preservation of the public peace and the protection of property within the District of Columbia, approved July 29, 1892", and as amended by act of Congress approved March 3, 1909.

SEC. 3. Section 7 of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the preservation of the public peace and the protection of property within the District of Columbia", approved July 29, 1892, is hereby repealed.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 477) to provide for the appointment of two additional judges for the southern district of New York and two additional judges for the southern district of California was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DOMINICK EDWARD MAGGIO

The bill (S. 880) for the relief of Dominick Edward Maggio was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Navy, Dominick Edward Maggio shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the United States Navy on the 24th day of September, 1924: Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

ALBERT LAWRENCE SLINEY

The bill (S. 882) for the relief of Albert Lawrence Sliney was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Navy Albert Lawrence Sliney shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the United States Navy on the 19th day of June 1922: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

REIMBURSABLE INDIAN IRRIGATION FUNDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1531) to credit the Fort Belknap Indian tribal funds with certain amounts heretofore expended from tribal funds on irrigation works of the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, Mont., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the amount of tribal funds of the Fort Belknap Indians heretofore expended for construction and operation and maintenance of irrigation systems on the Fort Belknap Reservation, Mont., shall be reimbursed from the Treasury of the United States and placed to the credit of the Fort Belknap Tribe and be available for such expenditures for the benefit of said tribe as Congress may hereafter direct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, that seems to be an important bill. Will the Senator from Montana explain it?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, when certain irrigation projects were built on various reservations throughout the United States, Indian money which was in the Treasury of the United States was used to build the projects which afterward to a large extent were sold to white people. The money originally belonged to the Indians. It was reimbursable, to be paid back to the Indians. Much of it has not been paid back to the Indians, but is still outstanding. This bill provides that the money which was appropriated out of Indian funds shall be paid back by the Government to the Indian tribes.

Mr. McKELLAR. All the money originally was taken from the Indian funds?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; all the money originally was taken from the Indian funds. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] has the same proposition from his State, and the Secretary of the Interior is very much in favor of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. The next bill is exactly the same.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I was just going to suggest that the next bill, Senate bill 1532, and the bill introduced by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER], Senate bill 506, are all of the same character. I know of two other Indian tribes which are in the same situation. Generally, this entire Indian reimbursable problem was satisfactorily adjusted a year or two ago, but there seem to be some fag ends left. My thought was to combine all the remaining questions into an omnibus bill and send the measure over to the House of Representatives so that the entire matter may be considered with the care usually exercised by that body.

Mr. WHEELER. I have no objection to it, Mr. President. I agree with the Senator from Arizona that that is what should be done. There are a few odds and ends left.

Mr. McKELLAR. That cannot be done here.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have here an amendment to this bill, which includes the next one on the calendar, referring to the Crow Indians of Montana, and the third bill, relating to the Klamath Indians of Oregon. In that I have included two other sections, which refer to the Fort Hall Indians of Idaho and to the San Carlos Apache Indians of Arizona. Such an amendment will make of the pending measure an omnibus bill so that the Senate can dispose of the entire matter at one time.

I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, at the end of the bill, it is proposed to insert the following new sections:

SEC. 2. That the amount of tribal funds of the Crow Indians heretofore expended for construction and operation and maintenance of irrigation systems on the Crow Reservation, Mont., shall be reimbursed from the Treasury of the United States and placed to the credit of the Crow Tribe and be available for such expenditures for the benefit of said tribe as Congress may hereafter direct.

SEC. 3. That the amount of tribal funds of the Klamath Indians heretofore expended for construction and operation and maintenance of irrigation systems on the Klamath Reservation, Oreg., shall be reimbursed from the Treasury of the United States and placed to the credit of the Klamath Tribe and be available for such expenditures for the benefit of said tribe as Congress may hereafter direct.

SEC. 4. That the amount of tribal funds of the San Carlos Apache Indians heretofore expended for construction and operation and maintenance of irrigation systems on the San Carlos Apache Reservation, Ariz., for which the San Carlos Apache Tribe has not been previously compensated, shall be reimbursed from the Treasury of the United States and placed to the credit of the San Carlos Apache Indians and be available for such expenditures for the benefit of such Indians as Congress may hereafter direct.

SEC. 5. That the amount of tribal funds of the Fort Hall Indians heretofore expended for construction and operation and maintenance of irrigation systems on the Fort Hall Reservation, Idaho, shall be reimbursed from the Treasury of the United States and placed to the credit of the Fort Hall Indian Tribe and be available for such expenditures for the benefit of said tribe as Congress may hereafter direct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arizona whether all these bills are recommended by the Department?

Mr. HAYDEN. They are all recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, and, so far as I am advised, clear up the entire Indian irrigation reimbursable situation. Heretofore Congress has enacted a general statute which relieved the Indians and gave them considerable sums by way of reimbursement, but that statute did not apply to these Indian irrigation projects. My amendment will put the several proposals all in one bill, and the House can then consider it as one matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to credit certain Indian tribes with sums heretofore expended from tribal funds on Indian irrigation works."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the other bills should be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; Senate bill 1532 and Senate bill 506 should be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 1532 and Senate bill 506 will be indefinitely postponed.

JOSEPH HORACE ALBION NORMANDIN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 885) to correct the naval record of Joseph Horace Albion Normandin, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged sailors Joseph Horace Albion Normandin, formerly a seaman, United States Navy, shall be held and considered to have been discharged with an ordinary discharge under honorable conditions as of April 18, 1929, the date on which he was given a bad-conduct discharge from the Navy: Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAC AND FOX (OF MISSOURI) TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1723) to authorize payment to the Sac and Fox (of Missouri) Tribe of Indians of certain tribal funds to their credit in the United States Treasury, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, does the Department recommend the passage of this bill?

Mr. CAPPER. This bill was referred to the Department, and has its full approval.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 5, after the words "amount of" to strike out "$9,158.20" and insert "$9,153", and in line 6, after the word "plus", to strike out "$273.71" and insert "$268.71", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to pay to the Sac and Fox Tribe of Indians of Missouri the amount of $9,153, representing the amounts remaining in the Treasury in two separate funds, plus $268.71 interest, which have accured to and including December 31, 1934, on the amount of $1,141.70 now in the Treasury, derived from the sale of lands of these Indians on which such interest accrued under the act of February 12, 1929 (45 Stat. L. 1164): Provided, That prior to the segregation and payment of the above amount to the Indians, there shall be paid to certain attorneys who have rendered services to the Indians under an informal contract not to exceed $400, to reimburse them for expenses incurred for and on behalf of the tribe.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PEARL HARBOR, HAWAII

The bill (S. 1209) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to relinquish an easement for a water main at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to relinquish to the trustees under the will and of the estate of Bernice F. Bishop, deceased, all right, title, and interest of the United States in a perpetual easement granted the United States on August 17, 1921, for a right-of-way across portions of Waialae-nui and Waialae-iki, Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, for a 4-inch cast-iron water main for naval purposes.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING AT JONESBORO, ARK.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2088) to authorize acquisition of land to provide appropriate means of access to the post-office building at Jonesboro, Ark.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this is a bill introduced by my colleague [Mrs. CARAWAY]. It authorizes the acquisition of sufficient area to provide for an approach to the loading platform of the public building in Jonesboro, Ark. An identical bill, being House bill 6290, has passed the House of Representatives and is now pending in the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I ask that that committee be discharged from further consideration of the House bill to the end that that bill may be considered by the Senate in lieu of the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask for the present consideration of the House bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, there may be some peculiar merit in this particular bill, but, upon consideration of this bill and others of a similar nature, a subcommittee was appointed to ascertain what ought to be the policy of the Congress in respect to all those cases which provide for the disposal of lands already owned by the United States Government, either for the sake of obtaining new locations or sites for new public buildings.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think the Senator misunderstands the purpose of this bill. Senate bill no. 2088, being Calendar No. 433, has been unanimously reported by the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The bill relates only to "such portion of the 15-foot public alley north of the site as may be necessary to provide appropriate means of access to a loading platform", and so forth, of the Federal building. It is necessary in order that the post-office authorities in Jonesboro may perform their functions effectively. The bill does not contemplate any change of site or the procurement of a site, but merely the condemnation or purchase of an alley in order to provide access to the public building.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I misunderstood the statement of the Senator from Arkansas, and I withdraw my comment on this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6290) to authorize acquisition of land to provide appropriate means of access to the post-office building at Jonesboro, Ark., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, as an addition to the post-office site at Jonesboro, Ark., such portion of the 15-foot public alley north of the site as may be necessary to provide appropriate means of access to the loading platform of the building as extended and remodeled under authority of the act of Congress (46 Stat. 1595) approved March 4, 1931.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2088, being Calendar No. 433, will be indefinitely postponed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2356) to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes", approved August 25, 1919, as amended by act of March 6, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], who introduced the bill, does not seem to be present at the moment. I notice that the Department opposes the bill, and I will ask that it go over for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GIBSON in the chair). The bill will be passed over.

JOHN F. PATTERSON

The bill (S. 1783) for the relief of John F. Patterson was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army John F. Patterson shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private, Company D, First Regiment Minnesota National Guard Infantry, on August 14, 1917: Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued by reason of this act prior to its passage.

MILITARY INSTRUCTOR OF HIGH-SCHOOL CADETS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1023) to provide for the payment of a military instructor for the high-school cadets of Washington, D. C., which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "law", to strike out "a" and insert "one", and on line 9, after the name "Columbia", to insert "not to exceed $1,800 per annum", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, one retired officer of the United States Army, acting as professor of military science and tactics at the public high schools of Washington, D. C., shall be permitted to receive, in addition to his retired pay, the pay of a teacher in the public high schools of Washington, D. C., not to exceed $1,800 per annum, under appointment by the Board of Education of the District of Columbia and payable from the appropriation for the expenses of the public schools of the District of Columbia.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCHOOL BUILDINGS IN MONTANA

The bill (S. 1522) to provide funds for cooperation with public-school districts in Glacier County, Mont., in the improvement and extension of school buildings to be available to both Indian and white children was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this bill proposes to appropriate $100,000 for a school building in Montana. Will the Senator from Montana explain it?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I will be glad to do so. The proposals embodied in this and a number of other bills on the calendar have reference to erecting schools or extending schools in various Indian reservations in the State of Montana. The bills are being proposed because the policy of the present administration of the Department has been to close up the Indian boarding schools, which, in many instances, are found to be both inefficient and extremely expensive to the Government. The cost of sending a child to an Indian boarding school, if my recollection serves me aright, is something in the neighborhood of three or four hundred dollars a year, whereas if the Indian children are placed in the public schools in the community in which they live, it costs the Government much less. At the same time the Indian child goes to school with white children of the community, learns the ways of the white children, and becomes a much better citizen and much better able to take his place in the white community and in affairs generally.

Mr. McKELLAR. How many of these children are there in the community?

Mr. WHEELER. In the particular community covered by the pending bill the figures show that last year 700 Indian children were attending these schools. This year the number has been increased to 810, largely because of the closing of the Cut Bank boarding school which had a capacity of 141 pupils.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the buildings be erected on Government reservations?

Mr. WHEELER. They will be erected on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will they be built out of the Indian funds; out of money in the Treasury?

Mr. WHEELER. What is done is that the white community and the Government cooperate; the Government puts up a part of the money and the Indian Bureau puts up a part of the money.

Mr. McKELLAR. Ought not that to be provided for in the bill? I do not believe it is. There is no provision that the Indian funds shall be onerated with any part of the cost.

Mr. WHEELER. As I understand, these bills generally are for additions to present public schools in the several communities. We are faced with this situation: The white people have put up these schools; they hire the teachers, and they do not want to drive the Indian children out, but they say to the Government, "We have not the money with which to build additional school facilities; if you want the Indian children to go to the white man's school then you have got to pay to put up some additional buildings so that we may take care of them."

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Knowing the Senator's loyal, enthusiastic support of the President's financial program, I was wondering what his comment would be upon the fact that all these bills seem to violate that program?

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say that the Secretary of the Interior has recommended each and every one of these bills, and said he was in favor of them, but he does say that they are contrary to the financial program at the present time. I will say quite frankly to the Senator that I think what will happen if this bill shall pass will be that the money will be taken out of the public-works fund and not out of direct appropriations. That is my candid opinion of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Under those circumstances, had not these bills better go over for the day, anyway, and let us look into them, because it hardly seems fair that schools should be built for some Indians unless they are built for all Indians?

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that what they are doing is this: On practically every Indian reservation throughout the United States—for instance, a large part of Glacier County, in Montana, is made up of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation—the Indian lands pay no taxes whatsoever to the county; the property of the Indians there pays no taxes to the county; and the white people living in the community, who have taken up homesteads or have bought some land, simply cannot afford to erect the necessary buildings and educate the Indian children. If the Government does not do it, the Indian children have got to go without education, as last year quite a large number of them did, or other provision has to be made.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is very, very persuasive, but I am going to ask him to let this bill go over until the next call of the calendar, and let us see whether the amount appropriated can be paid out of the other funds or whether they should be taken out of the Treasury. I think it would be better to take the money out of the other funds.

Mr. WHEELER. Under those circumstances, I will consent to have the bill go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. My request also applies to Senate bills 1524, 1525, 1526, and 1530.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under objection, Calendar Nos. 437, 438, 439, 440, and 441, being, respectively, Senate bills 1522, 1524, 1525, 1526, and 1530, will be passed over.

STRENGTH AND DISTRIBUTION OF THE LINE OF THE NAVY

The bill (H. R. 5599) to regulate the strength and distribution of the line of the Navy, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I hope this bill may be acted upon. It has been very thoroughly considered, and has already passed the House, being a House bill. It is in keeping with the policy of increasing the Navy up to treaty strength. It covers a period of some 6 or 7 years in its operations.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand this bill, it would simply provide for manning the new vessels which are being constructed, and without the enactment of the bill there would be ships without sufficient men and personnel to man them? Is that correct?

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is correct.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over until the next call of the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2287) to authorize the crediting of service rendered by personnel (active or retired) subsequently to June 30, 1932, in the computation of their active or retired pay after June 30, 1935, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that bill take the same course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

WEARING OF MEDALS IN THE NAVY

The bill (S. 1208) authorizing personnel of the naval service to whom a commemorative or special medal has been awarded to wear in lieu thereof a miniature facsimile of such medal and a ribbon symbolic of the award was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That authority is hereby granted to personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps to wear in lieu of commemorative or special medals awarded to them a miniature facsimile of such medal and a ribbon symbolic of the award thereof under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1492) to compensate the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota for lands set aside by treaties for their future homes and later patented to the State of Minnesota, under the Swamp Land Act, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand Calendar Nos. 445, 446, and 447, being Senate bills 1492, 1535, and 1536, are substantially the same as the bill which was discussed a few moments ago by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], which, with some others of a similar nature, was passed over. So I ask that the bills, the numbers of which I have given, may also go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the bills referred to by the Senator from Tennessee will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1426) providing for the appointment of Harry T. Herring, formerly a lieutenant colonel in the United States Army, as a lieutenant colonel in the United States Army, and his retirement in that grade, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. BACHMAN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Utah that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], who introduced the bill, and his colleague, Mr. CUTTING, are absent from the Chamber at the moment.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. BACHMAN. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1932) for the relief of the State of California was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, that bill, which was introduced by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], involves a large amount, and I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 215) to establish uniform requirements affecting Government contracts, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

EXTENSION AND COMPLETION OF UNITED STATES CAPITOL

The bill (S. 1129) to provide for the extension and completion of the United States Capitol was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this bill proposes to appropriate three and a half million dollars for the extension and completion of the Capitol. I notice it was introduced and reported by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. I should like to know something about the measure and its purposes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I shall be glad to explain the bill to the Senator. The report gives a very graphic account of the history of the plan for the extension of the Capitol.

Mr. McKELLAR. If there is a long report, would it not be better to let the bill go over and let those who are interested in its study the report? Then we can consider it promptly on the next call of the calendar.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, if the Senator desires the bill to go over I cannot object. We are very hopeful of getting the money for this work out of the joint resolution which recently became a law.

I invite the attention of Senators to the fact that the bill has been before the Senate and the committees of the Senate off and on for a great many years. The original Architect of the Capitol, who constructed the east and north and south wings shortly before the Civil War, desired to make this identical improvement at that time. His report so discloses. Every Architect of the Capitol who has served since that time has recommended this particular improvement. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds held extensive and full hearings before a subcommittee, of which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is chairman. The main committee reported the bill unanimously.

Mr. McKELLAR. Just what does the bill provide?

Mr. CONNALLY. The north and south wings of the Capitol were added many years after the original structure was built. The dome was added when the new wings were built. In building the dome, apparently the dome protruded over the east front about 20 feet and architecturally there is apparently no foundation whatever for it. The purpose of the bill is to extend the east front of the central portion of the structure so as to bring it beyond the base of the dome and to provide some 20 or 30 additional rooms in the building for Senators; also to provide a corridor on the third floor in order that one may pass on that floor from the Senate wing to the House wing, which cannot be done at this time.

The architecture of the columns and other portions of the facade of the wings does not harmonize with the facade of the central portion. Neither do the materials harmonize. The north and south wings of the Capitol are constructed of marble, whereas the central portion is constructed of sandstone. When the British captured the Capitol and burned it in 1814 the central portion was discolored. As a result it has to be painted from time to time, whereas the wings which are marble do not have to be painted. There is always a difference in color.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator has said enough to justify me in withdrawing my objection. I believe the improvements ought to be made by all means.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has just entered the Chamber in time to hear me pay a well-deserved tribute to him. In the consideration of this matter the Senator from Massachusetts rendered a very useful and distinguished service.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Texas. May I suggest that he have the report of the committee printed in the RECORD for the information of Senators.

Mr. CONNALLY. Complying with the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, I ask unanimous consent, in connection with my remarks that there may be printed in the RECORD the report on the bill.

There being no objection, the report (No. 435) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1129) to provide for the extension and completion of the United States Capitol, having considered the same, report favorably thereon and recommend that the bill do pass.

The extension of the central portion of the Capitol eastward so as to complete the effect intended at the time when the wings and dome were built has been under consideration since 1863 and has been recommended by every Architect of the Capitol and every consulting architect who studied and reported upon the problem since that time.

Your committee has given this matter earnest and careful study and has held complete hearings on the subject, and in view of the high degree of importance of this proposed extension to the Capitol it is considered desirable to explain in some detail the history of this proposed change for the benefit of the Members of the Congress.

The present form of the Capitol is the result of a series of successive additions over a long period of time, carried out under the direction of various Architects of the Capitol, each of whom added to and, to some extent, modified the work of his predecessor.

The last important alteration in the design of the building was the construction of the north and south wings and the dome, which was carried out between 1851 and 1865 from designs by Thomas U. Walter, who was Architect of the Capital during this period.

The dome, as then planned and executed, rests upon an octagonal base or skirting which overhangs the east wall approximately 15 feet 6 inches, in such a way that it rests on a void space apparently without support.

It was not intended that this condition should be a permanent one. The reports and sketches left by Mr. Walter show that he proposed as the next step to carry forward the wall and portico of the central portion so as to give the dome an adequate appearance of support.

The advent of the Civil War interrupted the progress of the work being carried on at the Capitol so that this modification was never carried out. The building in its present state, therefore, represents an unfinished stage in the development of what was intended to be a complete and harmonious design and presents, in this overhang of the dome over the wall below, what the various Architects of the Capitol and the consulting architects referred to above have unanimously considered a serious architectural defect.

Thus Mr. Walter, in his annual report, November 1, 1863 (Doc. Hist. Cap., p. 825), states:

"The eastern portico of the old building will certainly be taken down at no very distant day, and the front be extended eastward."

Again, in his annual report of November 1, 1864 (Doc. Hist. Cap., p. 1264), states:

"Now that the new dome and the wings of the Capitol are approaching completion, it must be apparent to everyone that the extension of the center building, on the east, to the line of the new wings, become an architectural necessity. I have therefore prepared plans for thus completing the work in harmony with what has already been done and will place them in the Capitol for future reference."

His successor, Edward Clark, in his report of November 1, 1865 (Doc. Hist. Cap., p. 1264), makes the following comment:

"I respectfully call attention to the necessity of extending the central building and portico out to the line of the porticos of the wings. This is imperatively demanded, in order to give prominence to the central portico, which should be the superior one of the three; whereas at present, owing to its receding, and the encroachment of the dome upon it, it appears to be the inferior. Besides, the lower member of the dome overhangs the eastern wall of the building, giving the dome from some points of view an appearance of insecurity."

Again Mr. Elliott Woods, in a report of March 11, 1902, states:

"For the extension of the east central portion of the Capitol I submit designs made by the late Thomas U. Walter, the former Architect of the Capitol, who built the present north and south wings. The studies were made by Mr. Walter with due regard to bringing the Capitol Building to what he considered completion; * * * an extension which would harmonize with what already existed, which would give additional beauty to the splendid dome he had designed and erected, and which he hoped would some day grace a completed structure."

The Congress, in the Sundry Civil Appropriations Act of April 28, 1904, established a joint commission to investigate and report on the extension of the Capitol Building. This commission appointed the firm of Carrere & Hastings, consulting architects, to study the problem involved. This firm submitted a report to the commission on February 19, 1905, which contained the following comments regarding the necessity for the eastward extension:

"* * * It seems remarkable when considering the history of this building that so beautiful and harmonious a design should have resulted from the successive additions made to the original building, the result of which is certainly a monument to the skill of Mr. Walter. Whatever faults there may be in the design are distinctly the outcome of the limitations which were imposed upon the Architect in adapting the new conditions to the building as it then existed. The dome had to be designed in proportion to the enlarged building, and yet Mr. Walter found himself compelled to place this larger dome upon the masonry foundations and walls of the smaller dome. Owing to the fact that the foundations were built on most unfavorable soil, he very naturally hesitated to add upon these walls any unnecessary masonry weight or to disturb in any way the existing masonry where it could be used and adapted to the new conditions. He felt very strongly, however, as we do; the defect that on the east front the dome does not appear to be supported; in fact, it overhangs the wall of the building and seems to rest partly upon the portico. He was right in wishing to have this defect corrected * * *."

Substantially the same conclusions have been reached by the present Architect of the Capitol, as set forth in his statement in the hearings before a subcommittee of this committee held on January 22, 1935. It is apparent, then, that the consensus of expert opinion is and has been that this change is necessary to remedy the existing architectural defect caused by the overhang of the dome and to complete and perfect the architectural composition of the structure.

The question of the exact distance of the extension which is best calculated to bring about the effect desired has naturally been the subject of some differences of opinion.

Mr. Walter's recommendation was that the central portion be extended at least as far as the line of the wings. Carrere & Hastings in their report expressed the opinion that this amount of projection would be excessive and presented two alternate sketches referred to in the bill as "scheme A" and "scheme B", recommending the adoption of scheme A, which provided the least amount of projection which would provide the desired appearance of support for the skirting of the dome.

Mr. David Lynn, the present Architect of the Capitol, having made further studies of the problem, submits a plan which is a modification of scheme B as proposed by Carrere & Hastings. This plan, while not intended to be taken as final and conclusive, is considered to offer certain advantages both from a practical and aesthetic point of view.

First, except for a slight modification in the width of the central portico and the steps leading thereto (considered desirable in order to give additional emphasis to the central entrances), it preserves without change the original architectural design and detail of the central portion of the building.

Second, it provides for certain practical necessities which were felt even at the time when Carrere & Hastings prepared their report and which have since become of more serious importance.

These are, briefly, the provision of a cross corridor between the wings on the gallery floor, where there is at present no direct means of passage from one end of the building to the other, the provision of additional space for the service of the committees (particularly those of the House of Representatives where the Appropriations Committee now occupies rooms on three separate floors) and by releasing space now used by these committees allows the provision of adequate space for the reception of those having business with Members.

Your committee in reporting this bill reached the conclusion that it is highly desirable that the central portion of the Capitol be extended eastward to correct the architectural defect now existing. It considers that the exact distance to which the front should be extended may best be determined through the preparation of complete architectural drawings and designs as well as scale and full-size models, and that this detail may safely be left to the determination of the commission proposed to be created by the bill.

It further concludes that such portions of the building as are now built of sandstone should be refaced with white marble so that the central portion will conform to the House and Senate wings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the central portion of the Capitol shall be extended, reconstructed, and replaced in substantial accordance with either scheme A or scheme B of the architectural plan submitted by the joint commission of Congress and reported to Congress on March 3, 1905 (House Doc. No. 385, 58th Cong., 3d sess.), with such modifications as the commission may determine, except so much of said plan as relates to a sculptural group in the pediment of the House wing, and replacing with white marble the two broad flights of terrace steps on the west of the Capitol. The joint commission hereinafter provided for shall determine whether the substance of scheme A or scheme B shall be adopted.

SEC. 2. The extension, reconstruction, and replacement herein authorized shall be carried out under the direction and supervision of a commission, which is hereby created, to be known as the "Commission for the Extension and Completion of the United States Capitol", and to be composed of the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the chairman and the ranking minority member of the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the minority leader of the Senate, the minority leader of the House of Representatives, and the Architect of the Capitol. Notwithstanding the expiration of a Congress, any Representative who is a member of the Commission, if reelected, shall continue to serve thereon until a successor is selected by the House of Representatives. The Architect of the Capitol shall serve as executive officer of the Commission and shall perform such services under this act as the Commission may direct.

SEC. 3. The construction contemplated under this act, including the necessary traveling expenses, the letting of contracts, advertising, purchase of materials, supplies, equipment, and accessories in the open market, the employment of all necessary skilled architectural and engineering personnel and other services (without reference to section 35 of the act approved June 25, 1910), and the purchase of necessary technical and other books, shall be under the control of the Architect of the Capitol, subject to the direction and supervision of the Commission.

SEC. 4. The total cost of the extension, reconstruction, and replacement herein authorized shall not exceed the sum of $3,500,000, and a contract or contracts for any portion or all of such amount may be entered into in accordance with section 3.

SEC. 5. Appropriations made pursuant to this act shall be disbursed in the same manner as other appropriations under the Architect of the Capitol through the Division of Disbursements, Treasury Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the calendar.

REGULATION OF LOAN BUSINESS IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when Calendar No. 312, being the bill (S. 1162) to regulate the business of making small loans in the District of Columbia, and to amend an act to regulate the business of loaning money, and so forth, approved February 4, 1913, was reached in due course during the call of the calendar, owing to the temporary absence from the Chamber of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL], I asked that it be passed over. The Senator from Minnesota is now present. I ask now to recur to that order of business and for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will recur to Order of Business 312, being Senate bill 1162.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I have a statement which I wish to have read in relation to the bill and an article which I desire to have printed in the RECORD.

Mr. KING. I withdraw my request. Apparently it is going to lead to debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is withdrawn, and the bill will remain on the calendar.

IMPROVEMENT IN BUSINESS CONDITIONS IN IOWA

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] indicated his readiness to accept the Republican Presidential nomination for the campaign of 1936. Our other highly esteemed colleague, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], I think is in the same frame of mind. His action anticipated by a considerable period that of the Senator from Iowa. We have not recently heard anything about the boom of the eminent Senator from Michigan, and I suppose the Senator from Iowa regards this as a very splendid opportunity to enter the race.

I must confess that in the speech of the Senator from Iowa as reported in the press there were some regrettable omissions.

He told his Virginia audience:

> When the weaknesses of the program of the present administration are exposed it will be an easy matter to suggest a substitute program.

How unfortunate it is that the new candidate for President did not take the time to let his hearers know what is the program that it is so simple to suggest. It is no trouble to criticize in glittering generalities, or in generalities that are not glittering; but, somehow, not one of the critics of the new deal has ventured to plant his feet on the earth and tell us what program or programs he proposes as a substitute for it.

Incidentally, we learned from the speech of the Senator from Iowa that—

> It cannot be denied that every detail of our social and business position in this country is worse now than it was in the beginning of 1933.

He declares that "unemployment has not been relieved"; that "industry is still paralyzed"; that banks continue to misbehave; that "money, Treasury notes, insurance policies, stocks, and bonds have all lost their value as securities"; that "the sky is growing darker, and no man knows what the weather will be tomorrow."

From that bad dream, let us turn for a moment to the actual facts as presented by the newspapers of the State represented in part by the Senator from Iowa.

I am not going to read these newspaper editorials and articles. There is quite a number of them, all of them indicating specific facts which, in the opinion of Republican newspaper publishers in Iowa, show that great improvement has occurred in that State in business conditions generally. As already indicated, these clippings are largely from newspapers of the Senator's own political faith.

The Senator from Iowa ought to enlighten his newspapers, and not let them go ahead on the hypothesis that Iowa, in every branch of agriculture and industry, is rapidly advancing toward prosperity, if he intends to base his campaign on some mysterious, undefined substitute for the new-deal measures.

I ask unanimous consent to have these editorials and articles printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorials and newspaper articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FARM INCOME IN IOWA GAINS—79 MILLION FOR FIRST 2 MONTHS OF 1935

(By Staff Writer)

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Iowa's income from the marketing of farm products and benefit payments in the first 2 months of this year was more than twice that of the same period in 1933, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics announced Saturday.

The total income was $79,044,000, compared to $36,865,000 in 1933. Iowa's income for January and February was greater than that for any other State, and more than twice that in any other State except Texas, California, Minnesota, Illinois, and Kansas.

CROP SALE GREATER

Benefit payments were responsible for $13,641,000 of Iowa's income for the first 2 months. The cash income from sale of farm products was much greater than for any similar period in the last 4 years. It amounted to $65,403,000, compared to $36,000,000 in 1933 and $55,000,000 in 1932 and 1934.

Iowa's income for the 2 months was a little more than one-twelfth that of the entire national income, including benefit payments which totaled $908,000,000.

NINE-PERCENT GAIN

"When rental and benefit payments are included in the receipts for February in 1934 and 1935," the Bureau said, "total receipts were 9 percent greater than in February 1934."

1,167 GAIN IN QUAD-CITIES' FACTORY EMPLOYMENT

The net increase in the number of persons employed in the factories of the quad-city area March 1 over February 1 of this year was 1,167, according to figures released today by a reliable source.

The new increase on March 1, 1935, over March 1, 1934, was 42½ percent, or 7,202 persons. The total number employed on March 1 this year was 17,335, while a year ago it was 10,133.

It was also found that the number being employed is steadily increasing. One large farm implement manufacturing firm in the quad-cities employed about 700 additional men this month.

Employment conditions are improving so rapidly and steadily in the area that it is predicted that the peak mark of 1929 and 1930 may be reached.

The greatest number of persons ever to be employed in factories in the Quad-city area, which comprises Moline, Rock Island, East Moline, Davenport, Bettendorf, the Silvis shops and the arsenal was 20,500, and that was in 1929 and 1930.

The increases in employment were noted in the farm implement, foundry, machine-shop, wood-working, clothing, and baking lines.

Of the 73 firms reporting for February, 40 reported net increases of 1,930, and 17 firms reported decreases in employment of 763. Sixteen firms reported no change over the previous month.

These figures are only for the persons employed in the mechanical departments of the factories and do not include the many executives and clerical help.

JOB PLACEMENT IS UP FOR MARCH—57 PERCENT INCREASE NOTED IN 89 COUNTIES

Placements of workers through the National Reemployment Service in the 89 smaller counties of the State increased 57 percent during March, as compared with the previous 2 months, it was announced Saturday by Hans Pfund, Iowa director.

The gain was attributed by Mr. Pfund largely to inauguration of road work and to hiring of farm hands.

2,393 PLACED

During March there were 2,393 men and women placed on jobs, as against 1,520 in February and 1,530 in January.

The last week in March set a high mark for placements with 900 recorded. In the previous week there were 476.

Of the total placements during March, 2,131 were men and 262 were women. Included among the men were 494 war veterans and 41 disabled veterans.

MORE REGISTERED

A marked increase in the number of applicants registered for work during March were recorded, with 4,919, as against 1,681 in February and 1,537 in January. The increase was attributed to a ruling by the Emergency Relief Administration that all persons on work relief must be registered with the reemployment service.

The total number of active applicants on file in the 89 counties at the end of March was 51,699.

DAVENPORT BANK PLANS PAYMENT OF 4-PERCENT DIVIDEND

Stockholders of the Davenport Bank & Trust Co. will receive a 4-percent dividend this year, according to present intentions of the board of directors of the bank, E. P. Adler, president of the institution, announced at the annual stockholders' meeting of the bank this morning.

"Your officers and directors believe that reserves now set up and the earnings are on such a sound basis that they have every reason to believe a dividend to stockholders can be paid in 1935", the statement read. "It is therefore the intention of your board to plan for a 4-percent dividend for the year, 2 percent to be paid in July for the first 6 months and 2 percent at the end of the year."

President Adler's statement showed the bank in excellent condition after 2½ years of operation, with deposits having increased approximately 40 percent during the last year.

The fact that the institution should be able to pay a dividend within such a relatively short time is considered an eloquent testimonial of the manner in which it has been operated, the improvement which has taken place in general business and the confidence of the people of this locality in the bank.

WATERLOO, IOWA, BUSINESS IS ON THE ROAD BACK—COLLECTING AND SALES GOOD—FARM MACHINE FIRMS REPORT GAINS

WATERLOO, IOWA.—This city is on the way back.

Indicative of Waterloo's relative position on the road back is the February score sheet of collections and sales conditions compiled by Credit and Financial Management, organ of the National Association of Credit Men. Waterloo's collections are "good." So are its sales.

HARD HIT

Waterloo, with its industries devoted almost exclusively to manufacture of farm equipment—tractors, cream separators, manure spreaders, etc.—and to processing farm products, was particularly hard hit when the farmer quit buying, when he decided to get along with the equipment he had. Hundreds of workers were laid off as plants reduced operations and finally closed down entirely in many cases.

Merchants felt the pinch as pay rolls diminished.

MAIN PAY ROLLS

The Rath Packing Co. remained the backbone of Waterloo industry, giving employment to some 2,000 persons, distributing a pay roll that was the principal single source of purchasing power in the city.

Waterloo was a potent example of the fact that "as is the farmer, so is Iowa."

SAME EXAMPLE

Today it remains such an example.

The turn came about a year ago, Waterloo business men estimate. Farmers are buying the products of Waterloo plants and they are trading at Waterloo stores. Workmen are buying again because they have jobs and steady incomes.

FARMER BUYING

The farmer is buying tractors again, and therein lies the greatest single reason for Waterloo's business rejuvenation. The John Deere Co. is employing 3,000 men to build 110 tractors a day and issuing $350,000 a month in a pay roll that flows into every merchant's till in the city. And the company has more orders than it can fill.

POWER EQUIPMENT

Allen Head, vice president and general manager, says the market is a domestic market. Farmers are changing to power equipment, or replacing worn-out tractors. Dealers' stocks have become depleted. He sees indications of a steady demand. At present he can employ no more unskilled labor, but he could use men skilled in tractor production.

AN UPTREND IN STEEL

Steel is always considered a sure barometer of business. When orders are flowing in, things in practically all lines look up. When the orders slack off it is an indication of a lessening in business.

Those who draw business charts and who make up business statistics rely upon the position of steel. The market reviews always carry a report on steel orders.

Since 1929 the steel trade has been slow. It is now coming back. The latest reports show the industry operating at 51 percent of capacity. This is assuredly an indication that we are drawing out of the slump.

The automobile trade, which affects millions, is leading the way to prosperity, many observers believe. And that industry takes a great output of steel. Estimates on January production of motor-vehicle units place the number at 275,000. The country is in a position to absorb a vast number of cars since the streets and highways are filled with vehicles that their owners would like to replace with new ones.

RETAIL TRADE FUTURE BRIGHT—CITY MERCHANTS SEE 15 PERCENT MARCH GAIN

Retail trade is entering the second quarter of 1935 with "excellent prospects", Des Moines merchants said Thursday.

Trade during March was more or less varied, reports showed, although gains for the month as compared to March 1934 in some instances were as high as 15 to 20 percent.

Retail activity for Des Moines territory for the first quarter, including January, February, and March, however, was estimated in practically all lines of trade at approximately 15 percent in excess of 1934.

DEPARTMENT STORES

Des Moines department stores reported "strong gains" for January and February, with trade in March slowing its pace to about that of March last year.

The slowness in comparison was attributed by a number of merchants to the early Easter season of 1934 in comparison with the April 21 date this year.

FURNITURE MERCHANTS

Furniture merchants said trade, after a strong January and February start, about "held its own" with last year's figures through most of March.

During late March and the opening days of April, however, trade in furniture was reported as "looking up again." Prospects for April trade were considered bright.

EASTER TRADE EYED

Stores with units throughout the State reported that trade through March in general had exceeded that of a year ago, although strength was described as "somewhat spotted" rather than uniformly good.

Easter trade, already under way, is expected to carry April sales above April 1934 figures, merchants said. They pointed out that bad weather and poor roads throughout most of the spring had exerted considerable influence on spring trade thus far.

LIFE INSURANCE SEES 36.8-PERCENT GAIN

Sales in March by eight Des Moines home office life-insurance companies averaged 36.8 percent more than in March 1934.

Written examined business for the Equitable Life Insurance Co. totaled $14,890,530 in March, the greatest single month's written business by the company since it was organized, officials said. Paid-for insurance during the month topped the $10,392,182 mark for a gain of 53.1 percent as compared to March 1934.

BANKERS LIFE

The Bankers Life Co. reported sales in March at $5,103,198 as compared to $4,951,165 in 1934, a gain of approximately 3.1 percent. The gain over 1933 was 60 percent, records showed.

Central Life Assurance society preliminary figures for the month indicated a gain of more than 15 percent as compared to March 1934. March production also will bring first quarter year totals for the company to more than 15 percent over the 1934 period, officials said.

YEOMAN MUTUAL

The Yeoman Mutual Life Insurance Co. reported March production at 57 percent above March 1934, with an "excellent start in April", and the Webster Life Insurance Co. reported a 30-percent increase for March and 50 percent for the first quarter year.

The Great Western Insurance Co. reported life insurance sales for the month at $307,216, a gain of approximately 60 percent as compared to the $194,000 figure for March 1934.

NATIONAL LIFE

An increase of 50 percent in March production as compared to 1934 was announced by the American Farmers Mutual Life Insurance Co.

The National Life Co. reported a 25-percent March gain as compared to March 1934, and a 27-percent increase for the year to date.

BUILDING PERMITS TOTALED $9,916 IN WEEK ENDING TODAY

During the week ending today 32 permits for $9,916 in construction work were issued by City Building Inspector A. S. Bisbee. Only two of the permits were for jobs costing $500 or more. They were issued to the Builders Sand & Gravel Co. for storage bins at 615 East River Street, to cost $5,000; and to the Zoller Brewing Co., 1820 West Second Street, for a loading platform to cost $550.

BUILDING OF NEW HOMES LIKELY TO STAGE A REVIVAL

Sales of building materials are feeling the healthful seasonal stimulus of spring with every prospect in view that sales increases will be registered in most lines this year, according to I. R. Brooks, manager of the Wisconsin Lumber Co. Not only are remodeling operations and small construction jobs likely to outstrip records for several years but a moderate revival of home construction is indicated, Brooks feels.

Brooks bases his prediction on several factors. Building permits issued for home construction are running ahead of last year, reports have been made of the sale of a number of building lots in residential areas, credit is loosening up in the face of Government effort to liberalize lending on real estate, and inquiries concerning material costs are more wide-spread than they have been for some time.

Refinancing under the Federal Housing Administration and loans by that agency for new construction are probably the most important influences likely to stimulate home construction this year, Brooks believes. Government lending has forced private agencies to reduce interest rates and extend amortization periods, and a surplus of money seeking sound investments has led many investors to turn to real-estate loans, where interest rates are more favorable and security sounder.

A realization that good loans on homes are the soundest investment possible has spread among investors, who have learned from the depression that such loans have seldom been lost. Brooks cited the record of the Midland Mortgage Co. here, which has not been forced to take over a single piece of city property in Cedar Rapids on which loans have been made by it or for clients during the company's history here.

SPURT IN IMPLEMENT BUSINESS REPORTED—INCREASED FARMER SPENDING AT MANCHESTER CREDITED TO A. A. A.; 80 TRACTORS SOLD AT VINTON

MANCHESTER.—The year 1935 will be characterized as a power farming year in Delaware County if sales by implement dealers here are any criterion. Dealers report more sales of some types of implements during the last 3 months than for the entire year of 1934.

"Farmers have money and they are paying their bills promptly", dealers declare. "Their buying power has increased several hundred percent since the crop-control program went into effect."

STARTED WITH CORN SEALING

According to these dealers the impetus in farmer spending dates back directly to the inauguration of the corn-sealing program. Within 2 months after corn sealing got under way merchandise which had been displayed throughout the latter part of 1933 and 1934 in an effort to sell at cost without results was immediately purchased by farmers. Approximately 75 percent of the sales were for cash—even tractors sold for cash.

Sales of new tractors have increased greatly, and one dealer reports the sale of a 2-row corn plow with practically every tractor sold. Dealers are finding it difficult to get orders filled and delivered on time. A tractor ordered January 28 is expected to arrive here this week, which date will be ahead of the specified time. Frank Easterly reports the sale of more cream separators this year than for the entire year of 1934.

MARCH BUSINESS AT IOWA MACHINE CO. GAINS 25 PERCENT

March business this year has been from 25 to 30 percent better at the Iowa Machine Co.'s shop, 40 Eighth Avenue SW., according to proprietors of the establishment, M. Horsky and W. Paseka. The upturn has carried undiminished through the first week in April, they report, and prospects for the best season in several years are bright.

DEERE & CO.'S SALES EXCEED TOTAL IN 1933—IMPROVED CONDITIONS IN AGRICULTURE REFLECTED IN MOLINE REPORT

Sales of Deere & Co., Moline, in 1934 were more than double the sales reported the preceding year, according to the company's annual report mailed to stockholders today.

The report, covering the fiscal year ending October 31, shows an increase in sales month by month as compared with 1933. Collections during the past year improved, showing a gain of 50 percent over the corresponding 12 months.

MARENGO CANNING FACTORY TO OPEN AGAIN THIS YEAR

MARENGO, IOWA (Special).—After being idle for the past 3 years, the Iowa Valley sweet-corn canning factory, located here, has been leased to the J. LeRoy Farmer Canning Co., of Cedar Rapids, and will be operated by that concern this year. The plant under normal conditions can handle more than 1,000,000 cans of corn in a season.

COLLECTIONS AND CREDIT SALES IN CITY IMPROVING

Collections in Sioux City averaged higher for February than for the corresponding month of last year and registered about 3 points above normal, while credit sales remained on a par with February of last year, according to a report of the Sioux City Credit Adjustment Bureau.

Conditions in Sioux City retail channels for the month compared favorably with the national retail situation, which showed some improvement.

One of the encouraging factors is the report this is the second February to show an increase in both retail credit sales and collections.

In the national report, 65 cities showed increases in collections out of a total of 76 cities making returns, and 60 of the cities reported increases in credit sales.

[From the Sioux City (Iowa) Tribune of Mar. 7, 1935]

IOWA IN THE CAR MARKET

Survey of the percentage increase in new automobile purchases for the State of Iowa for 1934 over 1933 presents interesting deductions. The State average gain for 1934 over 1933 was 41.5 percent, or 16.5 percent more than the national average, which was 26-percent gain over 1933. The total number of new cars purchased by Iowans during 1934, 38,619.

Now, this presents an interesting set of figures. The increase in income for this State must have been noticeable, at least to motor-car salesmen.

Polk County, containing Des Moines and the largest number of people in any one county, only showed a gain of 14 percent in new-car sales for 1934 over 1933. Sioux City and Woodbury County showed a 43-percent increase, but still lower than some rural communities. In the eastern part of the State, Dubuque County showed 7-percent gain, Scott (Davenport) County 27, and Clinton County 3-percent gain.

Compare these with Plymouth, first county to the north. The increase there was 183 percent. Sioux County shows 128-percent gain and Lyon County 154 percent. It is the same all over the State. The southern counties show smaller gains than the northern tiers, but even there the farm communities outshow the city folk.

In each county where the gain was more than 50 percent the county is made up of farms and farm communities. The Iowa farm income for 1934 has been estimated at $435,000,000, or more than $2,000 per farm family.

The new deal has come to the farmer, it appears, and to northwest Iowa in particular. It is gratifying and pleasing to note Sioux City's trade territory is in the best condition, as far as car sales are concerned. Woodbury County shows a gain of 13 percent more than Potawattomie (Council Bluffs); 29 percent better than Linn (Cedar Rapids); 36 percent better than Dubuque (Dubuque); and 16 percent better than Scott (Davenport).

What do all these figures mean? Why print them? For this reason: The main argument of the Roosevelt administration has been that if the national income can be so redistributed that the farmer, whose pocketbooks have been noticeably clean of any signs of money these past few years, can have money to buy, the depression can be cured. The theory has been, and continues to be, that the pump can be primed.

SALES OF FORDS AHEAD OF 1934—135-PERCENT INCREASE IN DES MOINES AREA

Sales of Ford V–8 cars and trucks during January and February showed an increase of 135 percent in Des Moines territory as compared to the same period in 1934, G. F. Nelson, branch manager, said Saturday.

The increased sales carried the February total above the peak sale period of February 1929, and the total for the 2-month period to within 2 percent of the 1929 mark for the same months, Nelson said.

THIRTY-FIVE PERCENT TO FARMERS

Territory covered by the Des Moines branch includes 81 counties of the State. Nelson estimated that at least 35 percent of sales for the 2 months had been to farmers.

"This increase indicates a very substantial improvement in business conditions generally which, with present favorable corn and hog prices, makes Iowa an outstanding business State in the Midwest", he commented.

SIX THOUSAND UNITS PER DAY

The Ford Motor Co., according to Mr. Nelson, now is building 6,000 units a day, with a January total production of 105,230 cars and trucks, 130,000 during February, and a March schedule calling for 160,000.

NATIONAL LIFE ASSETS ARE UP—INCREASE $224,062 DURING 1934; TOTAL NOW $6,902,424

Assets of the National Life Co. of Des Moines were increased $224,062 during 1934 to reach a total of $6,902,424, the firm's annual report showed Saturday.

Home offices of the company are located at 114 Eleventh Street.

The firm closed 1934 with an increase in surplus of $28,644; an increase in total income of $115,092; and a 70-percent increase in issued business, William Koch, president, reported.

Farms owned by the National Life Co. and operated for the full year showed a 3.43-percent net cash income after deduction for expenses, repairs, taxes, and cost of improvements, Koch said.

Lapses were 34 percent less than in 1933, while reinstatements of lapsed insurance increased 13 percent. Death claims showed a decrease of $68,527.

GAIN SHOWN ON CAR INSURANCE—EMPLOYERS MUTUAL CASUALTY HAS MARKED UPSWING

A marked upswing in automobile-insurance business since the 1st of January was reported Saturday in tabulations for the first quarter of 1935 made public by officials of the Employers Mutual Casualty Co.

President John A. Gunn reported that each of the first 3 months of 1935 has shown an increase of more than 75 percent in automobile insurance written compared with the same months of 1934.

The Des Moines company is extending its field of operations this year into a number of new territories. Branch offices have been opened recently at Chicago, Ill., Wichita, Kans., Omaha, Nebr., and Red Wing, Minn.

BUSINESS AT BANKS BETTER—MARKED GAIN IN CHECK TRANSACTIONS IS SHOWN

A gain of $429,000 in check transactions in Sioux City banks for the week ended March 20 over the corresponding week of 1934 is shown in the report of the Chicago Federal Reserve Bank report released Monday.

Transactions here during that week amounted to $7,786,000, as compared with $7,317,000 for the corresponding week in 1934.

Banks in eight major cities in Iowa for the week showed a gain of $6,357,000 over the corresponding week in 1934. Transactions for the week in the eight cities totaled $41,867,000, as compared with $35,510,000 for the 1934 period, or an increase of 18 percent.

[From the Davenport (Iowa) Democrat of Mar. 26, 1935]

INCREASE IN BANK CLEARINGS

If improved business conditions are to be revealed in bank clearings, and we know of no better barometer, conditions are growing better the country over.

Referring to Dun & Bradstreet as our authority, we find much encouragement. During the week ending March 20, bank clearings took another spurt upward, exceeding those for any preceding week this year.

The total clearings for the 22 leading cities in the United States for that week was $5,988,222,000, against $5,251,441,000 for the same week of last year, an increase of 14 percent. At New York City clearings showed an increase of 13.3 percent over the amount reported last year, while the aggregate for centers outside of New York was 15.8 percent higher.

The large gains continued at some of the cities in the West and the South. A large increase also appeared at Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, as well as at Chicago, Detroit, Cincinnati, Baltimore, Atlanta, New Orleans, Kansas City, San Francisco, and Seattle.

The increased bank clearings are conclusive of two things. They reveal that the people have more money, and are spending more money, than formerly. Both are good signs of better times.

SIGNS OF BETTER TIMES

That was cheering news contained in the report released yesterday on employment conditions in factories of the Quad-city area.

These figures, declared to be as reliable as it is possible to make them, show an increase of 1,167 employees added to local factories during the past month of February. Averaging three dependents for each man given work, it will be seen that over 3,300 persons are benefited by this pick-up in employment.

That the gain is not merely seasonal is shown in the report for the year. The new increase on March 1, 1935, over March 1, 1934, was 42½ percent, or 7,202 persons. The total number employed on March 1 this year was 17,335, while a year ago it was 10,133. These figures apply to factory help exclusively and do not include other branches of employment, in which there also has been steady gains.

There is no better indicator of returning prosperity than increased employment, for wages are the best stabilizer of good times. In the aggregate the wage earners are the biggest spenders. Upon them the merchants are largely dependent for trade. Increased employment means increased business, a condition wherein both employers and employees are benefited.

The greatly improved employment conditions in the Quad-city area should bring optimism and encouragement to our residents, many of whom have been hard hit by the depression. But the clouds are lifting, the sun is again shining, and better times are on the way. So let's all be cheerful and make the most of the better days that are in store for us.

[From the Davenport (Iowa) Times of Jan. 1, 1935]

A RECORD OF PROGRESS

The year-end edition of the Daily Times of last evening formed an impressive record of progress in this community, despite the depression. Work is proceeding on the Bettendorf-Moline Bridge which, financed by a Government loan of a million and a half dollars, will, when completed, provide an increasingly necessary new traffic link between the cities bordering the river at this point. The project is giving employment to several hundred workmen, and supplies a pay roll of $150,000 monthly.

The introduction of natural gas during the year necessitated an expenditure of $325,000 by the Peoples Light Co., a large part of which went to labor required in the laying of a pipe line which brought the new heating agent into the city.

The installation of dial phones in Davenport during the coming year will call for a heavy investment by the Northwestern Bell Co. At present 50 men are engaged in putting in new equipment at the local exchange.

F. E. R. A. projects provided work for more than 2,000 men in Davenport last year. A number of desirable public improvements have been made possible by Federal aid. While creating a weekly pay roll of $11,000, this relief activity has a permanent value in the completion or carrying forward of civic enterprises which in its lack would not have been realized for years to come.

Work relief in Rock Island County, together with the revival of the farm implement industry has brought about marked improvement in the unemployment situation on the Illinois side of the river. Almost a million dollars was made available for roads, and indications favor the initiation of a number of projects there during the new year which will be of enduring value.

An increase of a million dollars in the income of the farmers of Scott County alone, as made known by Rudolph Koch, chairman of the county corn-hog control committee, in a year which was one of disaster for agriculture in drought-stricken sections constituted perhaps the best news to be found in the special edition.

A 46-percent gain in employment at the Deere & Co. plants in Moline and East Moline is a measure of the improvement which has come about in that important industrial activity and an evidence of the stimilus which enlarged farm income gives to urban manufacturing and the easement of the unemployment situation, particularly in communities where industries supply farm needs.

Rehabilitation of the banking structure of the community and restoration of confidence was the story told in figures revealing an increase in deposits in the financial establishments of the quad cities of more than $8,000,000 during the year, with total deposits approximating $30,000,000. The Davenport Bank & Trust Co.'s deposit gain was nearly $5,000,000, swelling total deposits of the institution to more than $12,000,000.

The increased employment and the larger farm income inaugurated a trade revival which reached its height in a volume of pre-Christmas buying which exceeded the most hopeful expectations. It found the ready-to-wear business leading all lines with a gain of 40 percent, and department-store sales and new cars competing for second place in the recovery race with increases of 25 percent.

[From the Davenport (Iowa) Democrat Leader of Dec. 24, 1934]

REVIVAL OF STEEL GIANT

Just before the financial crash back in 1929 it was generally accepted that the steel industry had overgrown itself. With depressive years, when dozens of plants shut down, the steel giant was adjudged about five times larger than henceforth ever would be necessary.

But now the giant not only reawakens, but assumes such energy as makes him appear a supergiant. He plans a $100,000,000 expansion, with the biggest item in the program $40,000,000 worth of modernization by the United States Steel Corporation in the coming year. Similarly the Ford Motor Co. now has in progress new steel-production equipment valued at $19,000,000, while National Steel announces a $12,000,000 expansion for its subsidiary, the Great Lakes Steel Corporation, and other companies plan new mills.

Automobile manufacturers are the biggest consumers of steel, though railroads are heavy buyers of rails, locomotives, and cars, and are placing orders for this equipment made possible by Government loans. There is a chance, too, that steel may enter a new field of construction of small residential homes. If that eventuates, the industry may find a new and lucrative market almost as valuable as the automotive trade is today.

In any event, the gigantic $100,000,000 program that steel has entered shows how the situation has changed since 1929. With automobile manufacturers expecting 1935 to be much larger than the 2,700,000-car year of 1934, and with railways surging forward with new rail and car orders, the hard-headed business men who direct these industries assuredly believe the country is well on its way to better times.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on the calendar day April 4 I introduced a bill now known as "Senate bill 2507," to amend Public Law, No. 438, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver, issue silver certificates, and for other purposes." On that day it was, by my motion, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The bill constitutes an amendment to the Silver Purchase Act of 1934. The Silver Purchase Act of 1934, during its course through the Senate, was handled by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. Pursuant to what I understand to be the rule, Senate bill 2507, which I introduced on the calendar day April 4, should have been referred to the same committee which handled the original bill. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not intend to object to the request of the Senator from Nevada. Neither the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry nor the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency is present; but I wish to say that it seems to me the jurisdiction properly lies in the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which the Senator first had his bill referred.

Mr. McCARRAN. Excepting, Mr. President, that I understand it to be the general rule here that where a bill which afterward becomes a law in passing through this body is handled by a particular committee, a bill constituting an amendment to that law should be referred to the committee which handled the bill in the first instance. I think that is the general rule; at least, that is what I have understood since I have been here.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not understand that there is any rule on the subject. We frequently find an overlapping of committee jurisdictions. As I stated before, however, I do not intend to raise an objection to the request.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, if the Silver Purchase Act had originally gone to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, it would not have had jurisdiction of it. The only reason why the Silver Purchase Act came within the jurisdiction of the Agricultural Committee was because it was an amendment to an agricultural bill. It seems to me the bill of the Senator from Nevada ought to go to the Committee on Banking and Currency; but I shall not object to his request.

Mr. ROBINSON. I rather think it ought to be considered by that committee. I suggest to the Senator that he let it pass over for the present.

Mr. McCARRAN. I made the request simply in order to follow the general practice.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the matter had better go over for the present.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well.

REPORT OR REPORTS FROM COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the recess or adjournment of the Senate the Committee on Banking and Currency may have leave to submit a report or reports.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this matter was called to my attention today. The request is made in order that the Senate may have something to work upon when it reconvenes on Thursday. I have no objection to the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and consent is granted.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, April 11, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, APRIL 9, 1935

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, we thank Thee that the heart of our Savior is a haven large enough to give anchorage to every human craft that sails the sea of life. By the inspiration of His teaching may we aspire to something nobler, higher, richer, and to something that carries with it more than our daily experience. Heavenly Father, bless us with the best moods of mind in which there are enthusiasms and spiritual raptures which cannot be expressed in words. Oh, bring out of them the very best yearnings, hungers, and heart longings. Strengthen this Congress with the bond of brotherhood that works no ill, heals divisions, softens asperities, promotes friendship, and puts far away all malice. May we associate together as members of a common humanity, living and laboring for the good of our fellow men. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 3973. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. GLASS, Mr. COPELAND, Mr. KING, Mr. NYE, and Mr. KEYES to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

WAR PROFITS

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the vote on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] to recommit the bill (H. R. 5529) to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war and thus provide for the national defense and promote peace.

The Clerk will report the motion.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. If this motion to recommit with instructions is passed it will kill the three amendments——

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The gentleman is not stating a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not state a parliamentary inquiry.

The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment: Page 2, line 9, strike out all of the first sentence of section 3.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH and Mr. O'MALLEY) there were ayes 85 and noes 71.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 205, nays 183, not voting 43, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The doors were opened.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, by instructions of the House and as Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, I report back to the House the bill (H. R. 5529) to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war and thus provide for the national defense, and promote peace, amended in accordance with the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the first sentence of section 3, beginning on line 13, page 2, down to and including the word "wage" in line 9, page 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. MCSWAIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—TAKE THE PROFIT OUT OF WAR

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, this country wants no more war. Under no circumstances should we ever engage in a war of aggression. If a referendum vote of the people were taken before a declaration of war, there would be no war. This is impracticable, however, because defensive wars may be necessary. The best way to avoid war is to be prepared; and I am satisfied that a majority of the American people are thoroughly convinced that we should at all times be prepared to meet any kind of aggression.

The purpose of this resolution is to equalize the burdens of war. If we must have war, then it should be a people's war; and regardless of our occupation, our station, or our position in life. we owe our respective obligations to the defense of our country. It is not possible that we all engage in the same activity, but it is possible and necessary that we all engage in some activity to carry on the common cause.

No more wars will be fought by this country by volunteers only. The man power of the country should be drafted and all within the class should contribute.

Ever since the World War the ex-service men of the country have been insisting on a universal service law. Numerous resolutions have been introduced, every one of which has had the solid backing of patriotic organizations and service men's organizations. However, never before has this type of legislation progressed to that stage where the House is permitted to vote.

If we must have war, then I believe in drafting not only the young men of the country but industry, agriculture, labor, capital, transportation, and communication. It is unfair to take the young men of the country and place them in the trenches at $30 a month and permit labor in the factory back home to draw $15 to $20 a day. It is unfair to these men who are doing the fighting to permit industry to profit by the suffering of those in the front lines. Legislation bringing about the objectives sought in this bill would have been enacted long ago, were it not for the fact that labor wants to be exempted from any governmental regulation in time of war; and by the same token capital and industry insist on the right to make such profits as are possible in time of national emergency. Both labor and capital are wrong. The masses of the people know of no reason why either of these groups should be exempted from their proportionate share of responsibility when it is necessary for the country to bear arms.

Anything that will take the profit out of war will lessen the chances of war. In short, in my judgment no profits in ninety-nine out of one hundred cases will mean no war. I think we all realize that in the last analysis any general legislation passed in peace times providing for the carrying on of war is at most but a declaration of policy. If war does come, the constitutional powers of the Executive cannot be abridged and he will have the power to do those things which are necessary to meet the occasions arising. It is well, however, to announce to the country and to the world that the policy of this Government and the inclination of our people is against war. And it is just as important to announce to our own people that it is the policy of the Government to take away all profit from war. The very announcement itself will have a salutary effect.

I think we all realize that this legislation as drafted is very incomplete and imperfect. It does, however, blaze the trail, and if war does come, a path will be marked out and a policy settled upon. Better that this be done in calm deliberation in peace time rather than be prompted by the hysteria which always accompanies armed conflict.

There can be no war without a declaration by the Congress. Congress will then of necessity be in session, and common sense tells us that that particular Congress will pass such legislation as is necessary to meet the emergency then existing. If the present bill becomes a law, it can readily be remodeled or amended to accommodate the circumstances.

We must not forget that we are attempting in this legislation to discourage war and not encourage war. Possibly some of the provisions of this bill as amended are drastic. Possibly some of them would work injustices. Possibly some of the provisions are impracticable. Yet, with all its faults, the underlying principle is made plain; that is, that each and every citizen must do his part, and the loss and the suffering which must accompany any war will be equalized insofar as possible. Let us forget our selfish interests and pass this bill.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, I am voting for H. R. 5529 because I think it is a long step in the right direction.

Coming as it does from the Military Affairs Committee, the bill cannot go into the realm of taxation. This must be left to another bill coming from the Ways and Means Committee. I am hopeful that just as soon as the overworked Ways and Means Committee can do so it will report a companion bill that will deal drastically with the whole subject of taxation in time of war. I believe that only by placing the cost of war on those who in the past have profited from war can war be prevented. When the munition makers and the armament manufacturers and all the others who look to war as a gala event that multiplies their millions and increases their power find that unmistakably and irrevocably war profits are abolished and made forever unattainable we shall have an end to war propaganda and to all the heavy burden of taxation that goes with it.

Private profit made in war materials or in the supplying of services to the Government in the prosecution of the war is blood money. So long as the manhood of the Nation must bare its breast to the bullets, the shells, the poison gas, and the bayonets of the foe, those who stay behind the lines in safe and secure enjoyment of life must be prevented from making money out of disaster. I think there is merit in the provision of the bill for the fixing of a ceiling of prices in time of war. This should be an effective method of preventing profiteering. But more effective is that amendment offered by the able chairman of the committee and now numbered section 8 of the bill. That amendment is sound and far-reaching. Here it is:

That upon the declaration of war there shall be imposed a tax of 100 percent of all excess war profits that may be earned during the period of war as defined by this act.

This amendment, in short, says: "Let the profiteers pay for the war." And that, I believe, is what the American people say.

Another far-reaching provision of the bill we are about to pass is the one that makes the pay of soldiers in war time equivalent to that of labor. Still another conscripts the management of industry, transportation, communications, and commerce in time of war.

While I am confident that this Congress will in another bill take care of the taxation problem as it relates to war, and thus effectively and completely abolish war profits, I am glad to support the present bill as a first step and a long step toward a most desirable goal.

But let us not stop here. Let us here and now decide to put an end to all profiteering, in peace as well as in war. We can go a long way toward accomplishing this by a drastic tax revision which places the burden of taxation on those with high incomes and large profits. A surtax on corporation profits is an essential step in our program. I hope this will be one of the accomplishments of this Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, the 6th day of April, it was 18 years ago since our declaration of war against the Imperial Government of Germany, and after this long delay, we are now finally about to enact legislation designed and intended to take the profit out of war. The very fact that it has required all these years of agitation and education to arrive at the present stage when we are at last legislating on the subject is sufficient proof in itself of the strong opposition and insidious propaganda which has had to be overcome and the numerous obstacles which have thus far thwarted our efforts. For that reason, I am of the opinion that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN], the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and his colleagues on that committee, are entitled to a great deal of credit for bringing this bill before the House.

The measure, even as amended, is probably not perfect and undoubtedly contains imperfections the same as all other legislation; and while I personally prefer the Nye bill, nevertheless, this is the first legislative proposal to end war by taking the profits out of war which I have had an opportunity to support and vote for, and I am going to embrace the opportunity. To my mind, it is significant that the American Federation of Labor and the American Legion are in favor of this bill, as amended, and I hope and trust that these powerful organizations will give their support in the future, as I intend to do, to legislation to tax the profits out of war, which I am inclined to believe will be the most effective method to insure the demonetization of war.

SENATE DOCUMENT NO. 259, SIXTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

Mr. Speaker, I have recently obtained from the library of the House of Representatives one of the few copies which are still extant of Senate Document No. 259, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, Corporate Earnings and Government Revenues, which shows the earnings of some 31,500 corporations which earned in excess of 50 percent on their capital stock during the war period, many of them as high as several hundred and thousand percent. This report proved so astonishing in its revelations and disclosures that Congress feared to make it public, and it was immediately surpressed and withdrawn from circulation. It is without doubt the most damnable and damning indictment of profiteering in war time to be found anywhere in the history of the world, and very few persons know of its existence. I had the document called to my attention recently by a friend who held a high position in the service of our Government during the war, and who is of the opinion that its resurrection and republication as a public document would do more to educate the public and the Members of Congress to the evils of war profiteering than any single thing that could be done, and I agree with him. This document presents in its many thousands of columns of cold figures a lurid tale of perfidy, avarice, greed, high crime, and treason which cannot fail to arouse the indignation, anger, and hatred of every normal human being.

It presents, indeed, a diabolical and hellish contrast to the casualty lists, lists of the names of the wounded and killed who sacrificed life, limb, and health, and the myriads who sustained financial and material losses as a result of the war, which President Woodrow Wilson, after his sad experience with the diplomats and statesmen of Europe, declared in his disillusionment was nothing but a commercial war after all.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is at least a forward stride in the right direction, and I hope it will be followed by others until we have trod the full distance to our ultimate destination and demonetized war and rendered it forever impossible for a few human monsters and ghouls to profiteer and coin millions of dollars out of the tears, blood, and sacrifices of multitudes of their fellow men.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, is it a mark of the bizarre intemperance of our age that we should seriously consider a bill of such untimely and irrelevant character as is this immature offspring of the House Committee on Military Affairs?

In this day of civilization the common people of all countries are in opposition to war—that is, until such time as they are whipped into a rage and fury that knows no reason and destroys every semblance of sound judgment, lashed into a caged animal's destructive fury that overrides the sense and restraints of prudence. There are, however, in all countries and at all times those peculiar types of humanity, both male and female, who seem only to be able to swim when the waters are turbulent—agitators; eagle-pluckers; patrioteers; profiteers; flag fliers; bombastic, self-seeking, and pompous country savers; politicians of every color and every hue whose last recourse to self-aggrandizement is to try to walk up the ladder of importance by building it out of the bleaching bones of their dead brothers.

The bill H. R. 5529, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, is labeled "to prevent profiteering in war." What an alluring name! What a delightful title! But what a misnomer and what a farce!

Why waste time with such nonsense? As if it were possible to regulate the conduct of war or define the national policy for war when peace, the antithesis of war, prevails. The very men who are proposing this declaration of national policy would probably be the first to destroy that declared policy if war clouds darkened the horizon.

Peace and war are two entirely different states of mind. They are two directly opposing attitudes of thought and conduct; and, being such, it is as ridiculous to talk about a fixed war policy in time of peace as it is to talk about peace policy in time of war—excepting always the hypocritical pretensions and sinister purposes of a nation's self-imposed leaders, who, by dark and devious plans and deceptive preachments, must need mislead and misdirect the popular opinion.

This much is easily predictable: That when the time comes again—and let us pray to God it never does come again—that this Nation shall engage in the slaughter of its own and other men and women, those who are in the position of governmental authority will slaughter this piece of legislation as quickly and as ferociously as a lion slays a lamb.

Why bother about a declaration of policy by act of Congress when we have the recent spectacle of a national referendum on a declaration of policy which meant nothing to an administration elected in November 1916, because it kept us out of war, and immediately thereafter the people who had by popular vote so nobly and publicly and nationally vocalized a declaration of policy that the world might hear and see and understand were outraged by every manner of means in the furtherance of engaging in the very war which they had voted to keep out of?

This bill on final passage is battered into a caricature of its appearance when it first came from the committee. In the first place, the bill contained a provision that its provisions should be applicable in case of war or when Congress declared an emergency existed. This emergency wording was stricken from it. It originally contained a conscription of man-power clause in the words "all the unorganized militia between ages of 21 and 31."

What is the meaning of unorganized militia? The militia consists of those enrolled and drilled in military organizations other than the regular military forces. The militia is an organized body. What kind of an animal is an unorganized organization? Is it a hamlet with no hamlet? Is it some sort of a milkless cheese? Or a legless quadruped? The Committee of the Whole House increased the age to 45 years, and then on a motion to recommit struck the whole provision from the bill. The mere declaration of a conscript army for the whole country in time of peace could not possibly be considered as other than a warlike measure. The bill, instead of being a gesture for peace, is a movement toward war; at least that is how it will be construed by the world.

The bill provides that from and after a date prior to a declaration of war, which date the President is authorized and directed to determine, prices may not be increased. It proposes to freeze prices. It does freeze labor. What kind of language is that? If this means anything, it means that if war were declared on March 1, 1936, the President might determine by retroactive proclamation that no prices should be raised since January 1, 1936. What confusion worse confounded that would be! Under the provisions of the bill my grocer who sold me a can of baked beans for 15 cents on January 1, 1936, and later, say, February 1, 1936, charged me 16 cents might be subject to a fine of $100,000 and 1 year's imprisonment.

Further, the bill provides that during the period of war the President is empowered to designate any person to exercise his powers under the act. It is bad enough to be compelled to enact such legislation in time of war, but it is tragical to give serious consideration to the creation of arbitrary dictatorial and autocratic powers in peace time. Must we Napoleonize the state in perpetuity? Must we forever stand on the brink of absolutism waiting to be toppled into its abysmal depths?

Furthermore, this bill could very easily be used, and perhaps would be so used, to enslave the workingmen of the country, to disorganize every unit of united labor, to destroy on the moment the fruits that generations of hardship and struggle and deprivation have brought to labor, both organized and unorganized. This is the foremost reason why I shall vote against it.

For confusion of thought, for cloudiness of language, for uncertainty and aimlessness of purpose, for waste of time in consideration, and for utter failure to register, this bill, alleged to prevent profiteering in time of war, has in all likelihood never been equaled in the legislative halls of this or any other nation. It will be no surprise to me if its destiny is the standing joke of the ages.

I would not debase my intelligence by voting for it, even on the plea that it is intended to prevent profiteering and would help to keep us out of war.

When the country has again been whipped and threshed and lashed into a war craze, this puerile and measly attempt, if it becomes a law, will immediately be wiped off the statute books and incontinently buried beneath the enactments of that dread day and hour.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, on last Friday unanimous consent was granted to all Members of the House to extend their own remarks upon this bill for a period of 3 legislative days. This is the third legislative day. Since that time considerable water has passed over the wheel and doubtless Members who then did not extend their remarks now would like to do so. So, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 3 legislative days, beginning tomorrow, within which to extend their own remarks on this measure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes for the purpose of making a statement.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—I shall not object to this request, but if there are further requests for time to speak out of order I shall be constrained to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as there may be confusion in the minds of some as to the effect of the motion to recommit, I merely wish to read a statement which appears in my remarks in yesterday's RECORD to this effect:

> Of course, if the motion to recommit amending the bill as contemplated should by any possibility prevail, the other provisions of the bill are so vital that I would urge every Member of the House to vote for it, and to send it to the Senate with a well-nigh unanimous support, in the belief that when the Senate amends the bill in such form and manner as shall appear to the Senate wise and proper, it will still be possible for us in conference to work out a bill that will stop profiteering, tend to discourage war, thus promote peace, and greatly assist in equalizing the burdens of war.

So I still think, Mr. Speaker, that the bill has great possibilities for accomplishing the results for which all Members of the House except 15 have voted.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. It should be borne in mind, too, that the matter stricken out by the motion to recommit was not in the bill as originally introduced by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes; but I amended for what I regarded as good and sufficient reasons.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. And it did not relate to the great purpose of taking the profits out of war.

Mr. McSWAIN. Exactly, not directly, but concerns equalizing the burdens of war, and of promoting peace, but discouraging some other nation from attacking us, and provoking war. I am glad only about 15 Members voted against this bill which now goes to the Senate with this powerful indorsement.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs may have permission to sit during the session of the House this afternoon on an important hearing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, at the time the bill H. R. 5529, the McSwain bill, was passed, I was sitting in the back of the room but failed to hear my name either on the roll call on the motion to recommit or on the roll call on final passage of the bill. On the motion to recommit I failed to vote. If I could be permitted to vote on the passage of the bill, I would vote "aye."

BANK RECEIVERSHIPS

Mr. STEAGALL, from the Banking and Currency Committee, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 630) on House Resolution 185, as follows:

House Resolution 185

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the House of Representatives the following information: The methods of selecting and appointing receivers and attorneys for closed national banks; the costs of receivers' salaries, legal and other expenses involved in the liquidation of each of the closed national banks now in process of liquidation; the amounts due depositors of each such bank at its date of closing; and the amounts paid depositors of each such bank since closing.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the committee may be read.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it, the resolution simply calls for information; is my understanding correct?

Mr. STEAGALL. That is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want a little information. Can the gentleman from Alabama tell us anything about the present status of the Home Owners' Loan bill in the Senate?

Mr. STEAGALL. I hope the gentleman will present his inquiry at some other time.

Mr. COCHRAN. I want it simply as a matter of information.

Mr. STEAGALL. I have not heard from the Senate today on the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act. I cannot give the gentleman any information on it. I am sorry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

[H. Rept. No. 630, 74th Cong., 1st sess.]

Adverse report [to accompany H. Res. 185]

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 185) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit to the House of Representatives certain information relating to closed banks, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House and recommend that the resolution do not pass.

STATEMENT

The resolution in question requests information as to the cost of receivers' salaries, legal, and other expenses involved in the liquidation of such closed banks, the amount due depositors of each such bank at its date of closing, the amounts paid depositors of each such bank since closing, and method of selecting receivers and attorneys for closed national banks.

Section 333 of the Revised Statutes requires the Comptroller of the Currency to make an annual report to Congress, which report, among other things, is required to give a statement of the national banks which have been closed during the year. It is the custom of the Comptroller of the Currency to include in such annual report and the appendix thereto information and figures relative to the affairs of closed banks to such extent that the report of January 3, 1934, embraced nearly 700 pages, including over 100 tabulated statements in the appendix covering the affairs of both open and closed banks; 205 pages of said report are devoted to giving detailed information relative to the affairs of national banks in liquidation, together with 11-page textual summary covering same. The appendix to the current report of the Comptroller is at the present time in the hands of the Government Printing Office and should soon be available. The number of pages in same devoted to information involving closed national banks will be found to embrace an even greater number of pages than that of the appendix to the previous report above referred to. There will be found in this report tables showing the cost of liquidation of each national bank by name, including receivers' salaries, legal, and other expenses. There will also be found therein the amounts due the depositors and creditors of each such bank at its date of closing and the amount paid said depositors and creditors of each such bank since the date of its closing. There accordingly appears no need for the adoption of House Resolution 185 in order to obtain this information.

In addition to the foregoing specific items of information relative to closed national banks requested by said resolution, the report of the Comptroller of the Currency is so inclusive as to embrace the following additional information relative to such closed banks:

Name and location of bank. Charter number. Date of organization. Capital at date of organization. Total dividends paid during existence as a national banking association. Capital at date of failure. Date receiver appointed. Lawful money deposited with Treasurer of the United States to redeem circulation. Circulation outstanding at date of failure. Total deposits at date of failure. Borrowed money (bills payable, rediscounts, etc.) at date of failure.

Book value of assets at date of failure: Estimated good, estimated doubtful, estimated worthless.

Additional assets received since date of failure. Total assessment upon shareholders. Total assets and stock assessment.

Progress of liquidation to date of report: Cash collections from assets, cash collections from stock assessment, unpaid balance R. F. C. loan, offsets allowed and settled, total collections from all sources—including offsets allowed and unpaid balance R. F. C. loan, loss on assets compounded or sold under order of court, book value of remaining uncollected assets, book value of remaining uncollected stock assessment.

Disposition of proceeds of liquidation: Conservators' distributions—to secured creditors; to unsecured creditors. Dividends paid by receivers—on secured claims; on unsecured claims. Secured and preferred liabilities paid, except through dividends, including offsets allowed. Cash advanced in protection of assets. Conservators' expenses. Receivers' salaries, legal and other expenses. Cash in hands of comptroller and receivers.

Amount of claims proved. Dividends (percent). Interest dividends (percent). Date finally closed or restored to solvency.

Statement showing summary of the financial operations of the Division of Insolvent National Banks for the year.

Table showing summary of status, progress, and results of liquidation of all national banks placed in hands of receivers from the date of the first national-bank failure in year 1865 to date of report.

The report shows with respect to unlicensed national banks the following:

Name and location of bank. Charter number. Date of organization. Capital at date of organization. Conservators' appointments: Date, capital, total assets, total deposits, bills payable and rediscounts. Deposits released through reorganizations and sales of assets, at par value plus accrued interest, to date of report. Date licensed. Date receiver appointed. Otherwise in liquidation.

The report shows also the following:

National banks restored to solvency after having been placed in charge of receivers: Title and location of bank, date receiver appointed, capital stock.

National banks restored to solvency which subsequently became insolvent: Title and location of bank, date receiver appointed, capital stock.

Dividends paid to creditors of insolvent national banks and Washington, D. C., State banks under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency during year: Title and location of bank, date receiver appointed, dividends paid during the year—amount; percent. Total percent of dividends paid to creditors.

Summaries of failed national banks the affairs of which have been closed, by years and by States, since 1865.

These annual reports of the Comptroller of the Currency are as a matter of course furnished to every Member of Congress, may be purchased by others from the Government Printing Office, and are available through most of the libraries in the country which are on the mailing list for such reports.

As respects the matter of the methods of selecting and appointing receivers and attorneys for closed banks, the law provides that such receivers are to be appointed by the Comptroller of the Currency, and the courts have recognized his right to retain the services of attorneys in connection with liquidation of such banks.

The committee is informed that there has gradually developed in the office of the Comptroller a staff of expert receivers with many years' experience in liquidating banks. During the recent banking crisis banks failed in such large number as to require the appointment of additional receivers in some cases. Generally speaking, however, an experienced receiver already on the staff was placed in charge of a newly closed bank of substantial size. These receivers had developed assistants over the years who were deemed capable to handle the smaller institutions as receivers thereof, subject, of course, at all times to the supervision and direction of the Comptroller of the Currency and in certain respects to the court. Where additional appointments were found necessary the Comptroller of the Currency was able to draw from a large list of applications always on file in his office of men which, after due investigation, he determined were capable.

As regards attorneys appointed to handle various receivership matters, the committee is informed that the Comptroller of the Currency has found through the past years' experience that many of the complicated legal questions pertaining to national-bank receiverships are outside the normal experience of the average attorney, and that the interests of the depositors of the banks in question require particular care in selecting attorneys with such experience as far as possible. The committee is further informed that usually when a bank fails a large number of recommendations for the appointment of firms of attorneys are received. The standing of these various firms is carefully investigated from the standpoint of legal ability and standing in the community. The best of the firms in question are then referred to the receiver for investigation to ascertain whether or not their previous connection with the bank or as debtors to the bank or shareholders therein might operate as a disqualification. The receiver advises which of the firms are not so disqualified and further investigates as to their local standing in the community. The Comptroller of the Currency then selects from those firms not disqualified by personal interest a legal representative for the receiver of the particular bank involved.

The Comptroller of the Currency recently appeared before this committee and testified freely with respect to all information requested of him, and this committee has found a disposition on his part to freely and frankly give to it and to its individual members any information requested of him pertaining to closed banks and which is available in his office. The committee accordingly concludes that there is no reasonable basis for calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for the information requested in House Resolution 185.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. Is this motion subject to debate?

The SPEAKER. A motion to table is not debatable.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama permit me to ask a question before he presses his motion?

Mr. STEAGALL. I hope the gentleman will not ask me to do that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

Mr. BLANTON. That will not bring an automatic vote.

Mr. MAPES. It would take less time to submit to a question.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

Mr. SNELL. Is this a vote on the motion?

The SPEAKER. This is a call of the House to get a quorum.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 52]

Andrew, Mass.	Colmer	Fish	Igoe
Andrews, N. Y.	Cooley	Focht	Jenckes, Ind.
Bacharach	Corning	Frey	Kee
Bacon	Crowe	Fulmer	Keller

O'Day	Rayburn	Shannon	Werner
Oliver	Richards	Sisson	West
O'Malley	Richardson	Stack	Williams
Owen	Romjue	Taylor, S. C.	Zimmerman

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and fifty Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. CASTELLOW. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TAYLOR] is unavoidably detained. Had he been present, he would have voted "aye" on the passage of the McSwain bill to take profits out of war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] moves to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 133, noes 51.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and thirty-five Members are present, a quorum.

So the motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

Mr. STEAGALL, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted a privileged report (H. Rept. No. 631) on House Resolution 190, as follows:

House Resolution 190

Whereas there is pending before the Committee on Rules of the House of Representatives House Resolution 46, to investigate the Home Owners' Loan Corporation; and

Whereas in an effort to assist said committee in its endeavor to determine whether or not sufficient evidence justifying the Rules Committee of the House of Representatives reporting a rule authorizing an investigation of the activities of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, there was dispatched to John Fahey, Chairman of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, a communication registered under date of February 28, 1935, asking for specific information, to wit:

First. A transcript of the weekly and monthly meetings of the legal staff of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, Washington, D. C., for the period from January 1, 1934, to the date of said letter, February 28, 1935.

Second. Requesting all bulletins issued by the chairman of the Board or the general manager of the Corporation, and copies of all resolutions issued by the Board pertaining to eligibility of questionable loans.

Third. Copies of all opinions rendered by the Loan Review Division and those rendered by Wilbur Thompson, legal adviser of the Loan Division, from September 1933 to date, February 28, 1935.

Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Chairman of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the House of Representatives the following information:

1. A transcript of the stenographic notes taken by Helen Johnson at the weekly and monthly meetings of the legal staff of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation for the period from January 1, 1934, to February 28, 1935.

2. Copies of all bulletins issued by the chairman of the Board or the general manager of the Corporation, and copies of all resolutions issued by the Board pertaining to eligibility of questionable loans from the period January 1, 1934, to February 28, 1935.

3. Copies of all opinions rendered by the Loan Review Division and those by Wilbur Thompson, legal adviser of the Loan Division, from September 1933 to February 28, 1935.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

[H. Rept. No. 631, 74th Cong., 1st sess.]

[To accompany H. Res. 190]

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 190) directing the Chairman of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to furnish certain information to the House of Representatives, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House and recommend that the resolution do not pass.

The committee is advised that a resolution has been introduced and referred to the Committee on Rules of the House of Representatives providing for an investigation of the administration of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, upon which hearings have been conducted and which resolution is now pending before that committee. The Banking and Currency Committee is in receipt of a letter from Hon. John H. Fahey, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. The letter follows:

Hon. HENRY B. STEAGALL,
Chairman Banking and Currency Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. STEAGALL: House Resolution No. 190 has been called to my attention, and I understand that you desire a report on the matter.

The resolution calls, first, for information, as follows:

"1. A transcript of the stenographic notes taken by Helen Johnson at the weekly and monthly meetings of the legal staff of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation for the period from January 1, 1934, to February 28, 1935."

I am informed that the legal staff of Home Owners' Loan Corporation has conducted periodical meetings from time to time at which the legal work of the Corporation has been discussed and that no official minutes have been kept of such meetings. It is my understanding, however, that a stenographer has been present at some of these meetings and that she has made short stenographic notes of the principal rulings affecting title examination and other technical matters which have been used by the legal staff in the conduct of loan examinations and in the supervision of the legal procedure in closing the loans. These stenographic notes are of informal meetings and have not been written out in full and cannot be made available on short notice. I will be glad to have the head of the legal department come before your committee or any other committee of the Congress to explain these matters if the committee requests it, and, of course, I assume, these notes can be written out in full and submitted if the committee request it.

In the second place the resolution requests information as follows:

"2. Copies of all bulletins issued by the chairman of the board or the general manager of the Corporation, and copies of all resolutions issued by the board pertaining to eligibility of questionable loans from the period January 1, 1934, to February 28, 1935."

The bulletins issued by the chairman and those issued by the general manager and the resolutions of the board pertaining to eligibility of questionable loans have been incorporated in the Manual of Rules and Regulations which is in printed form and which will be made available to the committee if it desires it. The question of eligibility is dealt with in chapter VI, section 4, of the manual.

In the third place the resolution calls for:

"3. Copies of all opinions rendered by the Loan Review Division, and those by Wilbert Thompson, legal adviser of the Loan Division, from September 1933 to February 28, 1935."

The Loan Review Division has reviewed more than 12,000 closed loans in an effort to improve loan procedure, but the results of this review were put in statistical form and would require explanation to be understandable. The Loan Review Division has reviewed a very large number of cases at the request of State managers and on appeal from applicants, but the results of these reviews, after being submitted to the board, were incorporated in the loan files, and such loan files have been returned to the States, and it would be extremely difficult and expensive to assemble such files or to secure space for them. Mr. Wilbert Thompson served for a limited time as special adviser to the Loan Review Division and gave innumerable oral opinions and some written opinions which were incorporated in such files. I will be glad to have the Loan Review Adviser report to the Committee on these matters if the committee requests it, and to secure such information on these subjects as the committee may request.

Very truly yours,

JOHN H. FAHEY, Chairman.

Under the circumstances it is the opinion of the Banking and Currency Committee that it would not be in the public interest to incur further expense in this connection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. SWEENEY. Will the gentleman withhold that a moment?

Mr. Speaker, I make a point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SWEENEY) there were—ayes 140, noes 67.

So the motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, the resolution that has just been tabled was proposed by me because of the fact that in February, I dispatched a communication to the Honorable John Fahey, Chairman of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, soliciting certain information. I received from an authentic source information that if we could secure from Mr. Fahey a transcript of the meetings of the legal division, wherein the legal staff passed upon the eligibility of applications for loans, we might secure information upon some loans that were illegal in character and I might present the matter to the Committee on Rules, that has before it my resolution which now seeks to check upon the administration of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

The information I solicited was merely asking Mr. Fahey to give to me copies of all bulletins issued by his department and a transcription of the testimony taken in the legal division at their weekly or monthly meetings covering a certain period.

On April 2, in the absence of a reply from Mr. Fahey, I took advantage of the rules of the House, the only advantage a Member has, to present a resolution of inquiry asking Mr. Fahey as a public servant to submit to the House of Representatives certain information to which the country and this House is entitled. This resolution I understood would be referred to the Committee on Rules, but I was informed that the Committee on Rules had no jurisdiction over resolutions of inquiry, so the Speaker very properly referred this resolution to the Committee on Banking and Currency, which has jurisdiction over the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and all matters pertaining to banking legislation. There comes back now the report that this information will not be furnished and that there are good grounds for not furnishing the information. The Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee comes before the House today, probably at the advice of his committee or probably on the advice of the administration, and takes advantage of a parliamentary situation which precludes debate on a motion to table in order that the House may not be informed as to why Mr. Fahey refuses to give Congress this information. By this action he shuts off the right to secure this information under the established rules of the House.

I say to the Members of this House that you resolve yourselves into mere rubber stamps, because the integrity of this House is at issue when you table any such resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. As a Member of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States the gentleman from Ohio has a right to go down to any of these departments and demand to see any of their records. Whenever I go down there and demand it they show me their records. I would suggest to the gentleman that whenever he desires data from any department that he go down there and make them show the records to him.

Mr. SWEENEY. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that up to the time I introduced the resolution to investigate the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, many of the Members of the House received nothing but discourteous treatment from that department. Many of us knew that to be a fact. They have a man up there now, an ex-Member of Congress, Mr. Ellzey, of Mississippi, who is there for just one purpose, and that is to serve the Congressmen, to be courteous to them, and to give them the information to which they are entitled. Mr. Ellzey is a fine gentleman and he knows the problems of the average Congressman. Prior to the introduction of this resolution, I may say to the gentleman from Texas, we never received that treatment.

Mr. Fahey was before the Rules Committee and read a lengthy statement that took an hour and a half. When he concluded, I sought to interrogate him, and I was precluded from asking him any questions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I may say the gentleman was precluded from asking questions because it has been a long-standing rule of the Rules Committee that witnesses appearing before the Rules Committee cannot be interrogated except by a member of the committee. This is for orderly procedure.

The gentleman was not treated any differently from any other Member.

Mr. SWEENEY. I find no fault with the order of procedure when it is orderly, but it is high time to change some of our procedure.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I will say to my friend from Ohio that he rendered valuable service to every Member of Congress by introducing and pressing his resolution, because he finally waked up this arrogant Home Owners' Loan Corporation Board. If he wants to interrogate Mr. Fahey and his high-hatted Board, I would suggest that he do as some of us did. Not long ago a committee representing the Texas delegation, composed of Mr. PATMAN, Mr. DIES, and myself, went down there and we had Mr. Fahey and his Board sitting at the table for about an hour and a half while we did some interrogating of him.

Mr. SWEENEY. And he did all the talking?

Mr. BLANTON. No; he did not. He tried to do it, but before we got through he let us do the talking.

Mr. SWEENEY. That is unusual. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6718) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. SANDLIN, CANNON of Missouri, TARVER, BUCHANAN, THURSTON, and BUCKBEE.

LET'S GET DOWN TO "BRASS TACKS"

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, after all the flowery and rhetorical oratory to which we have listened in recent weeks—yes; in recent months—I want to suggest a proposal that is somewhat hard-boiled, practical, and even—in the judgment of some—"radical."

Let us get down to brass tacks!

If that is radicalism, please make the most of it!

Every Member of this Congress will agree with every other Member that he believes in "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." All of us have sworn a thousand times to uphold the principles enunciated in the Declaration of Independence. The basic beliefs of the Democrats, Republicans, Progressives, Farmer-Laborites, Socialists, and even of other so-called "third parties" are not materially different. Why, then, do not these parties get together and stand for the same legislation?

I will give you the answer to this interrogation: Because the profiteers and exploiters are ruling this country and intend to continue ruling it; because they do not care a rap how frequently legislators, politicians, and Congressmen endorse abstract principles that everybody acknowledges to be correct; and because they expect to continue to keep these officials divided when it comes to practical action that would put these principles into effect.

There is enthusiastic endorsement of spread-eagle speeches in favor of patriotic generalities. But there is a significant coolness when we try to "get down to brass tracks"—when we seek to translate those generalities into realities. Yet no party can expect to stay long in power that confines itself to abstractions. The people are not so dumb as superficial politicians may think. They know that they are being robbed, they know who is doing the robbing, and they want the robbing to stop. Just who will be their leader or leaders, is still unsettled—be it our beloved President or some other dynamic chief, will depend on circumstances. Much as we revere Franklin D. Roosevelt, most of us will concede that the people, seeking emancipation from capitalistic domination, will rally behind any sufficiently capable and influential leader when the final conflict comes—preferably Roosevelt, to be sure, but the individual will be less considered than the militancy and the clarity of his program.

The people want to "get down to brass tacks"!

If present plans and leadership will not take them where they want to go, they will, naturally enough, seek another route under other leadership.

Army Day has come and gone, and we have listened to customary patriotic speeches in which the orators reasserted their fixed determination to stand by their country, right or wrong. The usual psychology of militarism was utilized by the participants. I doubt if many people were profoundly moved. I doubt if they paid much attention to reiteration of patriotic slogans that everybody believes in and that are repeated mainly by hypocrites and profiteers when they want to get somebody else to go forth to battle and be shot for the sake of their investments.

For my part I have no fear of the "reds"—of the aggressive left wing of the labor movement that is getting tired of inactivity and hypocrisy—but I do consider that the extreme right-wingers, the die-hard reactionaries, the ultraconservatives, are a menace that cannot be ignored.

It is as I have said, a time to get down to "brass tacks." It is a time to stand for the honest, human patriotism of Jefferson and Jackson and of everybody else who believes that democracy should apply to industry as well as to political formalities. We do not yet have genuine democracy. Let us make an honest attempt to establish it instead of hounding men and women who show us the unmistakable proof that so far we live under a sham democracy—an iron plutocracy cleverly camouflaged with the veil of "democratic institutions."

I have voted for various relief measures for the simple reason that I wanted to save men and women from starving. I was certainly in favor of using Federal funds to that end. So long as there is money in the Treasury and so long as there are American citizens who tramp the streets and highways without food and shelter, I endorse giving them some of that money so they can eat and sleep. But we cannot forever go on handing out doles. Even if we can, we ought not. If our prevailing system necessitates continual charity, it is high time we got rid of that system. The common sense of the most conservative Congressman ought to coincide with this position.

From the "right wing" will come the customary accusations of "radicalism." Let them come. If Jefferson could stand such charges in 1800 and 1804, and if Jackson could survive them in 1828 and 1832, the really democratic Democrats of 1935 need not worry. Every pioneer in the endless struggle between the robbers and the robbed has been abused in similar language. The terminology will not frighten us.

Years ago William Jennings Bryan, who was often called a "radical", although he was never a Socialist, and throughout his life attempted to humanize the old system which many of us feel is now beyond saving, said:

> Heads of railroads and other big corporations meet in secret and reach conclusions which are to be supported by united action, and they expect the government to furnish the army to carry out these private conclusions.

Georges Clemenceau, who later became Prime Minister of France, replying to the argument that the government should keep "hands off", remarked:

> Economists argue that the state has no right to interfere in the relations between miners and mine owners. The mine owner is at home on his own property. Certain securities for life and limb may be demanded, nothing more. But no sooner does a strike begin than the state, which 5 minutes before had no right to interfere, is called upon to bring in horse, foot, and artillery on the side of the coal owners. Then the miners have no rights left and the judges decide against them on shameless pretexts and condemn them to prison, when they cannot bear false witness in support of the police and military.

Daniel Webster, foreseeing the inevitable tendency of government—a tendency against which progressive and socially minded statesmen must always struggle—pointed out:

The object of society is the protection of something in which the members possess unequal shares. * * * It seems to me to be plain that in the absence of military force political power naturally and necessarily goes into the hands which hold the property.

In modern times, reverting to a clearer interpretation of the basic principles upon which the Republic was founded, we have endeavored to make society something different than an organization that aimed to protect the possession of "unequal shares" and to take care of a favored few.

After the deprivation and desperation of the Hoover regime and the obvious near collapse of the whole capitalistic system, we agree that a new deal was needed. The producers—the people who do the work and produce the wealth—felt that they wanted no more of the "old deal." In electing Franklin D. Roosevelt and his associates, they were not giving a blanket endorsement to the Democratic Party, to any party, to any name, or to any slogan. They voted for them because of the conviction that Roosevelt and his coworkers were committed to a social reconstruction program that meant economic freedom for the masses. It is unnecessary for me to state—for it is a truth that is obvious to all who can run and read—that if the social liberation thus sought does not come through President Roosevelt and his administration, the long-suffering people of our beloved land will seek it through some other party or movement.

As a Democrat, I prefer to see the historic party of democracy stay true to its traditions and to its nomenclature. But I am, first of all, for actual democracy. And so are the great millions of the people of America who provide the food, shelter, clothing, and fuel for the Nation.

I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just—that his justice cannot sleep forever—

Said Thomas Jefferson. Very probably he would have said the same thing if he had lived in these latter days and seen the cruelty and rapacity of the capitalist system.

No better answer to the claim that Americanism, per se, consists of approving everything now embodied in existing legislation can be found in the splendid statement of Edward A. Steiner. I quote from it with full-hearted approval:

There are two Americas. One in which we are living and the other that which we hope to make it. Of the one we are the guests; of the other we are with the builders. Builders must be idealists, men who are not only dissatisfied with the present, but have great plans and hopes for the future. Frankly, I am not satisfied by what we have, though I know the value of what we have, and I am passionately eager for a greater, stronger, finer America.

TAKE THE PROFIT OUT OF WAR

Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, during the past week the House has considered the merits and demerits of a bill, the subject matter of which, in my opinion, is comparable in importance to the so-called "security bill" that this House will discuss within the next legislative week. The bill, drafted by Chairman MCSWAIN, and before us today for final consideration, is, as it appears to me—although I do not agree entirely with all of its provisions—no makeshift, haphazard, or hurriedly drafted bill, but rather the result of many years of thought by Mr. MCSWAIN merging, if you will, his thought with that expressed by many former Members of Congress. No man has been more devoted to the cause of taking the profit out of war than the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who introduced his first resolution on this subject on his first day in Congress 14 years ago.

The purpose of the bill is both evident and praiseworthy. I know of no man who would in conscience and with deliberation visit another war upon us. Every man and woman in this House is in agreement that the bill has a laudable purpose and is anxious to obtain legislation that will prevent profiteering in time of war and place the burdens of war equally upon all citizens, and by so doing obtain the best guarantee we can have for the continued promotion of peace. As has been said, this bill merely approaches the ideal, but can in no manner attain the ideal, because the equalization of the hardships, sufferings, and sacrifices of war is impossible. No money in any amount in the nature of a contribution by way of tax by any individual can approach the priceless value of one human life lost on the field of a battle.

Men who have experienced war favor a measure of this type as a peace measure. Preparedness as provided for in this or any like act does not encourage war, nor does action by this House anticipate war, but it can be viewed as a peace movement or a vehicle by which the probability of war is lessened.

The title of the bill, "to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war and thus provide for the national defense and promote peace", might invite an inquiry as to how far statute law can go in taking the profit out of war by preventing profiteering and stabilizing prices in time of war. The War Policies Commission that reported in 1932, the creation of which was provided for by congressional resolve in 1930, recommended that "a constitutional amendment be adopted clearly defining the power of Congress to prevent profiteering and to stabilize prices in time of war."

However, until that amendment was submitted to the several States the Commission recommended a program, the provisions of which are embraced, in their essentials, in the bill now before the House. The necessity for consideration of a constitutional amendment has, in the opinion of many, changed with the times; so that today, a brief period of 2 years after the submission of the report by the War Policies Commission, whose membership comprised some of the ablest men in American public life, some of whom were lawyers, believed that the attitude of the Supreme Court toward emergency legislation would sustain such war-time legislation in the interest of national defense. These advocates of the present bill advise us that "the Supreme Court of the United States will, and should, sustain any act of Congress reasonably and logically appropriate to the preservation of the life of the Nation in a war emergency." The opinion in the case of United States v. MacIntosh (283 U. S. 205, 222 (1931)), an excerpt from which is quoted below, is ample justification for the belief that it is within the power of Congress to legislate on the subject matter of the bill before the House for consideration. In the MacIntosh case the Supreme Court said:

From its very nature the war power, when necessity calls for its exercise, tolerates no qualifications or limitations, unless found in the Constitution or its applicable principles of international law. In the words of John Quincy Adams, "This power is tremendous; it is strictly constitutional, but it breaks down every barrier so anxiously erected for the protection of liberty, property, and life." To the end that war may not result in defeat, freedom of speech may, by act of Congress, be curtailed or denied so that the morale of the people and the spirit of the Army may not be broken by seditious utterances; freedom of the press curtailed to preserve our military plans and movements from the knowledge of the enemy; deserters and spies put to death without indictment or trial by jury; ships and supplies requisitioned; property of alien enemies, theretofore under the protection of the Constitution, seized without process and converted to the public use without compensation and without due process of law in the ordinary sense of that term; prices of food and other necessities of life fixed or regulated; railways taken over and operated by the Government; and other drastic powers, wholly admissible in time of peace, exercised to meet the emergencies of war.

By this bill the President is empowered to establish a maximum price at the time a war or an emergency is declared to exist by Congress. This is not an attempt to fix prices, but to stabilize prices by the establishment of a maximum price for all commodities. Provisions are made to take over such private property which, in the opinion of the President, is needed to promote the national defense. This provision, it is said, is not in violation of the fifth amendment to the Constitution, if just compensation is paid the owner of that property.

The bill by no means is perfect, and in certain of its provisions is quite fantastic, yet it is, in my opinion, a step in the right direction. It is not by any means as exhaustive in its provisions and details as the bill of Senator NYE, yet with all that I feel that with perfecting amendments prior to its final enactment, we shall have at least a foundation upon which to build a structure of adequate defense in the event of war with the burden of that war as equitably distributed among our citizens as is possible to do by legislation.

I am not in accord with the provisions of the bill that enable the President to set the wage standard of the ordinary workingman at a level where his initiative is stifled, and his ambition to do an honest day's work, particularly in war time, is bottled up in a blanket code of wages for his trade or occupation. When Congress removed the objectionable draft of man-power clause it was my hope that liberal benefits should be allowed to labor. The act is intended to take the profit away from individuals and corporations similar to those individuals and firms as the evidence before the War Policies Commission disclosed, who made millions of dollars in selling the necessaries of life to the public, and war products to the Government, and not in any sense intended to be aimed at the ordinary man or woman who works for a day's pay and finds much difficulty supporting a family on the pittance in the form of wages that he or she receives for labor. There was never a time during any war when an application of this theory "take the profits out of war" could be applied to the ordinary laboring man, working for a day's pay, because profit out of any war, no matter how long it lasted, was not forthcoming to him. In brief, he generally has all he can do to make his weekly pay check purchase the goods of the profiteer manufacturer at much inflated prices in order to care for his home and family needs.

War in every instance is paid for by one of two methods: (1) By excess-profit tax, (2) by bond issue. Our sad experience with the latter method during the recent war, the inheritance of which will be paid for by generations to come, turns our attention to financing all wars of the future by an excess-profit tax. The evidence submitted to the War Policies Commission in March 1931, that disclosed that the Bethlehem Steel Co. made a 43-percent profit in 1917, the Atlas Powder a 27-percent profit, Colts Patent Fire Arms Co. a 60-percent profit, Savage Arms Corporation a 65-percent profit, Bethlehem Loading Co. a 63-percent profit in 1918, Winchester Arms Co. a 63-percent profit in 1919, Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. an 86-percent profit in 1917, and many other large corporations with unusually excessive profits, convinces me that the excess-profit tax is the soundest and most justifiable way to help pay the expenses of war.

The amendment offered by Mr. McSWAIN, calling for 100-percent excess-profit tax in time of war and accepted by the House without any Member raising a point of order that would of necessity have held that the amendment was not germane to the bill, by this legislative move, now permits the Senate to amend the bill to include a detailed excess-profit amendment. It is understood that this was the only means available for the Senate to insert such provisions because revenue on tax-raising measures must originate in the House. Now it is within their rights to amend the McSwain amendment and insert the tax provisions of Senator NYE'S bill.

As I have indicated previously, the bill is far from being perfect and will undoubtedly be improved upon in the Senate, but at least it coordinates and mobilizes in the event of war the essentials to the success of any war, namely, capital and control of industry, its prices and profits. The control of these elements must of necessity be exercised promptly upon our entrance into war in order to be of benefit and as a factor in war.

RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6732), with Mr. ARNOLD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, considering a rivers and harbors bill always brings a personal reminiscence to me. I commenced my service in this House as a member of that committee in the Sixty-third Congress and served on the committee in the Sixty-third and Sixty-fourth Congresses.

The chairman at that time was the Honorable Mr. Sparkman, of Florida, a very delightful gentleman and a very genial and pleasant man to serve under. Later on I saw service with two succeeding chairmen—they were on the committee with me, but not as chairmen—but there was included in the service of that committee at that time a young man who for twenty-odd years has stayed young. He has stayed young, perhaps, because he has so diligently attended to his duties in connection with this great committee.

As a rule our clerical employees are very likely to follow the political party of the chairman or the majority members. I did not learn, 20 years ago, the politics of the assistant clerk at that time. I have known him these 20 years or more and I do not know his politics today, and I do not care what his politics may be, because he has given such faithful service to this committee that proper credit should be brought to his door. He has honorably served this committee for 33 years, and the fact he has served under chairmen of both political parties is the highest endorsement the House can give Joseph H. McGann, the efficient clerk of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. [Applause.]

I want to add just one further word in connection with this committee, with a reference to the various chairmen. I need not name them. They have belonged to both political parties, and if it were not for the fact that today we so willingly recognize the fact that the Democratic Party is in control of this Congress we would not know the politics of the present chairman, because he has followed the long line of succession on this very important committee and has served it faithfully and well, and in such service the Honorable JOSEPH MANSFIELD qualifies with any of his predecessors in the chair. [Applause.]

So I want to bring this word of reminiscence in appreciation of as important a committee as the Rivers and Harbors Committee has always been and in appreciation of its clerk, its dignified, its able, its efficient and popular chairman, our colleague, JOE MANSFIELD. [Applause.]

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FADDIS: On page 14, between lines 5 and 6, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"Completion of such projects to prevent erosion of the banks of the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania, as have been approved by the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, the Monongahela River, as all of you know, is one of the most important commercial rivers in the territory of the United States. The territory that lies along the Monongahela River in the State of Pennsylvania is perhaps the most highly industrialized section of the United States.

The valley of the river is very narrow and the sites for industrial plants in this valley are very limited. If you go into the Monongahela Valley you will see cities built on what I believe are the steepest hillsides upon which cities are built in the United States. You will see streets closed because they are entirely too steep for traffic to go up or down in safety.

The Monongahela River for many years has been eating into the banks along the river and washing away valuable property. It has been depositing the products of erosion in the channel of the river, making continual dredging necessary in order to keep the channel open.

In the summertime when the river reaches its low stage the sediment deposited from this erosion, in the form of bars, seriously interferes with navigation.

This river was developed in the interests of business and is used almost exclusively by a few steel and coal companies. Surely the citizens who own homes and property along this river are entitled to protection from the ravage of this stream, which is now subsidized for industrial interests. The common citizen is as much entitled to the consideration of this committee as are the industrial barons.

I know of one town where a street is actually being carried away. I know of another right along the river where the road is jeopardized every year. I know of houses that are being moved every 3 years to keep them away from the banks of the river. That is the reason for this amendment. The money necessary to carry out this project will go, I believe, almost 90 percent to labor. There is abundant local stone for riprapping the banks, and there is much unemployment in the region. Many can be removed from the relief rolls and furnished honest labor.

We have endeavored to get help from the Engineer Corps, but they claim they have no funds. We have failed to get funds from the P. W. A. This is the first river and harbor bill since I became a Member of Congress. For years I have been interested in this matter as a matter of justice to owners of private property. I ask a serious consideration of my amendment and its adoption.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's amendment is not germane. It is not germane to section 1, which provides for improvement of rivers and harbors, and has nothing to do with the control of erosion. It is purely a navigation matter and provides for the development of rivers and harbors.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California take the position that the protection of the banks of the river from erosion is not within the jurisdiction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee?

Mr. CARTER. No; I do not contend that, but as far as section 1 is concerned there is absolutely nothing in it to make this amendment germane, because there is nothing in that section in any way providing for protection against soil erosion.

Mr. CULKIN. If the Chair will turn to section 1 of this bill he will find that it has reference to the carrying out of certain projects set forth in certain documents, and that the specifications and details set forth in a particular document are the improvement or betterment to navigation that is authorized. The subject matter of the gentleman's amendment contains no such specifications. In other words, it is not germane to this section, even remotely. Might I suggest that the gentleman's amendment might be germane to the second section of this bill, where surveys are provided for.

Mr. FADDIS. We have already secured the surveys many times, but we have never obtained any results from the surveys.

Mr. CULKIN. In other words, the United States engineers have turned down the propositions of these betterments?

Mr. FADDIS. No; they never turned them down. A great many of them have been approved, but they have not been carried out because of lack of funds. To illustrate, take the instance I mentioned where the street of a town was being carried away, and also a public road. That was several years ago. Because of lack of funds they came in there and drove some piling down to the water's edge, and deposited with hoists dredgings from the river, which is nothing more than gravel, which will go away with the first high water.

Mr. CULKIN. The engineers apparently accepted the jurisdiction of this erosion?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes; but what they placed in there was absolutely valueless, because there is so much sulphur in that river that it will eat steel piling up in no time.

Mr. CULKIN. I thought all the sulphur was in Texas.

Mr. FADDIS. Oh, no. Not even a catfish can live in the Monongahela River.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, without passing on the amendment itself—which, of course, is a separate question—but confining myself to the point of order raised by the gentleman [Mr. CARTER] who made the point of order, in response to the Chair Mr. CARTER did not deny that the committee had jurisdiction over such matter. This is a bill which includes several hundred items. Two or more of them are in this section. If the committee has jurisdiction over this subject matter, it would seem to me, two or more items being incorporated in the section, a Member has a right to offer an amendment which will include another item. The question of whether the Army engineers have passed on it may be one of policy with the committee, but it is not binding on a Member of the House on the floor. For these reasons, the committee not denying it has jurisdiction over soil erosion with reference to a river, and this bill including a number of items, I submit that the amendment is in order.

Mr. FADDIS. I wish to add further, Mr. Chairman, in support of my contention that this amendment is germane to the bill and to this section, that the erosion of banks of a river has a very definite relation to the channel of the river, insofar as the material eroded is deposited in the channel. There is a great deal of matter in this bill regarding dredging of channels. It is germane for that reason. Another reason I contend it is germane is that on page 11, at the end of line 20, the bill contains a similar provision to this, insofar as it refers to a dike or retaining wall. The bill undoubtedly contains matter of a similar nature. Line 3 of the bill reads as follows:

> That the following works of improvement of rivers, harbors, and other waterways are hereby adopted and authorized—

And so forth. Where two or more propositions are concerned, a proposition which is relevant can be further added. For these reasons, I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment is germane to the bill and to section 2 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is read to rule. The gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] makes the point of order that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] is not germane in that it applies to erosion on the banks of a river. Of course, soil erosion generally would not be within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, but it is conceded, and the Chair thinks properly conceded, that erosion along the banks of streams that are under consideration for improvement are properly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on River and Harbors. The Chair therefore thinks the amendment is germane and overrules the point of order.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposition to the amendment. We have here a proposition for expenditures upon the Monongahela River. We do not know what those expenditures will amount to. We have no report upon them. No report has been made by the engineers and submitted to Congress. We are entirely in the dark so far as the amendment is concerned. In regard to expenditures upon the Monongahela River, we have expended upon that river already $47,789,057. Very few rivers in the United States have received so much money, and today it is in a finer state of improvement than any other river in the United States.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. FADDIS. I am not denying the superlative quality of the improvements that have been placed in there, but my amendment is to preserve those improvements because the eroded material is constantly filling the channel of the river. It is entirely in line with the policy of the committee.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is all very true, and we are always willing and glad to submit surveys or resolutions wherever any stream or its improvements are in danger, and have the matter investigated and brought before Congress in such a way that we may all be able to understand it. We now have 15 locks and dams on that river. It is under a higher state of improvement today than any other river in the world—not only in this country but in any country on earth. It carries more tonnage, it is true. It has carried as much as 28,000,000 tons in 1 year, and it is performing that service and performing it well, and no further expenditures are needed at this time, so far as we know.

Furthermore, the Public Works Administration is just now completing a $12,000,000 project near the head of that river, 4 miles above Grafton, W. Va., the Tygart River Dam, to increase the navigability of the river, which will also have an effect on the floods and currents in the river. I say this amendment is entirely unnecessary at this time.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. Is it not true that the Chief and the Board of Engineers has not passed upon this proposition, and that there are no projects in this bill except those that have been approved by the Chief and the Board of Engineers?

Mr. MANSFIELD. No other reports have come to Congress on this river.

Mr. PARSONS. And, therefore, for that reason, the amendment should be voted down.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. I think it is perfectly proper that a committee of this Congress, dealing with work that is both engineering and construction, should have the valuable aid of the Board of Army Engineers; but it is not necessary that we yield the supremacy and power of the Congress of the United States to a subordinate branch of the Government. Even though they made a survey and their report be adverse, I still believe it is possible for us and proper for us to give our approval to such a project, if we believe it to be meritorious. But I am in thorough accord with the committee insofar as seeking the assistance and aid of the Board of Army Engineers before making its decision. I still hold that the committee should make the final decision, if, in their judgment, it is wise, even though contrary to the Board of Engineers.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In this report I notice that for the Cumberland River there has been provided an appropriation of some $800,000. I should like to ask the Chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors if that includes both the upper Cumberland and that portion south of Nashville? Is it for the entire Cumberland River?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The authorization recommended in the bill is for the Cumberland River below Nashville. It is embraced in what is known as a "308" report, investigating rivers and harbors for various purposes. In former years there were quite a great many improvements placed above Nashville. They are dams of more or less obsolete type under present conditions of navigation. The Engineers, in reporting under Document 308, have recommended at this time that nothing be done on the river above Nashville, but that the improvements below Nashville should be included as being urgent and necessary at this time. Now, there was this situation in the case: At the time this report was made it was supposed that private interests would cooperate with the Government in placing power dams on the upper Cumberland. It was held in abeyance with the hope that they would do so, and thus contribute largely to the expense of improving the river. At this time, since the Tennessee Valley Authority has been created, I do not know whether or not private interests would want to install those dams so near the Tennessee Valley power plants.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. The chairman is aware of the fact that recently there has been introduced a bill to include the Cumberland River within the T. V. A. development. That is pending before the Committee on Military Affairs at this time. I am greatly interested in the Cumberland River, especially the upper Cumberland section, and I am anxious to know whether or not under this appropriation of $800,000 it is possible to conduct further surveys to determine the advisability of future appropriations or otherwise?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I believe we ought to include a provision for a survey of that section of the river above Nashville in the bill, because the reports were made before the creation of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and that action has very materially changed conditions as to the sale of power. As I have said, probably private interests would not want to compete with the T. V. A. at a point so near to the location of that river.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. With that statement on the part of the chairman, which I greatly appreciate, do I understand that that is within the purview of the present bill, and that it may be done?

Mr. MANSFIELD. We will be glad to accept that as a committee amendment, if the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] will agree, and put in a survey for the river above Nashville.

Mr. CARTER. I have no objection to a survey being placed in the bill for the section of the Cumberland River above Nashville.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. I am grateful to the members of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MITCHELL] has expired.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on section 1 and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the distinguished chairman of the committee whether or not within the last day or two a report has been received from the Chief and the Board of Engineers recommending a small project in Boston Harbor?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I will say the report was received this morning. We have not yet had time to examine it, nor has it yet been printed, but it recommends the deepening to 40 feet of that part of the approach channel to the United States Navy Drydock No. 3 between the main ship channel and the United States harbor line, at a cost of $128,700.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I ask of my friends, the chairman of the committee and the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER], the ranking minority member, if the committee would try to give this item consideration before the bill passes the Senate, so that if the House committee is agreeable, I may undertake to have that put into the bill?

Mr. CARTER. I would be glad to cooperate to have that done.

Mr. MANSFIELD. We will be glad to do so.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to congratulate the House on having such an efficient Chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD]. [Applause.]

This bill has shown the minute attention which the gentleman has given to every detail. As has been exemplified here this morning, the chairman is able to answer any question about any project in this bill, and seems to know the matter intimately. That is the type of man we want to preside over our committees. But I rose particularly to say that I congratulate the chairman and the committee upon the allotments made for New York Harbor. I am greatly interested in that port. It has the largest commerce of any seaport in the world. Within the lines of my district, practically 90 percent of the European passenger traffic that enters and leaves the port of New York, docks. We have just completed three immense piers, each 1,100 feet in length and 200 feet wide, where we can berth the largest ships that the world has yet built.

These piers are situated at the foot of city streets, so that within 10 minutes after landing on a pier one can be within the precincts of one's hotel. From these piers, where there is a depth of 40 feet of water, there is a channel approximately 2,000 feet wide, extending all the way to Sandy Hook and the ocean. The result of the work of the committee and their allotment of funds to us will insure this channel for the passenger and freight traffic of the world. This passageway is in the lordly Hudson that sweeps majestically to the sea.

While we are proud of our port, yet the port of New York does not belong to us alone, it really is the port of the United States; it belongs to the entire country. While we, of the empire city of the world, receive with open arms and welcome those who travel over the seven seas, we do so representing not the city of New York or the State of New York, but representing the entire country. I know that all of you will be just as proud of the progress and development of our port as we ourselves are, because it is the port of these great United States.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And there are 554 miles of docks there.

Mr. BOYLAN. And as the chairman has reminded me, we have surrounding the greater city approximately 554 miles of docks and wharves. In part of the city, particularly in the Borough of Manhattan, where the district I have the honor to represent is located, the city owns the entire water front. We have a wide marginal street. We have not yielded our water front to railroads. On the Staten Island shore we have 2 miles of docks known as the "Stapleton Docks" where the largest ships in the world can find safe anchorage. We welcome the day that sees the return of our foreign trade, when every one of these docks of the city will be occupied by vessels bringing products in to us and taking away our own surplus products, both of agriculture and manufacture, because this means a renewed and a greater prosperity for our beloved land.

So, again, I compliment the House on having such an able, such an efficient, and such a competent chairman of this great committee as the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD]. [Applause.]

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Chairman, I desire also to commend the committee, its able clerk, Mr. McGann, and its very efficient and capable chairman, the gentleman from Texas, the Honorable JOSEPH J. MANSFIELD, for its excellent report on this fair and all-inclusive bill, which is national in scope.

I am particularly pleased because of the just consideration shown my own State of Connecticut. This bill authorizes five large projects in Connecticut, and only one of these is conditional upon prior action by private, municipal, or State enterprises before any undertaking by the Federal Government. This particular project is the tremendous plan of making the Connecticut River navigable between Hartford, Conn., and Holyoke, Mass., and is dependent upon action by private or municipal interests in connection with the building of a dam at Enfield, Conn.

The Thames River project particularly pleases me. The bill authorizes improvements at an estimated cost of $820,000 to that part of the Thames River extending from New London to Norwich, Conn. Next to the Connecticut River this is the most important tributary in my State. It means a great deal to the eastern section of the State, which is both a farming and manufacturing region, and I know it will mean much to the cities of Norwich and New London when the authorized projects are finally completed.

Incidentally, the committee and its chairman believe that each and every one of the authorized public works on rivers and harbors mentioned in its bill is so meritorious as to deserve the receipt of an allotment from the Public Works Administration.

Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the distinguished chairman of the committee a few questions. On page 10 of the report of the Rivers and Harbors Committee the Thames River project is shown. It provides $820,000 for dredging from Allyn's Point, New London, to Norwich. Does it include any work in the New London Harbor?

Mr. MANSFIELD. No; it does not.

Mr. CITRON. But the committee has passed a resolution upon which there will be a hearing to see if anything should be done in New London Harbor.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That resolution has been passed and sent to the Chief and Board of Engineers. Upon receipt of their report we shall be pleased to consider it and take such action as we feel is justified.

Mr. CITRON. On March 13, 1935, I appeared before this committee, which, upon my urgent request, passed a resolution authorizing the Board of Engineers for rivers and harbors to review the reports of preliminary examination and survey of New London Harbor authorized in the River and Harbor Act of July 3, 1930, with a view to determining whether any modification in the recommendation contained therein is advisable at the present time. I have already communicated this information to various interested parties in Connecticut, particularly the business, manufacturing, labor, and farming interests in that section of my State. I have likewise informed the railroads and others who might be interested. It is expected that the Board of Engineers will hold hearings soon. Should the findings lead the Board to conclude a modification of its previous recommendation is desirable, it would mean the Board favors some improvements. If this Board reports favorably for some public works in New London Harbor, I would respectfully ask the esteemed chairman whether in his opinion, funds might be allotted from the Public Works Administration for this purpose?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I am not in position to say what the Public Works Administration will do; that will have to go to the President; but I hope they will see it in the light the gentleman sees it.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CITRON. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. I would like to ask if the Public Works Administration later will approve projects that have not been approved by the Board of Engineers and by the gentleman's committee? Is there a possibility that they will take on such projects as are not approved by the gentleman's committee and by the Board of Engineers?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It has been done.

Mr. MEAD. I was wondering if there is still that possibility.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes; there is that possibility; they have full power.

Mr. MEAD. Then, the gentleman from Connecticut has that avenue open to him?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. CITRON. I thank the chairman for the information.

At this point I insert a copy of the report of this committee on the Thames River:

THAMES RIVER, CONN.

Rivers and Harbors Committee Doc. No. 18, 74th Cong.

The Thames River is a tidal estuary extending northward from Long Island Sound at New London, Conn. Under the existing project a channel 25 feet deep and 200 feet wide to Allyns Point, a distance of 6 miles, thence a channel 18 feet deep and 200 feet wide to Norwich, a further distance of 6 miles, has been provided. The commerce averages over 400,000 tons annually. It consists of coal, petroleum, lumber, and miscellaneous freight. Norwich is the business center of an area which produces annually over $100,000,000 worth of manufactured products. Much of the tonnage destined for this area is now carried in deep-draft tonnage to New London or Allyns Point, where it is transshipped by barge, rail, or truck. The bill provides for the extension of the 25-foot channel from Allyns Point to Norwich. The estimated cost is $820,000, with an increase of $5,000 per annum in the annual cost of maintenance.

The above report and the several reports on the other projects briefly review the plans and recommendations of this committee. I also desire to call attention to the fact that this bill includes the project on the upper Connecticut River between Hartford, Conn., and Holyoke, Mass., the report upon which is as follows:

CONNECTICUT RIVER BETWEEN HARTFORD, CONN., AND SPRINGFIELD AND HOLYOKE, MASS.

(H. Doc. 27, 73d Cong.)

Projects heretofore adopted have provided a channel 12 feet deep and 100 feet wide to Hartford. Under the River and Harbor Act of 1930 the extension of this channel to Holyoke, a distance of 32½ miles, was authorized on condition that private interests would construct a lock and dam at Enfield Rapids. At the time the project was adopted the Northern Connecticut Power Co. was licensed by the Federal Power Commission to construct a dam and modern power works at this locality, but no construction work has been done, and the license was terminated by the Commission. The provision in the bill modifies the condition precedent in the existing project so as to provide for the construction of the said lock and dam by State, municipal, or private interests under license issued by the Federal Power Commission.

Now, with regard to the Connecticut River between Hartford and Holyoke, can the chairman tell me how much is estimated will be expended to dredge the river from Hartford, Conn., to Holyoke, Mass., providing as a condition precedent some private concern or the State would build a dam at Enfield, Conn., as your report explains?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I will say to the gentleman that in a former rivers and harbors bill a project was adopted for that section of the river conditioned upon certain things being done by local interests. The local interests have not yet complied with those terms, consequently the War Department is not authorized by law to proceed until they are complied with, unless the gentleman by resolution has it resubmitted. It might come up for future action.

Mr. CITRON. If the local interests comply with the conditions precedent, the improvements will be quite extensive, will they not?

Mr. MANSFIELD. They will be quite extensive; the gentleman is correct. The project is for a channel 12 feet deep, 32½ miles long, and the estimated cost is $3,384,000.

Mr. CITRON. I am also pleased to call attention to the consideration given to the Connecticut River below Hartford. This is a very important river, and it is hoped that its commerce will increase in the future. In the days of the sailing ships it was one of New England's most enterprising commercial arteries. Today it is again being used for important commercial traffic.

I am offering for your observation the committee's reports on the Connecticut River and on New Haven Harbor, which is located somewhat west of the mouth of the Connecticut River. Incidentally, this harbor is growing in the extent and activity of business. I also add the report upon Stamford Harbor, because it evidences the value of the projected improvements in this place.

I assure this Committee that with all these plans, involving several million dollars, the State of Connecticut will be fairly and materially benefited.

The committee's reports on the Connecticut River below Hartford, on New Haven Harbor, and Stamford Harbor follow:

CONNECTICUT RIVER BELOW HARTFORD, CONN.

(H. Doc. 49, 73d Cong.)

This river enters Long Island Sound at Saybrook, about 14 miles west of New London. Hartford is 51.3 miles above the mouth. The existing project provides for a channel 100 feet wide and 12 feet deep to Hartford. The commerce on the river in recent years has consistently increased from 516,600 tons in 1925 to 703,300 tons in 1931. It consists of coal, petroleum products, lumber, fertilizer, and miscellaneous commodities. Over 80 percent of the total tonnage is coal and petroleum products, carried in barges. The available depths are such that, except during freshet stages, these barges are loaded to but 70 to 80 percent capacity. The provision in the bill provides for a channel 15 feet deep at mean low water, 300 feet wide from the mouth to the Lyme railroad bridge, thence generally 150 feet wide to Hartford, to be obtained by dredging and by the construction of additional dikes, training walls, and revetments, at an estimated cost of $530,000 for new work, with maintenance estimated at $33,000 annually in addition to that now required.

NEW HAVEN HARBOR, CONN.

(H. Doc. 479, 72d Cong.)

The commerce of this port averages over 2,000,000 tons annually. Improvement in order to accommodate larger ships was recommended in the above report, as follows: Provide a depth of 25 feet in the main channel, with a width of 400 feet in the outer portion and 500 feet in the inner portion, at an estimated cost of $292,000, with maintenance estimated at $1,500 annually in addition to that required. The Public Works Administration allotted $352,000 for the prosecution of this project.

STAMFORD HARBOR, CONN.

(Rivers and Harbors Committee Doc. No. 8, 74th Cong.)

Located on the north shore of Long Island Sound, 36 miles east of New York City. The commerce in 1929 amounted to 450,655 tons; in 1933 it was 216,312 tons. It consists principally of coal, petroleum products, and building material. Because of the increasing size of the barges used in the transportation of these commodities, it is proposed to improve this harbor as follows: Modify the existing project so as to provide an entrance channel 15 feet deep and 200 feet wide; for a channel in West Branch 15 feet deep and 125 feet wide; for enlargement of the basin at the head of the branch by dredging to the same depth and of such widths as to exclude extensive rock excavation along the northeast side of the basin; and for dredging and anchorage area north of buoy no. 6 and east of the entrance channel 8 feet deep. Estimated cost, $186,000 for new work and $8,400 annually for maintenance, provided that the anchorage area shall be dredged only after local interests contribute one-half of the first cost thereof.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of section 2 be dispensed with, but that this section be printed in the RECORD at this point. Everybody is familiar with the section.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

(Sec. 2 is as follows:)

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause preliminary examinations and surveys to be made at the following-named localities, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such purposes: Provided, That no preliminary examination, survey, project, or estimate for new works other than those designated in this or some prior act or joint resolution shall be made: Provided further, That after the regular or formal reports made as required by law on any examination, survey, project, or work under way or proposed are submitted no supplemental or additional report or estimate shall be made unless authorized by law: And provided further, That the Government shall not be deemed to have entered upon any project for the improvement of any waterway or harbor mentioned in this act until the project for the proposed work shall have been adopted by law:

Plum Island and Parker Rivers, Mass.
Rock Harbor, Mass.
Shore at Manomet Point, Plymouth Harbor, Mass., with a view to constructing a breakwater.
Cape Cod Canal, Mass.
Boston Harbor, Mass.: Navigable waters adjacent to the shores of Winthrop and East Boston.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the various paragraphs may be placed in their proper order if there have been any mistakes made in the offering of the amendments as to lines and insertions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, at noon tomorrow, April 10, there will be a public hearing held in the city of Toledo, Ohio, by Maj. R. C. Crawford, who is the United States district engineer, Corps of Engineers, War Department, and whose office is 605 Federal Building, Detroit.

The purpose of this hearing tomorrow arises through the resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and the authorized report that was made for the Toledo Harbor. The original report, dated June 1, 1932, contemplated the deepening of the channel of the Maumee River in Toledo, and this hearing is with a view to determining the advisability of modifying the existing project so as to provide for the construction of a mooring basin. This mooring basin was not at first contemplated, but does come under the general terms of the Toledo harbor original survey.

This survey or hearing is being held tomorrow in Toledo, Ohio, and I want to ask the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD], whether or not, because this is a modification, it is necessary that a report be made by Maj. R. C. Crawford and approved by the Engineer Corps of the War Department before the mooring basin can be considered as coming under the terms of this present legislation. Is the gentleman familiar with the situation?

Mr. MANSFIELD. In reply to the gentleman from Ohio, I may say that the regular course is for the district engineer to make his report on the investigation of which the hearing referred to is a part, and it will follow the regular course of procedure and come to the Board and Chief of Engineers and the final results, with their recommendations, will be submitted to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in due time.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Does the gentleman from Texas understand that this is not a new project, but is a modification of the original survey which has already been approved?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is true.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. So, if they recommend a modification or even if they made it supplemental or additional, it would be possible, by amendment in the Senate, to have this project approved?

Mr. MANSFIELD. If they make their recommendation and it is favorable and comes in before this bill passes the Senate, the gentleman from Ohio can have every opportunity to have it presented for approval to the Committee on Commerce of the Senate as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. I have asked the gentleman to yield so that I may ask the chairman a question. A hearing was held in Buffalo a few days ago on a matter similar to the one just brought to our attention by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DUFFEY]. The report has not yet arrived at the Board of Engineers. It has to do with the improvement of the Buffalo River and the inner harbor. If this report should be favorable, will it receive the same consideration as the gentleman from Texas has suggested to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Certainly; there is no question about that.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is broad in scope and one which should commend itself to the approval of the country. Personally, I am deeply indebted to the chairman of the committee, one of the finest gentlemen of this House, and to the members of the committee for listening graciously to the pleas of those interested in the matters set forth in this bill.

The bill affects the area I represent. But the propositions for the area provided for are not local. They are of Federal consequence and importance.

While the Hudson River courses the easterly boundaries of my congressional district where the palisades begin and the George Washington Bridge joins New York to the mainland, it is the great North River of New York and the country's most picturesque and beautiful and extremely important navigable waters. The bill will assure a widening of the channel at Edgewater, N. J., giving us a channel 750 feet wide and 30 feet deep. The project is absolutely necessary for navigation on the New Jersey side of the Hudson. Besides, the bill incorporates the provisions of a bill introduced by me for a survey of a waterway from the Hudson, at a point near Piermont, N. Y., to the headwaters of the Hackensack River in New Jersey which runs parallel to and not far distant from the Hudson River in my district. Such a connecting link would give us an inland waterway, if found feasible, from Newark Bay to the upper part of the North River, which, after it leaves New York City, is termed the Hudson.

Running parallel with the Hackensack to the west and a few miles away is the Passaic River. This bill would pave the way for dredging that river from the Eighth Street Bridge in Wallington, which is in my district, to the Passaic Bridge at Garfield, improving that river. There is no provision for a canal connecting the Passaic with the Hackensack. Perhaps that will come later, affording ideal waterways for a great section of this country.

These waterways when completed will add materially to our national defense; they will likewise give sustenance to a great industrial area of the United States.

The people of my district, progressive people, are now also advocating a system of rapid transit through the area to be affected by these waterways. There is a plan now proposed and urged for a rapid transit that would leave New York City running across the Hudson to Hackensack, the county seat of Bergen, to Paterson, county seat of Passaic, thence to Newark, the seat of Essex County, and thence running to Jersey City, Hudson County seat, and then under the Hudson again to lower New York.

The prediction of Alexander Hamilton may soon be fulfilled for this unsurpassed part of our country. Hamilton, a man of vision, avowed that some day a greater metropolis would come into being on the west bank of the Hudson—greater than the great metropolis of New York. It seems predestined that this will come to pass.

Alexander Hamilton, the greatest Secretary of the Treasury, before and after the greatest Secretaries of the Treasury since Alexander Hamilton, hit upon this part of New Jersey as the center of all industry in the United States. There were reasons that appealed to him. It was well populated—provisions there were plentiful and reasonably priced. The State had little external commerce, scarcely any waste lands to be settled, and the people were friendly to industry.

Immediately after the Revolutionary War Hamilton declared that, having gained our political independence, we should forthwith establish our economic independence. He contributed to the latter by proposing two courses: First, to instruct our people in manufactures, and, second, to pass effective Federal legislation. It was his objective to supply the domestic market with the aid of a protective tariff and to follow through with a bid for world trade.

Selecting the northern part of New Jersey for the great industrial community of our country, he caused a corporation to be formed under an act of the State of New Jersey to carry on industrial enterprises in which he interested men of importance of that time. Accordingly in 1791 New Jersey granted a charter for the Society for Establishing Useful Manufactures. "S. U. M." it was commonly called. The capital of the company was $500,000, divided into 5,000 shares of $100 each.

In writing of this great plan, Hamilton had this to say:

> When application shall be made for an act of incorporation it ought to include a request that provision may be made for incorporating the inhabitants of the district within a certain defined limit which will be chosen by the company as the principal seat of their factories, and a further request that the company may have permission to institute a lottery or lotteries in each year for a term of 5 years for a sum or sums not exceeding in 1 year $100,000. The State of New Jersey, if duly sensible of its interest in the measure, will not refuse encouragement of this nature. * * *

The lottery will answer two purposes. It will give a temporary command of money, and the profit arising from it will go toward indemnifying for first unproductive efforts.

This comes from the greatest Secretary of the Treasury this country has ever known, Alexander Hamilton, whom all Secretaries of the Treasury have emulated.

Now, Mr. Chairman, at Edgewater on the Hudson are located many of the most important industries of the country. I might mention some: National Sugar Refining Co., Ford Motor Co., Corn Products Co., Spencer-Kellogg Co., Valvoline Oil Co., General Chemical Co., Lever Bros., Colgate & Co., Archer Daniels Midland Co., and Aluminum Co. of America. Navigation along the river front used by these industries is obstructed and the channel is badly in need of dredging at the present time. Some of these companies have expended large amounts of money doing their own dredging, and the Government has done some; but owing to a peculiar current, caused perhaps by the New York tower of the George Washington Bridge, the silt, which is removed by a suction process and discharged farther out in the river, finds its way back into the channel. Last summer, when the members of the Bergen County Woman's Democratic Organization, Inc., wished to conduct a boat ride up the Hudson, none of these companies had a pier where the water was deep enough to dock except the Ford Motor Co. Mr. Henry Ford granted permission for the use of his dock to the ladies, and he has their everlasting gratitude and mine. This is some indication of the necessity of permanent dredging there.

The total commerce of the frontage involved is large. The drafts of boats trading at this point varies from 24½ to 29 feet. The River and Harbor Act of 1925 authorized a channel 30 feet deep and 750 feet wide on certain conditions. The improvement of the channel is warranted without further assurances or conditions, and this bill undertakes to care for this.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FADDIS: Page 34, between lines 1 and 2, insert the following paragraph:

"That portion of the Monongahela River in the State of Pennsylvania with the view of determining what provisions can be made to prevent the erosion of the banks and the destruction of valuable property and the consequent filling of the channel by deposition from the erosion."

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, just a word to explain this amendment. Mr. BERLIN and Mr. SNYDER, whose districts join mine along this river, and myself have appointed a committee to aid in securing an allotment of funds from the Public Works appropriation to carry out these needed protections, and this survey will aid us in this matter. We would like to have a survey of the banks of the river, as the amendment states, to prevent the destruction of private property and to prevent the deposit of eroded matter in the river channel, which fills up and interferes with navigation during low water.

The Monongahela Valley has been made a great artery of commerce and has developed the coal and steel industry at the expense of the taxpayers of the Nation. Why should the tonnage moved upon this or any other river maintained by public money not pay sufficient tolls to maintain the river in a state suitable for use? Why should the taxpayers furnish improvements on a river for competition with railroads which consume such large quantities of steel and coal and employ so much more labor in proportion?

Now I am asking that something be done for the poor property owner who is having valuable property taken away, because of the erosion of the banks of the river caused by the locks and dams, in the interest of navigation. I know of the interest of the distinguished chairman of this committee in navigation and protection of property, and I sincerely hope he will approve of my amendment.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I see no objection to the adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 7 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 7 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee, Mr. MANSFIELD, two questions. On page 9, in section 1, the committee has reported a provision for Lake Worth Inlet, Fla. That is based on a report by the Chief of Engineers which was submitted 2 years ago. I am glad that item is in the bill, because it sanctions what has already been done. Since that time, however, the Public Works Administration has allocated funds for this improvement, and now under a survey which the committee ordered by subsequent resolution the district and division engineers have recommended an additional improvement which is now pending before the Board of Engineers and awaiting the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers.

In the event that the new proposal of the district and division engineers has the approval and recommendation of the Board and of the Chief of Engineers, will the committee give further consideration to that report, and if found to be proper have it included in the bill in the same manner that the gentleman from Texas, the chairman, has said it would do with other recommendations?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The committee will be glad to do so. However, my information is that the Public Works Administration has allotted more money for the project than was contemplated. The channel was to be 16 feet, and they have made it 20.

Mr. WILCOX. The improvement has been extended beyond that. But this was done by public-works money after the filing of the original report. Since then the commerce of the port has increased to the point that the district engineer and the division engineer have recommended that the channel be deepened to 24 feet. It is this new proposal which I hope will be approved by the Board and later put into this bill by the committee.

Now, one other question. In the River and Harbor Act of 1930, I think it was, there was a provision that the Chief of Engineers could expend up to a thousand dollars in his discretion developing side channels and other improvements adjacent to or connecting navigable waters. Is there anything in this bill which will interfere with the provisions of that act, or with the exercise of that discretion by the Chief of Engineers?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Nothing that I know of.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in support of the amendment just adopted, offered by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS].

My district borders on the Monongahela River. Just this morning I received a letter from my State saying that the river had backed up to such an extent that the concrete road was covered to a depth of 4 feet, and they could not use it for 2 or 3 days, or until the water subsides.

Since these locks are built we must maintain them. However, we should at the same time riprap the river banks and build such walls as necessary along the Monongahela River in order to keep the floods from destroying many homes each year. Not only the homes but thousands of dollars' worth of property are destroyed each year because the river banks are not properly protected.

I am not in favor of the Government building any more locks, unless they are placed on a self-liquidating basis. In other words, if we would charge so much a ton for the freight that goes over the locks built by the Government we could then replenish the Treasury for the amounts expended in building the locks.

The building of the locks on the Monongahela River, for instance, threw thousands of railroaders and other men out of employment. It seems to me that in making these improvements and adjustments we should keep in mind that we must put our men back to work and keep them at work if we are going to have stable prosperity.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this particular amendment will be kept in the bill in the Senate and that we may have this survey as soon as possible.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I have a very deep interest in the Monongahela River. I have a sister and several other quite near relatives living on the banks of that river, and I feel almost as much interest in it as the gentleman himself.

Mr. SNYDER. My friend from Buffalo said the Nation spent quite a bit of money on the Monongahela River to date. I know we spent $15,760,000 to build the 10 locks, but since it carries a greater tonnage of freight than any other one river in the United States, and since the locks are already built, we must care for the homes and property along the shores.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I am keenly interested in the lower Detroit River, that portion that has been pointed out to the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, which lies east of Grosse Isle and the mainland. I have directed an inquiry to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to find out whether the survey would be possible in order that sometime in the future we might ask an appropriation for what we believe to be a much-needed improvement to benefit the heavy industries located there. There is provision in this bill allowing $17,000 for the dredging of a shoal by making a channel 21 by 300 feet. Does the gentleman think that 21 feet would be sufficient?

Mr. MANSFIELD. When was that provided for?

Mr. DINGELL. In this bill before the committee, but the dredging allowed for is only 21 feet. The general plan followed on the Lakes is to allow for 26 feet on the new Livingstone Channel, and this limitation would permit ships of only limited draft to enter the all-American channel, and it would not be of any particular relief, as I see it.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. Yes.

Mr. FADDIS. It has been my experience with navigation on streams that no sooner do you construct a channel for a boat of a certain draft than they begin to build a boat of a much greater draft, and call for a deeper channel.

Mr. DINGELL. In this instance that is not so, because we measure the draft of the ships on the Great Lakes by the depth of the Livingstone Channel, which is a hard-rock channel, which is being dredged to 26 feet. I should like to see this particular channel which I refer to dredged to 26 feet.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, the depth for boats of 24 feet draft was intended for boats bound down channel. They are loaded with ore and require a greater draft than boats loaded with coal or wheat or other commodities. If this is on the main channel where the down-bound traffic goes, of course, it should be of corresponding depth.

Mr. DINGELL. It is so stated that it would provide for down-bound ships.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is the channel now used by those ships?

Mr. DINGELL. It is not being used for entry from the north, but ships do go around Grosse Isle and back up north after making a dangerous turn.

Mr. MANSFIELD. We might have to authorize a survey to determine that.

Mr. DINGELL. Will this resolution which was passed by the Committee really provide for a survey to be made on that so-called "all-American channel?"

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes. I am informed that is what it is.

Mr. DINGELL. That it positively covers a survey being made on which the engineers would report and then subsequently we could make a request for a suitable appropriation?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. That is included on page 21 of the bill.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the Committee for 1 minute to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, take the navigable waters adjacent to the communities of Winthrop and East Boston, where we see in the moving pictures the waters surge in and demolish homes and destroy the breakwater and tear up streets along the shore line. Has the United States Government the power to do anything to prevent that property damage on the shore, or is the United States Government confined to navigable waters?

Mr. MANSFIELD. If it affects navigation, we have jurisdiction. If it does not affect navigation, it would doubtless come under the regular category of beach erosion. We caused an investigation to be made into those matters in the river and harbor bill of 1930. A beach erosion board has been appointed and acts in conjunction with the Chief of Engineers. They have submitted reports on a great many matters of this kind. No provision has been made as yet for financing these matters.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that those who have spoken on the bill yesterday and today shall have 3 legislative days in which to extend their remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CITRON. Reserving the right to object, I suggest that the gentleman include in his request permission to include extracts which someone may want to include, from reports.

Mr. PARSONS. We cannot do that except by the gentleman's own remarks. We should confine this extension to the gentleman's own remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to also include some extracts from the report of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, since all the navigable rivers within the State of California, with the exception of the upper reaches of the Sacramento River and a few small creeks, lie within the territorial limits of the Third Congressional District, which I have the honor to represent, it is only natural that I should be particularly interested in legislation proposed by the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House. This bill is the first general river and harbor bill to be seriously considered by the House since 1930. Many changes in the conditions of both rivers and harbors have since taken place. Trade currents have changed; new ports even have been developed. It is high time, therefore, that such a bill be considered and passed.

I desire to compliment the committee, and its chairman in particular, for the thorough study that they have given the projects embraced in this bill. Each project included in section 1, which authorizes the prosecution of works of improvement under the direction of the Secretary of War, has been recommended by the Chief of Army Engineers and his board, and has then been thoroughly and painstakingly reviewed in hearings before the committee itself.

Some of these projects have already received allotments from the Public Works Administration. In my district the Public Works Administration early allotted $1,158,347.99 to deepen the San Joaquin River and Stockton Channel to a depth of 30 feet at mean lower low water and to widen the channel bottom to 150 feet above Venice Island, and to a width of 300 feet below. Part of this sum was also used to modify the then existing project for Suisun Bay Channel to provide a 300-foot width and 30-foot depth at mean lower low water through Bulls Head Point, Point Edith, and Middle Ground Shoals to the mouth of New York Slough. This work has already been completed and it may appear that it is surplusage to include an authorization in this bill for work already done. The committee, however, has wisely felt that in order to provide for the permanent maintenance of this project and all others undertaken with public-works funds, that they should be specifically authorized by act of Congress. The enactment of this legislation will now give the authority of Congress to the maintenance of the Suisun Bay Channel and San Joaquin-Stockton Channel in their revised and present form.

The bill also authorizes the improvement of Napa River by increasing the depth of the channel from 6 to 8 feet with increased widths at the bends in the river. The report upon which this authorization is based requires certain cooperation by local interests. No expense is to be incurred by the United States for the acquiring of any lands required by the improvement. The lands referred to are those necessary for straightening out certain of the more severe bends in the river. It is interesting to note that approximately 54 percent of the total commerce of Napa Valley moves normally by way of this river. The annual tonnage is approximately 200,000 tons, and in the year of 1934, with the increased movement of crushed rock for the San Francisco Bay bridges, this tonnage was greatly increased. When effective, it is estimated that there will be an annual savings due to the improvement of $15,000. The cost, according to the engineer's report, will be $62,500.

The bill also carries an authorization to provide a channel 9 feet deep and 100 feet wide in Middle River, San Joaquin County, below Borden Highway Bridge in Latham Slough and in Empire Cut, Whiskey Slough, and Turner Cut between Middle River and San Joaquin River at an estimated cost of $6,500. The tonnage on this waterway, part of the San Joaquin River delta, amounts to in excess of 260,000 tons annually, commodities transported being principally sugar beets, potatoes, and other vegetables.

In addition to these three river improvements, the bill authorizes the Secretary of War to cause preliminary examination and survey to be made of two other projects in the Third District. The first is a survey of Old River, San Joaquin County, Calif. Old River is another one of the delta waterways, and its navigability is partially maintained by the Federal Government under present laws, but it has never been classed as an authorized project and hence the amount of money available for actual maintenance is limited to $1,000 per year. Along Old River, Grant Line Canal, and the canal running from the latter to the sugar plant north of Tracy, a very considerable tonnage of sugar beets is now transported. Additional quantities of barley, onions, potatoes, and other vegetables are available and will be transported over this route if the survey report is favorable to further improvement and the project authorized later.

The bill also calls for a survey of Southampton Bay, a natural deep-water harbor, which lies between the cities of Benicia and Vallejo. Development of this harbor would effect a very considerable saving in transportation to producers of all kinds of horticultural and agricultural products in that great region of California lying north of San Pablo Bay clear to the Oregon line. In addition thereto, a considerable amount of manufactured products would be available if this project is authorized. It has long been the dream of the citizens of Vallejo that this development should be undertaken. Preliminary examination and reports by engineers have been made, financed by the county of Solano, and are now available. It is hoped that the survey by the Board of Army Engineers may find this project feasible.

But by far the most important item in the entire bill, not only from the viewpoint of the Third Congressional District, but from that of the State of California as a whole, is the authorization for the improvement of the Sacramento River as outlined in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 35 of the Seventy-third Congress. While a portion of this authorization goes to the improvement of the Sacramento, to provide a depth of 6 feet between Sacramento and Colusa, and 5 feet between Colusa and Chico Landing, the great bulk of the authorization, $12,000,000, will be a Federal Government contribution toward the construction of Kennett Dam, 315 miles above the mouth of the Sacramento River. Kennett Dam will be the principal factor in the Central Valley water project. Behind it will be stored the winter supply of flood waters that now goes wastefully to the sea, and this water will be used to maintain a stable and increased flow down the river. It will be used to release the water of the San Joaquin and its tributaries for irrigation purposes in the San Joaquin Valley. The dam will help solve the problem of flood control, which has always been present along the Sacramento, and toward which the Federal Government is now contributing. It will prevent the intrusion of salt water into the lower Sacramento and the San Joaquin Delta, and it will assure free and open passage for the highly important navigation through the delta.

Full investigation and complete hearings were held before the Board of Army Engineers, and they have unanimously reported that the Government is justified in making this contribution. Those of us who have been active in pressing the cause of the Central Valley water project, therefore, hail the passage of this bill as the first concrete evidence of our ultimate success.

While I have two bills before the Flood Control Committee, on which hearings have been held, which are designed to have Congress make direct appropriations and loans for the completion of this project, I am very hopeful with the passage of the works-relief bill, that when the new administrative set-up for the huge sums that we have voted is completed, an allocation may be secured directly from the public-works money, which, added to this $12,000,000, will enable a start to be made at once. To that end the entire California delegation is bending every effort, knowing that the success of this project is necessary for the preservation of our existing orchards and farms and for the final and best development of the State as a whole.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat that the representatives of the citizens of California, interested in her welfare, are grateful to you for these provisions in the bill you have presented.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That when any land which has been heretofore or may be hereafter purchased or acquired for the improvement of rivers and harbors is no longer needed, or is no longer serviceable, it may be sold in such manner as the Secretary of War may direct, and any moneys received from such sale shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I had expected there would be a committee amendment, but in the absence of it I will offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GIFFORD: On page 37, line 11, after the word "of," insert the word "canals" and a comma.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any objection to the amendment, but, lest there be objection, this bill was not allowed a privileged status because the word "canals" was in the bill, not included in rivers and harbors. Of course, we know that in the purchase of canals much land has been acquired which is absolutely useless to the Government and should be sold. The simple addition of this word "canal" should, I think, be made.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I have no particular objection to the amendment, if it should be deemed necessary. We have consulted the War Department and the War Department construes this as already being included. They furthermore state that they do not anticipate any lands in connection with the Cape Cod Canal, at least, will be sold.

Mr. GIFFORD. May I answer that? In relation to this canal the Government forced the private company which built the canal to give up all lands owned by it. It included a large area where it was first contemplated the canal might be dug. Certainly there is a large area that never would be used for the present location of the canal.

In talking with others on the parliamentary procedure this bill could not have a privileged status because the word "canal" was in there. I wanted to make it perfectly clear that this land could be disposed of in the same manner as other land contiguous to rivers and harbors.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I do not believe the amendment is necessary, but still I have no objection to it. If it will clarify the matter, we might just as well adopt it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That any amounts collected from defaulting contractors or their sureties under contracts entered into in connection with river and harbor or flood-control work prosecuted by the Engineer Department, whether collected in cash or by deduction from amounts otherwise due such contractors, hereafter shall be credited in each case to the appropriation under which the contract was made.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman or some other member of this committee whether it is possible, previous to the adoption of the treaty between this country and Canada, for anything further to be done in the way of surveys which may expedite action in the development of the St. Lawrence waterway when that treaty is ratified?

Mr. SNELL. Would the chairman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HULL] has asked that question, because I am very much interested in that whole proposition, as the international section where all this work is to take place is in my district.

As far as I know, the House of Representatives has done everything in its power toward making the St. Lawrence waterway complete in every respect. As the gentleman knows, we have already authorized, and the work has been completed, a 27-foot channel from Lake Ontario down to Ogdensburg. That is the main part of the international section. I think everything in connection with this waterway that has ever come before the House of Representatives has been done with the ultimate end in view of completing that waterway, and that was what I had in mind when I advocated the 27-foot channel in the international section of the river.

I should like to say while I am on my feet, with reference to a question that was asked by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] on yesterday, who stated that he hoped when this was done the United States would not pay the entire bill or lose control of the waterway, that question is asked by a great many people who do not understand the conditions of this treaty; and most of the opposition comes from those who know very little about the treaty. As a matter of fact, if this waterway is completed under the present plan, the United States and Canada divide the expense 50-50 from start to finish, and there is no other question in the treaty.

Furthermore, if we should go through with the present treaty, we do not give to Canada a single power or right that we have at the present time, either in reference to withdrawal of water or sovereign rights over our territory. The treaty in itself is absolutely fair and equitable between the two countries, as far as those conditions are concerned. I am glad to have an opportunity to put that in the RECORD at this time.

In further answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin, who is also interested, as I am, in the development of the St. Lawrence River waterway, as far as the House of Representatives is concerned, we have provided every step that we know of for the ultimate and complete development of the St. Lawrence seaway. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I want to thank the gentleman from New York for the information he has given us.

Mr. HULL. I thank the gentleman from New York and I yield back the balance of my time.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That that portion of the West Fork of the South Branch of the Chicago River in Cook County, Ill., lying between the west line (produced north) of the Collateral Channel of the Sanitary District of Chicago, in the northwest quarter of section 36, township 39 north, range 13 east, third principal meridian, and the east line of South California Boulevard, being a line 283 feet east of and parallel to the west line of the southeast quarter of section 25, township 39 north, range 13 east, third principal meridian, in the city of Chicago, Ill., is hereby declared to be a nonnavigable stream within the meaning of the Constitution and laws of the United States.

The right to alter, amend, or repeal this section is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. MANSFIELD: Page 38, after the word "meridian" in line 10, strike out "and the east line of South California Boulevard, being a line 283 feet east of and parallel to the west line of the southeast quarter of section 25" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and a line 1,300 feet east of and parallel to the west line of section 30 (section line in South Western Avenue)"; and after the word "Illinois" in line 14 insert the following: "as the same now exists or may hereafter be extended."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the pier constructed along the west coast of Lake Huron, Mich., at Greenbush, Mich., by Carl E. Schmidt, of Oscoda, Mich., be, and the same is hereby, legalized to the same extent and with like effect as to all existing or future laws and regulations of the United States as if the permit required by the existing laws of the United States in such cases made and provided had been regularly obtained prior to the construction of said pier.

That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I noticed that in the interchange of words between the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from New York, the gentleman from New York explained the virtues of the St. Lawrence waterway very much to my satisfaction, and I was glad that these remarks came from so distinguished a source, a gentleman recognized as one of the foremost leaders of the Republican Party in the United States of America.

The peculiar thing about it, however, is that during the campaign in Pennsylvania last fall the Republican national chairman, and my opponent, and those Republicans who were opposed to the Democratic principles and the further extension of work on the St. Lawrence waterway, made a tremendous campaign against the Democratic Party and Democratic principles as advocated, particularly, the St. Lawrence waterway project.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. As a matter of fact, this never has been entirely a partisan proposition. I have followed this question very closely for the last 15 or 20 years. Both parties have favored it. As a matter of fact, each one of the last four Presidents of the United States has been very strongly in favor of the St. Lawrence Waterway, including the present President. This matter never has been a party proposition. It has been a geographical proposition more than anything else. Is not this correct?

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I rather think so. I am glad, however, that the gentleman has explained the attitude of the Republican Party on this particular question.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. It is not the Republican Party. I happen to be a Republican, but I am strongly against the waterway.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I was put to it different times to defend against Republican attacks on the Democratic policy. In fact, had to ask for data from the Democratic National Committee in support of the project. The gentleman talks like an insurgent.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. CULKIN. I take it from the statements of the gentleman here today that the St. Lawrence waterway was endorsed in his district.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. It was not the paramount issue.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. BEITER. Reference has been made to the President as being in favor of the St. Lawrence waterway. I, a Democrat, am opposed to the St. Lawrence project.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. It is a Democratic prerogative to be in opposition.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. The gentleman will admit also that if the Democrats in another body of the Congress had not voted against the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty it would have been ratified?

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I think that is probably true.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. HULL. As a matter of information I would like to know, in view of the message the President sent to Congress last year, whether those on that side of the aisle who opposed the President's policy as to the St. Lawrence waterway are insurgents or merely mavericks?

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I cannot characterize them, Mr. Chairman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to express my thanks for the courteous treatment and consideration we have received by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with amendments, with the recommendations that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ARNOLD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en grosse.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MANSFIELD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—RIVER AND HARBOR BILL

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, we are considering today H. R. 6732, commonly referred to as the "river and harbor bill." One of the items in this bill, you will note, is Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 35, Seventy-third Congress, Report No. 424, which has to do with an investigation made by the Chief of Engineers of the Central Valley water project of California. A hearing was held on this report before the Rivers and Harbors Committee, of which I am a member. Mr. Edward Hyatt, State Engineer, Department of Public Works of California, and Maj. Gen. Edwin M. Markham, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, explained in detail the Central Valleys project. The Rivers and Harbors Committee unanimously voted to make a grant of $12,000,000 toward the construction of this project. This item is included in the bill under consideration. This is a most meritorious measure, and in order that the House may fully understand it, I desire to explain to the Membership somewhat in detail this particular project.

Report No. 424, which accompanies the river and harbor bill, states in part as follows regarding this improvement:

> The State of California has enacted enabling legislation for the construction of the Central Valley project and for issuance of bonds in the amount of $170,000,000 therefor. This project provides for the stabilization and development of the water resources of the valley for purposes of navigation, flood control, salinity control, irrigation, domestic and industrial use, and hydroelectric power. * * * As a part of this project it is proposed to construct a dam at Kennett, on the Sacramento River, about 315 miles above its mouth. * * * The construction of the Kennett Dam will directly benefit navigation by providing a steady and increased flow, and flood control by the storage of flood waters. It will also prevent the intrusion of salt water into the lower Sacramento, thereby eliminating from consideration Federal participation in the construction and operation at great cost of locks and structures to prevent such intrusion; and it assures a free and open passage for the highly important navigation through the delta. These benefits, it is estimated, warrant the Federal Government in contributing $12,000,000 toward the construction of this dam. * * *

The Central Valley project of California, of which this improvement is a part, was thoroughly considered by the Rivers and Harbors Committee at a hearing held April 13, 1934. At this hearing General Markham, Chief of Engineers, said that he believed this great system to be as well devised as anything that had come to his engineering attention, and stated further:

> I think that briefly represents my attitude and the occasion of my recommendation that in that vast program the Federal Government's interests are represented, I think, conservatively and not excessively to the extent of $12,000,000.

The Central Valley project of California, of which the Kennett Dam storage is the largest unit, is a comprehensive plan for the stabilization, control, and use of the water supplies of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Valleys which, taken together, form the Central Valley of California. There is no finer body of land anywhere in the world than the Central Valley of California. Picture, if you will, a valley 500 miles long and 40 miles wide encircled by mountains on all sides, except at one point where the river breaks through into San Francisco Bay. The land is flat and fertile, the climate equable and with irrigation a wide variety of crops can be raised profitably. Nine hundred thousand people live in this valley and 3,000,000 acres of land are under irrigation. However, agriculture in this valley depends on irrigation as the summers are rainless and practically all crops must be irrigated, which requires storage dams, distribution works, and above all a natural water supply sufficient to meet the irrigation needs. A large part of the territory is irrigated from wells drawing on underground water. Over the last two decades water shortages have developed in the Central Valley which have passed the stage of being critical and are desperate, and lands are being abandoned, and farmers are having to leave their homes and go elsewhere in search of livelihood. There are two principal reasons for this water shortage which are, first, the depletion of underground waters originally thought to be inexhaustible, and, second, the gradual up-stream movement of salt water from San Francisco Bay as the rivers entering the bay were diverted and put to use. If this condition of water shortage cannot be corrected, destruction of land by salt water and abandonment from water shortage will continue until half a million acres of the best lands in the valley will have taken place and 50,000 American citizens have lost not only their jobs but their farms and homes which have been built up through half a century of effort. Putting aside the loss of labor and capital already invested, it is not possible for these sections to go back in a large part to their original desert condition without a great toll of human misery and suffering. This misery and suffering will just as surely be present as if the calamity were one of earthquake or flood, and the occasion is as truly one which justly calls for governmental assistance if the communities themselves cannot bear the burden alone.

In addition to the agricultural lands facing ruin by reason of water shortage, there are many other interests affected, not only in the State but in the Nation. One important item is the industries located on the south shore of Suisun Bay, Contra Costa County, a very desirable industrial section near the city of San Francisco. Here are located more than 100 industrial plants of different kinds which produce $112,000,000 worth of manufactured products per year and whose pay rolls run into many millions of dollars annually. Formerly these industries had fresh water easily available, but the salt-water invasion has cut this off and made them dependent on inadequate and expensive wells and other expedients, with the result that this great manufacturing center is seriously endangered as to its water supply.

This condition of water shortage in the Central Valley has not occurred suddenly in the last year or two, but has been developing slowly for nearly 20 years. It was recognized in 1921 when the State of California undertook an investigation to determine the best means of meeting it. After some 12 years of study and an expense of more than $1,000,000 the study perfected the Central Valley project which will store water on the Sacramento River where surplus is available, regulate it and transport it southward to overcome the conditions now existing. The main storage will be at the Kennett Dam on the Sacramento River at the northern end of the Sacramento Valley. The dam will be 420 feet high and will store 3,000,000 acre-feet of water. The first use of the dam will be for flood control by withholding space in the upper part of the river to absorb the floods, whereby the flood flow of the Sacramento River for its full length through the valley will be materially reduced. The second use of the dam will be for power. A large power house will be built immediately below the dam and the water released from the dam will pass through it, thereby generating a large amount of hydroelectric power which will be taken by a main transmission line to San Francisco Bay.

The next use will be for navigation. The Sacramento River has been, since the admission of the State in 1850, one of the important inland waterways of the Nation, and navigation has extended upstream more than 100 miles above the city of Sacramento. During the dry years of the last decade it has been necessary to abandon navigation above Sacramento in the summertime on account of low water. With the Kennett Dam in operation the flow in the river will be maintained at not less than 5,000 second-feet at all times, thereby making dependable all-year navigation available nearly 200 miles above Sacramento. The navigation, salinity, and flood control value of the Kennett Dam, to the National Government is estimated at $12,000,000 as provided in the river and harbor bill now before you.

Enough water will be released from the Kennett storage to take care of the irrigation needs in Sacramento Valley and also for the domestic uses of the towns and cities, including Sacramento, the capital of the State. The water will flow down the channel of the Sacramento River into the great delta area at the junction of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers, which is now being slowly destroyed by the inroads of salt water, and furnish enough fresh water to drive the salt from the delta and protect this area from further damage. A canal will be built to provide abundant fresh water for the great industrial region of Suisun Bay. It will be known as the "Contra Costa County Industrial Conduit", and will take care of the needs of this section.

In addition, there will be sufficient water released to provide for the parched lands in the southern San Joaquin Valley where abandonment and destruction are now proceeding most rapidly. The water will be available by gravity in the delta near Stockton, and the engineering problem of how to transport it to the place of need in the San Joaquin Valley over 200 miles south will be overcome by a pumping system which will lift water to an elevation of 160 feet. A second large dam will be built on the San Joaquin River north of the city of Fresno. This will be known as the "Friant Dam", will be 250 feet high, and store 400,000 acre-feet of water. From it large gravity canals will be run north and south above the stricken areas in the southern San Joaquin Valley. The southerly one of these two canals will reach the Kern River near Bakersfield and be over 150 miles in length.

The central valley project will thus regulate and conserve the flood water in the Sacramento River which now wastes into the ocean, provide flood control and navigation, and correct the water shortages in the valley. It has been most carefully worked out over a term of years by the State, with the cooperation of the War Department, the Reclamation Bureau, and other Federal agencies, and has been widely endorsed as being the best possible plan to meet the needs. Its cost is large, nearly $170,000,000. However, the revenues which will be developed by it through the sale of water and electric power will also be large, about $10,000,000 a year when in full operation. With reasonable governmental assistance in participation in the costs, it is financially feasible and will return to the Government all money borrowed in full at a reasonable rate of interest.

The water situation in the central valley and the project plans have been exhaustively reviewed by many different Federal departments, including the War Department, the Department of Agriculture, the Reclamation Bureau, the Federal Power Commission, the Public Works Administration, the Federal land bank, the President's Water Flow Committee, the National Resources Board, by the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation and by House of Representatives Committees on Rivers and Harbors, Flood Control, and Appropriations, and by a joint commission appointed by the President of the United States and the Governor of the State of California. All such national investigating bodies have endorsed the pressing need of a solution of the water problems of central valley, and all which have reported on the central valley project have endorsed it, many in the highest terms.

Permit me to quote from a few of these reports:

The California Joint Federal-State Water Resources Commission in its report to the President of the United States and the Governor of California, dated December 27, 1930, concluded that—

"In the way of what might be termed direct benefits, that is, benefits directly to the land receiving the water, the cost will exceed any increment of value it will bring. When, however, the indirect benefits are taken into consideration, the values that will accrue to the whole area affected, to the cities and towns it contains and which are dependent upon its prosperity, to its merchants, bankers, and business men in general, to its transportation and other public-utility companies, to all who are immediately affected by its general prosperity or decadence, your commission feels it is fully justified in recommending the project as one that is economically sound. This it does."

An inspection of the project was made by the Department of the Interior subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives in 1932. Unfortunately, there was no report made covering the visit that subcommittee made to the project; but the unanimous expression of the members on that trip was that the situation was most serious and should be remedied immediately. In fact, those gentlemen commented extensively on what they called the "creeping paralysis" of the falling water levels. They endorsed the project personally in the highest terms, although there was no printed report.

The United States Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, pursuant to Senate Resolution No. 177, made an investigation and study of the project in 1932 and rendered a favorable report thereon in March 1933, in Senate Document No. 1325, Seventy-second Congress, second session. On page 15 of its report, the committee concludes in part as follows:

"It is the conclusion of the committee that Congress is warranted in giving very careful consideration to participation in and assistance in the financing of this Great Central Valley project of California. Direct contributions are warranted in the interest of improvement of navigation and flood control, the amount of which must be determined by careful investigation of the constituted agencies of the Federal Government and careful consideration by the appropriate committees of both Houses. It is further believed that the project is a particularly meritorious one for consideration by Congress of furnishing interest-free funds in the interest of irrigation, and incidentally, funds at a low interest rate for the power features."

The United States Bureau of Reclamation made a very intensive study of the project in cooperation with Department of Public Works of California, covering a period of 3 years, and rendered a comprehensive report on its investigation.

Its conclusions on pages II-30 and II-31, are in part as follows:

"The works proposed in the plan for complete initial development are physically feasible of construction and operation. The water supply to be provided in that plan is ample to meet existing deficiencies in present developed areas in the Upper San Joaquin Valley, deficiencies on the Sacramento River, and in the delta of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers.

"The Great Central Valley project designed primarily for the relief of highly developed, settled, and producing lands suffering from shortage of water supplies, is meritorious and worthy of financial assistance from the Federal Government through the loaning of non-interest-bearing reimbursable funds in accord with the Federal reclamation policies and precedents.

"The lands to be benefited under the plan are fertile, planted largely to specialty crops, settled, and adequately equipped, and with a normal price relation between the products of the soil-marketed and finished products purchased by the farmer, have the ability to pay a fair and equitable rate for water.

"With Federal financing of the project through the employment of non-interest-bearing funds for irrigation features, interest-bearing funds for the power features, and justified direct contributions from the State and Federal Governments in the interest of flood control, navigation, and other purposes, and with fair and reasonable revenues from the sale of electric energy and water, the project, for complete initial development is economically and financially feasible."

In the final report of the Chief of Engineers on the Central Valley project, Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 35, Seventy-third Congress, second session, in paragraph 10, pages 4 and 5, General Markham concludes:

"The Federal interest in the conservation of water by the construction of the Kennett Dam largely exceeds, in my opinion, that evaluated by the division engineer and the Board, since by remedying the intrusion of salt water into the delta of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers, it eliminates from consideration Federal participation in the construction and operation at great costs of locks and structures to prevent such intrusion, and assures a free and open passage for the highly important navigation through the channels of the delta. Based on this aspect of the case, as well as the direct benefits to navigation and flood control on the Sacramento River, I find that the general and Federal benefits from the construction of the Kennett Dam on the plans now proposed by the State warrants a special direct participation of the Federal Government of $12,000,000 in the cost of this structure."

The Department of Agriculture issued in 1934 a report entitled "Drought Conditions in Irrigated Sections." Quoting from the section of this report relating to California:

"Sacramento Valley: Due to shortage of water anticipated in early spring months there has been some curtailment of plantings. The rice acreage is about 100,000 acres, which is probably the full allotment under the A. A. A. agreement. Serious losses in the production of irrigated crops in this valley are not anticipated. There will be additional pumping costs over a normal season estimated at $100,000 because of the lower river levels. The unirrigated grain and other crops have not suffered materially because of lack of rain.

"Sacramento-San Joaquin delta: In years of low run-off from the higher lands surrounding the delta, salt water from San Francisco Bay finds its way into the 500 miles of channels in the delta, thus rendering the water in the river channels unfit for use on the irrigated crops on 300,000 acres of delta land. This year the loss from this cause will approach $1,000,000 on a total crop value of about $20,000,000.

"Lower San Joaquin Valley: It is estimated that the losses due to curtailment of plantings and crop production for both irrigated and nonirrigated crops will amount to $5,000,000 in the lower San Joaquin Valley.

"Upper San Joaquin Valley: In the Upper San Joaquin Valley the precipitation has been way below normal, varying from 46 percent of normal at Fresno to 26 percent at Bakersfield. Crops dependent on rainfall did not mature. The run-off from the Sierra Nevada watershed, which is the source of the irrigation supply, is about 35 percent of normal. However, about two-thirds of the 1,250,000 acres under irrigation are equipped to pump water from wells in a dry year. Ground water levels therefore, will continue to recede because of increased pumping which, of course, means increased costs and added financial burdens. It is estimated that the crop losses and the increased cost of crop production due to drought conditions in this area will aggregate $15,000,000."

The President's water-flow committee issued in 1934, a comprehensive report on water projects in the entire United States in House Document No. 395, Seventy-third Congress, second session. The water-flow committee consisted of the Secretaries of Interior, War, Agriculture, and Labor and an intensive study was made of the six regions of the United States. The Pacific region comprised the area west of the Rocky Mountains, and in the report of the Pacific region technical committee, page 313 of House Document 395, is given a list of the 10 best projects in the region in priority. The Sacramento-San Joaquin or central project is listed no. 1, or as the best project in the Pacific region.

The report of the water-flow committee to the President, on page 5 of House Document 395 states:

TEN SELECTED PROJECTS

"In spite of the serious lack of information and plans disclosed in the reports of the technical committees, and fully realizing the preliminary and tentative character of any recommendations based on available facts, it is still possible to select the 10 most promising projects or drainage basins for further development when comprehensive plans shall have been prepared.

"The 10 selected river basins, in order of priority, are:
"1. Tennessee Valley.
"2. St. Lawrence-Great Lakes Basin.
"3. Mississippi—main stem.
"4. Missouri, including the Platte.
"5. Sacramento-San Joaquin.
"6. Delaware River Basin.
"7. Columbia River Basin.
"8. Colorado River Basin.
"9. Ohio Valley.
"10. Great Salt Lake Basin."

Therefore, the Central Valley project is rated fifth best in the United States by the water-flow committee; and it is to be noted that of the four listed ahead of the Central Valley, three—the Tennessee Valley, the Mississippi, and the Missouri—are under construction at the present time, and the St. Lawrence is held up by treaty negotiations. Therefore, as to new water projects to be started, the Central Valley stands practically at the head of the list, after a thorough and competent investigation by the water-flow committee.

On page 7 of House Document 395, the committee says:

"The comprehensive plan previously developed by the California State plan for water conservation and Federal agencies has already been adopted by the State of California. 'It is the most carefully considered and complete plan of its kind ever drawn up', according to the technical subcommittee on the Pacific region."

Regarding water shortage, House Document 395, on page 379, states:

"The interior valley of California, comprising the Sacramento and San Joaquin Basins, had the most acute water shortage of any part of the United States. Disregarding the warnings of engineers and irrigators, the irrigated area of the San Joaquin Valley has been extended far beyond what the available water supply will serve. This is especially true of that section of the basin that is irrigated from wells. Large tracts of citrus orchards and vineyards have been destroyed by exhausting this underground supply."

The National Resources Board report, dated December 1, 1934, deals generally with the subject of water projects. On pages 29 and 30 the report states:

"While this recommendation implies that planning the uses of water resources should continue indefinitely, it does not imply that all construction work relative to water should be postponed to an indefinite future. Even on the basis of the present inadequate knowledge, it is justifiable to draw up a considerable list of projects that merit priority of consideration. The 17 projects in 11 major drainage basins or regions selected by the water-planning committee and named above constitute such a list."

A footnote states that the 11 major drainage basins are "almost identical with the 10 basins selected by the President's committee on water flow in April 1934, House Document 395, Seventy-third Congress, second session."

The list of 17 projects in 11 major drainage basins is given on page 28 of the National Resources Board report and includes the Sacramento-San Joaquin.

The National Resources Board is at the present time making an exhaustive economic investigation of the Central Valley project, and its conclusions are expected soon.

From the reports of the Federal agencies just quoted, it is apparent that the Central Valley project is one of overwhelming necessity and also one of great merit. It is to be noted that the agricultural loss also during last year—1934—was found by the Department of Agriculture to be $21,000,000 from water shortage. The project conforms in every way to national requirements and national ideals. It will prevent abandonment of farms, relieve distress, and put thousands of men to work. Plans for the project are complete. If started at once, 10,000 men will be at work directly on the project within 6 months and 15,000 within a year, which, with the employment in the mills and factories thereby created in other parts of the country, this will mean more than 25,000 men at work and a living for possibly 100,000 people. If it is not built, 50,000 people will lose their present means of livelihood and thereby increase the relief burden. It will not aggravate the agricultural marketing situation by bringing in large new areas of land, as it is designed as a rescue project to save lands now irrigated, and new acreage irrigated will be incidental to the main purpose. It will produce 300,000 horsepower of electrical energy, which can be sold at prices below those now paid by the people of the valleys.

Summarizing, Mr. Speaker, the Central Valley project is a comprehensive development for navigation, flood control, salinity control, irrigation, electric power for industrial, domestic, mining, and other uses. It is ready to start. Plans are complete. Ten thousand men can be at work within 6 months and 15,000 in 1 year after money is available. It will create employment for more than 25,000 men for 3 years, one-third of which will be in the Middle West and East. Much of the employment will be near Los Angeles, one of the most distressing relief centers in the United States. It will save 50,000 American citizens from abandoning their homes and loss of livelihood, and save the National and State relief rolls by that number of persons. It will provide dependable navigation facilities for 200 miles on the Sacramento River and will materially reduce the flood hazard on the Sacramento River. It will provide a large amount of hydroelectric power which can be sold below existing prices. It will save one-half million irrigated acres from returning to desert, restore another half a million acres to a self-sustaining basis, and prevent a present annual loss of $20,000,000 to agriculture alone. It will prevent a loss to the State and the Nation in taxes, railroad earnings, and business amounting to millions of dollars annually. It will not interfere with private enterprise in any way, since this project can be built only by the United States or by the State. It is not a new-land project but a rescue or relief enterprise for large areas now settled and developed. It is endorsed by many Federal agencies, by all which have reported upon it. It is financially sound and, with the Public Works Administration plan of financing, will pay back every cent due the United States at reasonable interest.

Mr. Speaker, this valley is a national asset, and must be saved for the State and Nation. There is no project in the entire United States of greater merit or economic value and no similar development which can repay to the United States as large a part of the cost. It is an emergency project for the protection of life and property; it will prevent tragedy, create employment, and permanent wealth-producing works; it is financially sound, ready to start, endorsed by all.

Mr. Speaker, while the Central Valley of California has critical water shortages in many sections, the investigations and reports of the State and Federal departments have shown that there is plenty of fresh water available in the Sacramento River which now wastes into the ocean in winter months which can be regulated and used to remedy these problems. The project as worked up by the State and Federal engineers will do this. The river and harbor bill, which I expect will be passed by this House today, provides an important item of assistance for this great water-relief plan, and will constitute the first official action by the Congress of endorsement of the Central Valley project. I ask for your favorable consideration of this project which means so much to the future destiny of the State of California.

Mr. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, the recent action of the House in the passage of H. R. 6732, the river and harbor bill, offers a most interesting and illuminating comparison with the action of Congress of only a few days ago on the so-called "relief bill", and only emphasizes the extreme to which the present administration has gone in its efforts to force economic recovery, when that portion of the huge appropriation having to do with rivers and harbors is considered.

On the river and harbor bill just passed, the House acted in accordance with established custom; the committee having charge of the measure recommending only projects which had been given careful study and consideration, and in many instances had been recommended only after extended public hearings. These projects, in each and every instance, had been subject to a detailed study and criticism of the district engineer, the division engineer, the Board of Army Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and finally the Chief of Engineers of the Army, and had met with their approval. They represented months of thought and consideration of all the factors believed necessary to make the projects practical, and in a determination as to whether the costs of establishing and maintaining these projects were justified in view of the commerce existent or to be developed. As can be assumed, the recommendations were made not only after consideration of the many factors which go to make up the commercial life of this country, but with the broad national plan of the development and use of our waterways and harbors in the interest of commerce and navigation constantly in mind.

The able and highly regarded chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, Judge Mansfield, whose many years as a member of that committee has made his knowledge of these facts of our national life much respected, explained in detail the development and study of a project before it can be given consideration by Congress. He called attention to the splendid work the Corps of Engineers of the Army had given this subject for well nigh 100 years, the understanding of our waterway problem which had been gained from this experience, and the freedom from political or selfish interest which has resulted from this established practice. He emphasized the fact that the projects recommended were chosen only after their merit had been established and they were known to be in conformity with our national policy.

As has been commented upon many times, transportation is one of the major problems of our Nation, and in endeavoring to develop our waterways and ports to meet the demands of commerce, recommendations are made not only for the purpose of meeting the transportation problem, but for the further purpose of benefiting both producer and consumer through making the products of the factory and the farm more readily available, in creating greater opportunities for reaching foreign markets, and in endeavoring to more properly equalize the problem of distribution, which today in the minds of many is more important than that of overproduction.

It was with the full realization of these policies and these purposes that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors prepared its bill, and the action of the House in accepting the recommendations of this committee indicates not only confidence in the judgment of the committee but a desire to see the recommendations carried forward and made effective.

How does this action compare with that portion of the so-called "relief bill", in one subdivision of which is appropriated $350,000,000 for rivers and harbors, together with other activities such as soil erosion and flood control? This sum is proposed to be expended under the direction and at the discretion of the President, without any restriction as to congressional action on the subject or any approval by the Chief of Engineers or his assistants either as to the desirability or feasibility of a project or as to its place in the national plan of development of our waterway systems. The National Industrial Recovery Act of 2 years ago, which also placed funds for river and harbor work in the hands of the President, carried a limitation that all projects should have the authorization of Congress or at least the approval of the Chief of Engineers. This was the beginning of a breakdown of a tried and proven practice, which under the relief resolution, House Joint Resolution 117, is entirely disregarded. When the reason for the removal of the limitation of approval by the Chief of Engineers on river and harbor projects was asked on the floor of the House in a discussion of the conference report, one of the leaders of the House on the majority side stated such action was proposed because it was expected to have a supervisory central control of this expenditure, and that while the President would have the benefit of the experience and expert knowledge of the Engineer Corps, he would decide the proper course.

No one having the most exalted ideals of the ability of the Chief Executive can with the slightest degree of reason believe the President will personally direct or even have knowledge of the details of the expenditure of this colossal amount. The duty of making expenditures for river and harbor improvements, like other activities, must be delegated to subordinates responsible to the Chief Executive, not to the taxpayer, for these expenditures and the wisdom of them. If past practice is followed this will result in river and harbor improvements being authorized by the Public Works Administration, directed by Mr. Ickes. If Mr. Ickes follows past practice he will receive recommendations from the Chief of Engineers, but under the Relief Act he will not be obliged to follow these recommendations. Past practice reveals the fact that in several instances the Public Works Administration did not depend on the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers, but followed their own judgment in making allocations of funds, and in some instances the authorization of Congress was ignored. If some new supervisory central control is to direct these improvements and expenditures, this would indicate another body even more unfamiliar with navigation problems than Mr. Ickes and his advisers, and because of the removal of the previous limitations would result in an even greater disregard of the practice and experience built up during the past year.

Is the development of our water-borne commerce, with all that it entails, of sufficient importance to place its execution under governmental authorities most familiar with it, or is it of so little consequence as to warrant placing it under the guidance and decision of comparatively new and unfamiliar heads, however high may be their ideals or theories? Is the tremendous cost of this activity of our Government of so little importance in these days that those whose training of many years has made them most efficient in this field should be subordinated or even ignored? Is legislative action by the duly elected representatives of the people of so little importance today that Congress must surrender its right and duty in determining where and in what amounts the taxpayers' money may be properly expended on river and harbor development?

A comparison of the practice resulting in the recent river and harbor bill and the practice proposed in that portion of the Relief Act will give a very clear understanding of which procedure is more orderly, more in the interest of sound expenditure, and more in keeping with the duty of Congress in its responsibility of appropriation. Perhaps this comparison will make clear the reason why so many of the Members of the House voted so willingly for the river and harbor bill and likewise opposed the relief measure because of its many unsound and extravagant features. It is to be hoped the action of the House will serve as a guide to those responsible for the administration of that portion of the Relief Act providing expenditures for river and harbor projects and that due notice will be taken of the procedure on which the House has favorably expressed itself with such unanimity.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 173.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That clause 44 of rule X is amended to read as follows:

"44. On the Disposition of Executive Papers, to consist of two members."

Clause 44 of rule XI is amended to read as follows:

"44. All proposed legislation concerning the disposition of useless executive papers to the Joint Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers."

Those Members of the House elected to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers are hereby elected to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers, and all records and papers of the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers are hereby transferred to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

All bills, resolutions, papers, documents, petitions, and memorials heretofore referred by the House to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers are hereby transferred to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important matter. It is a resolution from the Committee on Rules changing the name of a committee of the House of long standing, technically a joint committee acting with a committee of the Senate. Heretofore this committee has been known as the "Committee on the Disposition of Useless Executive Papers." The nomenclature was not exact, because the word "useless" itself was not exact, and the use of this particular word in the name of the committee has caused some ridicule for a number of years and has deterred Members from serving on the committee. It has for some time been thought that the real standing of the committee could be enhanced by this proposed change in its title, the striking out of the word "useless." It is not a "useless" committee.

The Standard Dictionary defines "useless", in part, as follows:

Being of no use, not serving, or not capable of serving, any beneficial purpose. Abortive, bootless, nugatory, null, unserviceable, vain—

And so forth. All those synonyms pertain to the papers to be disposed of—not this particular committee or its members.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I was wondering if before the gentleman moved the previous question he would accept an amendment that page 1, line 9, be amended to read:

Those Members of the House elected to the Useless Committee.

Would an amendment of this nature be satisfactory to the gentleman? [Laughter.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. I might say to the very useful gentleman from Massachusetts that there has been a suggestion that certain other committees might be consolidated with this committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. I want to congratulate the chairman of the committee on bringing a very important matter into the House. I think, considering the fact we have nothing very important before Congress at the present time, the gentleman has done well to bring this in.

I want to ask the gentleman one question: Is he absolutely sure that the President of the United States is in favor of this change? [Laughter.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have heard that he may have been consulted by wireless—collect and uncensored.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I wanted to know. If he has been consulted, it is perfectly agreeable to us; I wanted to be sure about it, however, before we passed the bill.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. As a matter of fact, has not this committee saved a great deal of money to the United States Government, and is it not held responsible for a great deal of money in the matter of the disposition of papers every year?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes, indeed. This is the committee which has to do with preserving the valuable and historical papers of the Government, papers which finally will go into this very beautiful, ornate building down there, the Archives Building, the building which gave rise to the new title "Archivist", which we learned to properly pronounce for the first time last year. This committee determines which papers shall be disposed of. If they are useless they are sold for waste paper and the money is covered into the United States Treasury. If the papers are valuable as Government documents, they are preserved. This committee has to scrutinize these papers very carefully. Only recently, I understand, some papers were offered for destruction which were original reports only 5 days old, and, of course, should have been preserved for some longer time.

Mr. CONNERY. How much money does the sale of these old papers amount to in a year?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have no idea.

Mr. CONNERY. I have heard it said it was a very great amount of money that is realized from the sale of these papers. This is a saving to the Government.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to use some time?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important matter, and it occurs to me there may be danger in adopting the proposed amendment to the rules.

As I understand the history of this committee, it is about as follows: When Grover Cleveland was President, the Congress requested the President to furnish the Congress with certain information. The President replied somewhat brusquely that he found it incompatible with the public interest to furnish Congress with this information; whereupon Congress passed a resolution demanding the production of certain papers which it was believed contained this information. The President replied that those papers, being useless executive papers, had been destroyed; whereupon the Congress passed an act or resolution which prohibited the destruction of useless executive papers until the Congress, through a joint committee or through some other agency under its control, had examined those papers to see whether they were truly useless or not. So the practice is now that when the waste barrels are filled with useless executive papers from the various departments, before they are carted out and disposed of a committee of Congress rummages through them to see whether they are all useless or not; hence the present title of the committee, Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers, is descriptive exactly of the functions of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, suppose you leave out the word "useless", what would be the result? It will be a committee presumably authorized by Congress to dispose of executive papers, whether they are useless or not. Now, it would be a pretty how-do-you-do if the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers, without any limitation as to the kind of executive papers, should go to the State Department and begin to dispose of various treaties that were in force and other documents like that.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat constrained to oppose the amendment striking that significant and descriptive word "useless" out of the title of the committee because of the great danger to the violation of the separate functions and the independence of the executive from the legislative, and, of course, from the judiciary, that this might entail. Does not the gentleman from New York on reflection think this matter ought to be studied with a great deal more exhaustiveness?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I may say to the gentleman from New Jersey that we have given this important matter a great deal of consideration and deliberation. The gentleman is unduly alarmed because the gentleman realizes that what we do only goes to the veneer. We change the title, but the jurisdictional matter contained in the rule still provides that the committee has jurisdiction only of disposing of useless executive papers.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I noticed that in the amendment to clause 11, section 44, the qualifying word "useless" is retained.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman will admit that that is a very valuable word at times?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Surely, particularly when one has to describe certain colleagues, and so forth. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, with the assurance that the gentleman from New York gives me, and particularly as he has called my attention to the fact the word "useless" is to be retained in that part of the rule which describes the function of this committee, I shall not move to recommit this resolution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with the members of this committee. I can well realize the handicap under which they are working. There are many bureaus of the present administration engaged in destroying useful things, such as cotton, cattle, hogs, and so forth. So I do not blame the committee members for resenting that they should be restricted to the destruction of useless things. I believe there should be full harmony and all should be given an equal opportunity. Why not the destruction of useful books and papers as well as commodities? I am not going to oppose the resolution, because I have profound sympathy for the committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I make the "useless" motion ordering the previous question.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a bill which I have introduced in Congress, together with a table explaining it and showing its various benefits.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, on March 4 I introduced House bill 6370, a copy of which is as follows:

A bill to establish a permanent policy of financial cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories in promotion of the benefits of public education, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the several States and Territories are entitled to the establishment of a permanent policy of Federal financial assistance in the maintenance, operation, and improvement of their public schools of less than college grade, and it is the intention of Congress by the passage of this act to declare the establishment of such a policy.

SEC. 2. (a) Funds provided by the operation of this act shall be apportioned annually by the United States Commissioner of Education to the several States and Territories on a basis of $2 per annum for each person 6 to 17 years of age, inclusive, as shown by the most recent Federal census.

(b) In addition to the $2 per annum apportionment for each person 6 to 17 years of age, inclusive, as provided in subsection (a) of section 2 of this act, there is hereby created an equalization fund which shall be apportioned annually by the United States Commissioner of Education to the several States and Territories on the following basis: (1) The educational needs of the respective States as shown by sparsity of population, and by the application of appropriate standards for the maintenance and further improvement of the systems of public education in the respective States; and (2) the economic ability of the respective States as indicated by the ratio of adults to children and by appropriate measures of the financial resources of the respective States and Territories.

(c) For the execution of the provisions of this act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000,000.

SEC. 3. The disbursement of all sums now and hereafter made available to carry out the provisions of this act shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to the treasurers of the several States and Territories upon requisition of the United States Commissioner of Education. The funds so paid to any State or Territory shall be paid out of the State or Territorial treasury upon requisition of the chief administrative officer in charge of education in the particular State or Territory.

SEC. 4. The treasurer and the chief administrative officer in charge of education in each State or Territory receiving funds under the provisions of this act shall make reports to the Commissioner of Education as often as he may require, showing the disposition of the funds theretofore paid to them under the provisions of this act. The United States Commissioner of Education shall make an annual report to Congress showing the disposition of said funds now and hereafter made available under this act, together with such other information as may be considered pertinent to the maintenance of the policy herein declared.

SEC. 5. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, such sum as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. Nothing in this act shall be construed to empower any Federal officer to interfere with or in any way control the instruction in or the administration of education in any State or Territory.

SEC. 7. This act may be cited as "the Education Act of 1935."

Mr. Speaker, I subscribe to the unquestioned principle that free public instruction should be one of the major objects of government. I take this position because I know that popular education is the basis of freedom and justice, in that it offers the fullest opportunity for every person to rise in the world in keeping with democratic ideals. It causes a people to think clearly, distinctly, firmly, and sympathetically, and to act charitably. It means the development of sturdy, self-reliant citizenry, in which character, as well as knowledge is at a premium.

I wonder if many of us recall the words spoken by Thomas Jefferson when he said:

I do most anxiously wish to see education given to all, so that they may read and understand what is going on in the world and keep their part of it going right.

These words were spoken in the early days of our Republic by the most famous champion of democracy with which the world has ever been blessed. He wrote the Declaration of Independence, founded the University of Virginia, and served 8 years as President of a nation during its hardest days. He knew the real meaning of education, and he understood the meaning of democracy for a democratic people, and above all he realized that education is the true basis of a successful democracy.

Mr. Speaker, in announcing the great truth, which I have just mentioned and which is no less applicable today than then, this defender of liberty and the right of our people to the pursuit of happiness was but voicing the words of a famous old Roman, spoken almost a hundred years before Christ, now more than 2,000 years ago. Cicero had asked a question which had only one possible answer. His inquiry was, "What greater or better gift can we offer the republic than to teach and instruct our youth?"

The real importance of education is well proven by the fact that the schoolhouse and the church have always been the two earliest and most fundamental enterprises in the development of our country.

No one doubts the advisability of Government provision for free public schools. The best methods for their operation have been scientifically determined by experts, and there is a large number of available well-trained teachers. The only impediment, and that is a serious one, is the lack of sufficient financial support for the schools in thousands of communities in many States of the Union. This is the difficulty that so dangerously threatens our educational structure as to make its present benefits and future operation matters of doubt and speculation. We have the statesmanship in this country, and we have sufficient funds, to solve this problem and remove this menace. The children, the teachers, and the parents in many homes scattered over the broad area of the United States are wondering if those who represent them in the councils of the Nation will perform their duty and eliminate this dread danger. What they want, and what they should have, is a sound permanent program that will insure the future security of public education. They are entitled to it, and those who are intrusted with the direction of this Government should grant it as speedily as possible.

In our country and in these troubled times no one should be called "statesman" who is not willing to work with the needs of our school children at heart.

Mr. Speaker, you will notice that the bill which I have introduced authorizes an appropriation of $100,000,000 for Federal aid for the year ending June 30, 1936. This sum is to provide for the needs growing out of the well-recognized existing situation which obtains in the public schools of our country. There is also a clause providing that beginning with June 30, 1937, such sums shall be appropriated as will be necessary for the continuation of the permanent policy established by the bill.

It is provided by the bill that the annual Budget, as a matter of law, will carry a yearly appropriation for school needs. This money will be disbursed to the heads of the departments of education in the several States by the order of the United States Commissioner of Education. The head of the department of education in each State will then have control of the expenditure of the money in that State. The establishment of a permanent policy to be operated in this manner will eliminate the necessity of constantly appealing to Federal relief agencies for help. It will put an end to the uncertainty that is now the common characteristic of Federal aid.

The method of alloting the Federal funds may be a question in the minds of some, but the proposed legislation requires that each State shall receive an allotment of $2 per year for every person within its borders whose age is between 6 and 17 years, as shown by the most recent Federal census. At the last census there were a few over 29,000,000 of these children, thus indicating that the $2 allotment will cost a little over $58,000,000. The remainder of the appropriation, in excess of fifty-eight million, will be used as an equalization fund and will be apportioned annually by the United States Commissioner of Education to the States on the basis of educational need as shown by the sparsity of population, and by the application of appropriate standards for the maintenance and further improvement of the existing public-school systems in that State. The other required standard will be the economic ability of the respective States as indicated by the ratio of adults to children and by appropriate measures of financial resources of the respective States and Territories. This equalization fund is to guarantee that the educable children in poor States will not be penalized by being forced to grow up without the proper education to which they are entitled. The standards set for the expenditure of this money are equitably prepared with this one view in mind: Where help is the most needed, increase the amount of the assistance. There can be no question that this will be a practical plan, as well as one that will bring justice to all concerned.

There have been attacks on the idea of Federal aid by those who profess a fear that the Federal Government would control our educational system if aid were extended. This fear should be allayed by the following provision of the bill I have introduced:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed to empower any Federal officer to interfere with or in any way control the instruction in or the administration of education in any State or territory.

The bill also specifies that the expenditure of the funds is to be left entirely with the State departments to be used as they see fit. In the third place, we must remember that the whole proposition is under the legislative control of Congress, and Congress is answerable to the people. That in itself would be a sufficient guaranty against Federal usurpation, even if all the other safeguards had not already been erected. Attacks on Federal control are attempts to becloud the issue and defeat the real merit of the proposition. There will be no Federal control. Education will remain primarily a State function, but some needed help will come from the Federal Government.

My friends, Federal aid should be provided as a permanent policy because many sections of the country are very poor while others are very rich. Wealth has flown into the rich centers from the poor ones. From the rich centers some of this money finds its way into the Treasury of the United States. It is only fair that part of the taxes realized from this wealth should go back to the States from which it originated. This principle is applied to Federal aid for roads and other items that formerly were restricted entirely to State maintenance. I believe it is sound governmental policy to build dams and drain rivers, as well as build roads in the States, but I also believe in the application of the same policy to education, so far as it is actually needed.

I believe this because I know that good roads and other improved transportation facilities have almost erased State boundary lines. Our people have a right to look to Washington for help because they are citizens of the United States as well as of the State in which they reside. The responsibility for public education does not end with the State, and the Federal Government cannot escape its obligation. The Nation as a whole has the responsibility for guaranteeing educational facilities that will train its young people to assume the complex responsibilities of citizenship. In this connection let me remind you that every year the Federal Government spends large sums of money for the apprehension and punishment of criminals. This is a wise expenditure for the protection of organized society, but real education is a well-known weapon in the prevention of criminality. It is my contention, with which I believe all will agree, that we had better provide teachers and schoolrooms for the boy instead of wardens, cells, and scaffolds.

The majority agree that the Federal Government is under the duty of providing some assistance for the social security of everyone in this country. This being true, I would remind them that the best type of social security ever devised was a sound system of education of the masses.

The States have been struggling very hard to carry the whole burden of education. Some measure of success was attained by weighing down the people with high taxes. The severity of the depression has in many cases prevented the paying of any local taxes. In the face of these conditions, the Federal Government has usurped practically the entire field of taxation. This usurpation has made it even more difficult for the States to obtain sufficient revenues for any purpose, thus making Federal assistance more imperative and just.

Another reason for the present distress is the declining inadequacy of the real-estate tax, one of the main sources of State revenue. Formerly, when we were an agrarian Nation, the tax was probably an equitable one. Now that more than half our people live in cities, and the major portion of our wealth is industrial, property owners should not be made to bear the entire burden. In many of our States the property tax is the only source of revenue. It is so completely overworked that it is absolutely an impossibility to obtain additional funds. No State can rise any higher than its maximum source of revenue, hence the imperative need for outside assistance. The educational system must be improved and maintained, but the increase of local taxes is out of the question.

Only 1 income dollar out of every 33 in this country goes to education. The Federal Government can well afford to extend help as a permanent policy. The school teachers who have been giving their time and services for inadequate pay, or no pay at all, should have the benefit of Federal assistance. The men who have furnished their own capital to supply school busses, and then operated them, should be given adequate pay, and they should not have to wait for it. Paying the school teachers and the bus drivers would be a fine investment for any money.

Mr. Speaker, education was once considered a parental responsibility. This responsibility was in turn assumed by the church, by the locality, and then by the State. There is nothing to prevent the assumption by the United States Government of its just share of this great enterprise. It is no new idea that decrees that this should be done. It cannot be denied that over a century ago the first five Presidents of the United States advocated Federal aid for education. They realized that the foundation of every nation is the education of its youth. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the following table will show the estimated approximate benefits that will go to the schools in each State of the Union if $100,000,000 is appropriated:
